by which such a voter may compel the election judges to recognize his constitutional right and accept his vote. It is a section of the law that does not pretend to confer a right or to impose a duty upon the voter, but which imposes a duty upon the election inspectors. What duty? Why, the duty of preparing for such a voter his ballot if he makes the oath. He is not required, however, to even make the oath. Let me read the law, and I will try to read it so that gentlemen can catch the point:

When any elector shall make oath that he can not read English, or that, because of physical disability, he can not cast his ballot, or when such disability shall be made manifest to said inspectors——

[Applause.]

Mr. MOODY. Is the gentleman reading from the Illinois statute?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I am reading from the Illinois statute.

Mr. MOODY. Is the gentleman quite sure?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Quite sure.

Mr. BRUMM. I was going to say that if the gentleman was reading from the Illinois statute, it is different from what is found in the minority report as that statute.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman from Illinois is certainly mistaken as to the statute.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Well, I will read it now from the statute book. I took it for granted that you had copied it correctly in your report. I have been reading it from the minority report, taking for granted that they had copied it correctly.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman has been reading the statute of another State.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Very well. I was depending on you. I confess I ought not to have done it, but I did.

Mr. MOODY. I suggest to the gentleman that if he has only just now found out the statute of his State he can not very well instruct the House about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, I am not seeking to instruct. That is within the province of the gentleman from Massachusetts entirely. [Laughter.] I read now from the statutes of Illinois. I will not depend upon your minority report any further.

Any voter who may declare upon oath—

Not that he must, but that he may—

Any voter who may declare upon oath that he can not read the English language, or that by reason of any physical disability he is unable to mark his ballot, shall, upon request, be assisted in marking his ballot by two of the election officers of different political parties, to be selected from the judges and clerks of the precinct in which they are to act, to be designated by the judges of election of each precinct at the opening of the poll. Said officers shall mark the ballot as directed by the voter and shall thereafter give no information regarding the same.

Mr. BRUMM. So you were evidently wrong when you read the statute a while ago.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, sir; I was not wrong.

Mr. MOODY. Why, the gentleman was wrong. He was reading from the statute of another State.

Mr. CONNOLLY. My dear sir, the wrong, I confess, was in depending on your report for the law of Illinois.

Mr. BRUMM. What you have read now is entirely different from what you read a while ago.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have read the facts. Does the gentleman understand?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir; but I want to know whether this does not differ from what you read awhile ago.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I do not yield any further; I can not.

Mr. BRUMM. Then you refuse to answer my question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Why, in the name of common sense, do you want an answer when you say you understand now?

Mr. BRUMM. Your present statement differs from your former statement.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I made no statement. I read the law.

Now, gentlemen will see this statute imposes no new duty upon the voter. A man who can not see has under the constitution of the State of Illinois a right to vote just as much as the man who can see. The legislature would not undertake to say that a man who can not see shall not vote unless he does a particular thing in the way of taking an oath that nobody else is required to take, because a law of that kind would be unconstitutional under a constitution which says that every man of 21 years of age, resident in the State twelve months, shall be a legal voter and entitled to have his vote counted.

Now, if the legislature had said that men 21 years of age who have lived in the State a year and who are blind or lame or illiterate shall not vote unless they make a preliminary oath, while other men may vote without the preliminary oath, do you not see that there would be a test placed upon the blind voter or the lame voter or the illiterate voter which would exclude him from his constitutional right to cast his ballot? All that this section does is to impose a burden, a new duty, upon the judges of election with reference to the blind man or the illiterate man different from the duty which the statute imposes with reference to men who can read and write or who can see. The statute provides that if such a man makes an oath it shall be the duty of two of these inspectors to prepare his ballot for him in the booth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MOODY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois now on the floor occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hour and fifty-six minutes. The Chair assumed that the gentleman was entitled to only one hour, but did not call him down at the end of that time because——

Mr. CONNOLLY. How can I be taken off the floor by an inquiry as to how much time I have occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts addressed to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry, which was entirely proper, and the occupant of the chair was attempting to answer it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The question has been answered—one hour and fifty-six minutes; and that ends the matter, I presume.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not end it, if the gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order——

Mr. MOODY. I make the point of order that we on this side are now entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman makes the point of order that the time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired, the Chair will so hold. He was about to state why he so held; but if the gentleman from Illinois does not care to hear the reason he need not. The Chair holds that the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Yesterday I asked for an agreement fixing the amount of time on both sides. Objection came from the other side, the effect of which, as I understand, was practically to allow us to continue this debate to an unlimited extent. For that reason, it seems to me, the time is unlimited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair fails to find from the RECORD that there was an absolute agreement as to unlimited time. There was simply an agreement not to fix any time, but to allow the time occupied to be controlled on the one side by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] and on the other side by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. Under the circumstances, the time occupied by any particular member would be governed by the rules of the House; and the gentleman from Illinois could have been granted but one hour. He has exceeded that time; therefore his time has expired, and he can not proceed now unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Under the agreement each side would be entitled to an equal amount of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Most certainly.

Mr. MOODY. How much time are we entitled to on this side to make up for what the gentleman from Illinois has occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hours and nineteen minutes more have been consumed or disposed of by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] than by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Then I ask that the vote be taken at a quarter past 5 o'clock to-day, and that this side control the remainder of the time. We will waive the difference if that be assented to.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I object to being taken off the floor in this way.

Mr. GRAFF. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. At the time that the gentleman who now has the floor, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY], rose to speak did not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] who controls the time say that he would grant him whatever time he desired, and was there, therefore, any limit upon the time? Did not that give to the gentleman now occupying the floor such time as he might see fit to occupy?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It gives to him such time only as he could be given under the rules of the House, and that is sixty minutes.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. But when there is no limit to the time of debate, Mr. Speaker, is a member who occupies the floor limited in that manner?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unlimited time was not granted; and there being no limit fixed for the debate, it is covered, of course, by the rules of the House.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But, if the Chair will permit me, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] was given absolute control of the time on his side, and yielded such time as the gentleman from Illinois desired to use.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He was given the control of the time, but the time was not limited. The gentleman simply controlled such time as was given pending an agreement as to a limitation of the time. Now, when he yields time to another member, under the rules of the House he can yield but sixty minutes, excepting by unanimous consent of the House. Therefore the gentleman from Illinois is no longer entitled to the floor.

The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the vote be fixed at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes today, and that the remainder of the time between now and that hour shall be given to that side of the question. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPKINS. I object.

Mr. HULICK. How much time would that give the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. About one hour and thirty minutes less than the time occupied on the other side of the question.

Mr. HULICK. But there has been no consent. How can we, under the rules of the House, give to him time that is not given by the rules of the House, according to the decision of the Chair just now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULICK. Then there will be no unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio objects, of course that ends the proposition.

Mr. HULICK. I understand that under the rules of the House only one hour could be given. Now, the gentleman claims more than that time; and under the decision of the Chair it is to be accorded to him?

(The Speaker here resumed the chair.)

The SPEAKER. Whenever the time is under the control of two gentlemen on opposite sides of the question, it is always understood that it is under such control subject to the rules of the House, and the rules of the House limit any member to sixty minutes unless by unanimous consent it is changed.

In the proposition which the Chair heard, allowing a half hour or more of debate, if the House saw fit to agree it would be adopted; if not it is for the House to say when the debate shall close.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois have ten minutes to close his remarks.

Several members objected. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. If the previous question is ordered (and that would not make up enough time to this side to equalize what has been consumed on the other side), would I be permitted to control the remaining time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would control the remaining time with the agreement heretofore made, subject, of course, to the rules of the House.

Mr. MOODY. Then I move that the previous question be considered as ordered at a quarter past 5 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order against that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make that motion. It can only be done by consent of the House. If the gentleman is desirous of submitting the request for unanimous consent, the Chair will put it to the House.

Mr. MOODY. I do not desire to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Massachusetts should use thirty minutes of the time, whether he could not, at the end of that time, if he saw fit, move the previous question?

Mr. CANNON. He has not charge of the measure.

Mr. McMILLIN. That does not matter——

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, in the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] who has just taken his seat is found the remarkable instance of a person going beyond the testimony which has been presented to the committee for the purpose of giving his views upon the case. There has been an element in that speech, it seems to me, that ought to meet with the disapproval of every member of this House. When he attempted to bring into this case the question of party and, in the manner he did, to refer to Mugwumps working or voting against the majority report, I submit it is not a proper spirit in which to discuss the important legal questions in a contested-election case before the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

I submit, sir, that the accusations that have been made in this case, accusations as to fraud, which it is claimed had been committed on the part of Mr. Downing, the sitting member, have no foundation from anything that appears in the record of this case. It is not shown that any fraud exists. Those who make them fail at the same time to give any weight whatever to his explanation. They fail to give him credit for any honest intentions in the matter. He says he instituted this suit for the purpose of testing the construction of the statute as to whether a notary public has the power to compel the production of ballots; and when we find, after he gets to a tribunal of his own State, that his views are adopted by that State, I ask where is there any fairness in declaring that there is fraud or conspiracy in getting out that injunction?

Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the whole argument of the gentleman has been to mystify this case. It has been for the purpose of leading the House from the true issue in the case. We find that gentlemen have been talking about the fraud, about the iniquity there was in suing out a writ of injunction, the iniquity in appealing to the courts for the construction of a statute, and they have labored upon that to keep the minds of members of this House from examining into the true merits of the case.

Mr. Speaker, suppose everything they claim were true. Suppose that in every way they have indicated they are correct. How does it leave the situation of these parties? If that injunction suit had even been brought willfully to gain time, what is the legal effect? What is the situation of the parties? It simply permits the introduction of secondary evidence, and that is all. Secondary evidence is permitted to establish what the ballots show in Macoupin County. That is the question. What is that secondary evidence? It is the evidence of a man who, in a contest between the candidates for county treasurer in that county, during a count of the ballots to determine that question, made some sort of a count of the vote for Congressman. That is the man on whose testimony they rely for the purpose of overturning the solemn, sworn statements of the parties who were judges of election. On man sat behind the county clerk and by his pencil marks attempted to count the votes that had been received for Congressmen, Mr. Downing, the sitting member, and General Rinaker, the contestant. He was not there during all of the counting of those ballots. He was simply there while 25 precincts were being counted. We find that when he testified in this case his tally showed a difference of 22 votes in favor of General Rinaker and 13 votes against Mr. Downing, the sitting member, and the result was that those two sums added together make 35 votes, which is more than the majority given by the report of the committee to General Rinaker, and hence decides the question in this case.

Now, then, the question is simply, what does all this talk about the injunction suit amount to? It amounts to laying the foundation for the introduction of secondary testimony only, and that secondary testimony is the evidence of one man, an unsworn person, a member of the same political party as General Rinaker, a man who evidently felt a deep interest in General Rinaker. He was not sworn, his count was not an official count, and it is by this evidence that it is sought to override the official returns made by the officers.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Was this man who made the count of the Congressional vote placed there by any authority in the world?

Mr. SHAFROTH. None whatever.

Mr. COX. Who put him there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. He was representing General Rinaker.

Mr. COX. Did General Rinaker put him there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether he did or not, but the evidence showed that he was representing General Rinaker.

Mr. COX. He was not employed as an officer of the State at all?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.

Mr. LACEY. The evidence showed that he was employed by Thomas Rinaker, a son of General Rinaker.

Mr. COX. He was not a State officer at all?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir.

Mr. COX. He was not under oath?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not at all.

Mr. COX. That is a curious kind of man to make a count of that sort.

Mr. HULICK. When the result of Murphy's count was known to be favorable to General Rinaker, then it was that this injunction proceeding was begun and the counting of the ballot closed against General Rinaker.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that the injunction was sued out first.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HULICK. I should like to know that fact.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether it was or not. It is immaterial.

A MEMBER. It is very material.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. My time is nearly up.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is right on that point.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is our duty between these two parties? I care not what the result of the injunction suit is. I care not how it locks up the ballot. I care not in what situation it would place the contestant, so long as it preserved the ballots, and we have the right to look at them now.

Now, what is the situation if those ballots are not opened? We have upon the one side a conflict of testimony. This secondary evidence is admissible to show what? To show that this man Murphy examined the count for candidates for Congress, and found by his count a discrepancy. Now, that is the situation, and that is all the evidence upon that side. Mr. Downing, by reason of the injunction suit, can not be deprived of the fact that he holds the certificate of election, can not be deprived of the fact that there were five sworn officers in each precinct, that they in an official capacity passed upon these votes. It then becomes a question of the preponderance of evidence.

Upon one side we have what? Simply one man, unsworn, not an official at all, who had no legal right to examine the ballots, making a count over the shoulder of another man. Now, what do we find in the testimony, and ample testimony, on the other side? We find that every one of these precinct returns was read and examined by five men. We find that in each of the election precincts there were watchers trying to find whether there was any illegal voting. Again, we find that the judges represented the different political parties and the greatest watchfulness was evinced upon each side to determine whether or not there was a single vote that was illegally cast or counted. Then we find that the clerks of the election were of different political parties, every one of them straining every nerve to see that there was no fraudulent vote cast; and notwithstanding these were sworn men; notwithstanding the fact that they were in the performance of their official duty; notwithstanding the fact that they were there to see that no frauds were committed, you are asked by the majority report in this case to set aside their testimony and to say that this was an illegal count, simply on what one man says, and he unsworn, and in the interest of the party who is the contestant in this case.

Mr. Speaker, if we are prepared to do that, it seems to me that there is no Representative in this House whose seat is safe. We are not asking that Mr. Downing be seated. That is not the question that is before this House by the report made by the minority of the committee. That is not what they are claiming. They are claiming that the votes in the precincts in which it is claimed mistakes in the count have been made, namely, the votes in Macoupin County, be recounted. We have the evidence of the county clerk, made at that time, and also made in an affidavit on the 24th day of last April, that these ballots are intact; that by agreement these ballots were placed in two trunks, and the trunks locked; that seals were put upon the locks; that the name of the county clerk was written upon the seals; that the keys were inclosed in an envelope, and sealed and placed in the vault of the county. When we take into consideration the fact that the county clerk himself is of the same political party as General Rinaker, what excuse is there on earth for denying justice to the sitting member? What excuse is there for refusing to find out the truth?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is simply saying we are afraid to open the ballots for fear they do not show enough votes for General Rinaker to elect him.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Was not the application for an injunction a clear indication that they were afraid on their side of having the ballots opened and counted?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not care whether it was or not. I do not know. It does not make any difference whether it is so or not. You can not elect or unseat a man upon mere fear or suspicion. The bringing of the injunction suit does not prove anything. It simply permits the introduction of secondary evidence, and that is all; and then when you produce that evidence, I submit that there is no member of this House that would want his seat even contested by such testimony as that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise at this time to enter into any lengthy discussion of this case. I rise simply for the purpose of explaining to the House the reasons why I can not assent to the conclusions reached by the majority of the committee.

This Congressional district in question was composed of 160 election precincts. At each of those 160 election precincts there were election officers duly chosen in accordance with the law, representatives of both parties. Those 160 election precincts, through the medium of their election officers, made returns—sworn returns; and there is no allegation of any fraud upon the part of a single election officer in all these 160 districts. The sitting member comes here, therefore, with the commission that the law gives him as the result of those election returns, and they are absolutely conclusive and binding until they are overturned by competent evidence.

Have they been so overturned? It is alleged that some time after the election returns were made and the certificate issued a contest arose in a certain county between the Republican and the Democratic candidates for treasurer, and in that contest the ballots were counted. They were counted by officers appointed by law for that purpose, acting under the sanction of an oath, and following the mode of procedure pointed out by the law. At the instance of the contestant, in the interest of the contestant, presumably in the hire of the contestant, a party who, in my judgment, had no business in that room where the ballots were being counted sat behind one of the parties engaged in that count, and as the ballots were passed speedily along, at the rate of from 6 to 16 a minute, made a tally of the Congressional vote. He did that in 25 out of 160 election districts. The proposition here now is that the sworn returns of the legally elected and sworn election officers in the 160 election districts shall be overturned and the title to a seat in this House settled upon the testimony of that hired counter, who counted in this method in these 25 out of the 160 election precincts. That is the question before this House and nothing can obscure it. Now, then, our friends upon the other side will admit, I think, that up to this point, if there were nothing more in the case, the contestant would have no case. I assume that they would concede that. In other words, they would concede that in the absence of something not yet disclosed the testimony of Murphy is insufficient to change the result.

Now, how do they justify the admission of Murphy's testimony? Upon what basis do they give it the weight that enables it to overturn the regular election returns? Upon this basis; the law of Illinois contains this provision:

> In all cases of contested elections the parties contesting the same shall have the right to have the package of ballots cast at such election opened, and to have all errors of the judges in counting or refusing to count any ballot corrected by the court or body trying such contest; but such ballots shall be opened only in open court, or in open session of such body, and in the presence of the officer having the custody thereof. (Election laws of Illinois, 1894, compiled, article 12, section 31, page 46.)

Undoubtedly taking that provision upon the statute book of his own State as a guide for his conduct, the contestee went into a circuit court in Illinois and asked that these ballots be not counted elsewhere than where the statute provided they might be counted, to wit, in open court, and procured an injunction against their being counted anywhere save in a court of competent jurisdiction of the State of Illinois, in a Federal court, or in Congress subsequent to its meeting.

Now, I care nothing about the motive of the contestee in procuring that injunction. It can not in any wise affect the legal result or the legal status of the case as it now stands. I put that consideration, therefore, aside altogether. I care not whether it was a good motive or a bad motive. The question is, Did his procuring of that injunction justify the admission of Murphy's testimony? That is the question to which I now address myself. You can introduce secondary evidence when, after due diligence, the primary evidence has been put beyond the jurisdiction of the court. But those two elements must concur. There must be due diligence to secure the primary evidence, and that evidence must have been put beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Neither of those prerequisites is found in this case.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania state to this House any court where those ballots could have been legally counted for Rinaker and Downing?

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman evidently misapprehends the trend of my argument, and it is not necessary that I should answer that question, but I will answer it in a few moments if he desires an answer. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that neither of the necessary prerequisites required by the rule exists in this case. In the first place, there was no due diligence. What was the situation of the case? The contestee as plaintiff and the various county clerks as defendants were parties to an equity proceeding. The contestant was no party to that proceeding, but the interest of the contestant was the subject-matter of that proceeding, and the doors of that court were open to him. He could have gone into the court, and it was his duty to have gone into the court, and stated that he was a party in interest; that he prayed to be made a party to the proceeding, and moved to dissolve the injunction. Or failing that—and upon this point I do not care to take up much time, because I have not much to spare—failing that, moved to have had the ballots counted.

Mr. HOPKINS. When could he have had the ballots counted under that proceeding? He could not have had them counted until you would be a gray-headed old man.

Mr. DALZELL. It is not material to the case whether he could have had the ballots counted or not. He did not do what he ought to have done.

Mr. HOPKINS. I take issue with you there. I think he did.

Mr. DALZELL. I decline to be interrupted further, especially by the gentleman who has interrupted everybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I have never done it without making a point. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I say, Mr. Speaker, the first prerequisite is wanting—due diligence. The second prerequisite is also wanting in this case, because the primary evidence was not put beyond the jurisdiction of the court. It was impossible for that court to make an order, if it had attempted to do it, to put those ballots beyond the reach of this Congress. Gentlemen say that the evidence could not be produced within the forty days or the fifty days or ninety days. There is no time binding on this House. There are no rules for the conduct of contested election proceedings that are binding on this House. The source of its authority, the limit of its power, the charter for its exercise, is found in the Constitution of the United States, which makes the House the sole and exclusive judge, according to its own methods, according to the methods of each Congress for itself, as to the election and qualifications of its own members. Those ballots have never been beyond the reach of this House, and they are by this very injunction preserved in their integrity to answer the purpose recommended by the minority of the committee, to wit, an examination by this court of last resort to determine the truth as between the parties.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY. I yield the gentleman ten minutes more, or whatever further time he desires.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I go a step further. The injunction could by no possibility do the contestant any harm, because he was not entitled to a recount unless he acquired that right by a statute of the State of Illinois. The laws of Congress authorize no recount. There is no law anywhere that authorizes the party taking testimony in a contested election case to have a recount of the ballots. The gentlemen who refer to the case of Greevy vs. Scull misapprehend the scope and purpose of that case. It did not decide that there could be a recount before the notary. The contestant therefore lost nothing if he was not entitled to a recount. If, on the other hand, he was entitled to a recount, he became entitled thereto by the provisions that are found upon the statute book of Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman hold that under the Federal statute it was out of the power of the contestant to examine the county clerk who had the ballots in his custody, and to take evidence touching the ballots themselves, and if necessary, as part of that evidence, to take complete copies of the ballots?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not. There is a vast difference between that and a recount.

Mr. CANNON. That, as I understand (and if I am in error I want to be corrected), is just exactly what the contestant sought to do by the subpœna duces tecum.

Mr. DALZELL. To have a recount?

Mr. CANNON. No; to examine touching those ballots and to take evidence so as to obtain copies of them and spread the results in the record for the consideration of the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well; he was prevented for the time being from doing that by the course which was taken.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. DALZELL. But the ballots were not taken out of the jurisdiction of the court; they do not, therefore, come within the rule which allows the admission of secondary evidence.

Mr. CANNON. I only interrupted the gentleman to say that it was not a recount, but the taking of the evidence originally, that was sought to be accomplished by the contestant.

Mr. DALZELL. I submit, then, that no harm could come to the contestant, because he was not entitled to a recount unless pursuant to the provisions of the statute of Illinois. If he was entitled to a recount pursuant to the provisions of that statute and desired to have it, he could only have it in accordance with the terms of the statute; and that recourse was open to him at all times.

But aside from this altogether—aside from the proposition that he was not entitled to a recount generally—he was not entitled to a recount on the pleadings in this case. You can not, without some averment with respect to particular ballot boxes, have a recount in any case except a case where there has been discovery of such general fraud as makes the election void unless the truth can be ascertained by going to the ballot boxes. There is no allegation in the petition in this case; there is no possible ground in the pleadings in this case to justify a recount. Why, sir, I need hardly say to a body made up largely of lawyers that no man upon even a general allegation of fraud, which we have not in this case, could have a recount as an experiment, so as to set off ballot box against ballot box, or ballot box on the one side and judicial findings on the other. An election contest is not an experimental investigation; it is a trial of specific charges; and what is complained of in this case is that the contestant is prevented from going to the ballot boxes of the 160 precincts in that Congressional district to find out whether or not he had not something rightly to complain of.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if my argument thus far has proceeded upon a proper basis this evidence was incompetent. But let us concede that it was competent. I want you gentlemen to face the proposition you are asked to sustain. Suppose, for example, that there were no ballots in existence at all, and the only evidence in the case was on one side the sworn returns of the election officers and on the other Murphy's testimony. I want you to answer the question to your consciences, Could you unseat the contestee and seat the contestant on such evidence?

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that on my own behalf?

Mr. DALZELL. The question was rhetorical. The gentleman can answer it by his vote. I am not anxious to have the gentleman's answer. He has already indicated how he is going to vote, and I do not expect to make a convert of him. I ask you now—and I do not care to prolong the discussion—to consider seriously this proposition: Will you set aside the unimpeached returns of 160 election precincts upon the testimony of Murphy who counted in the manner indicated by the testimony in 25 out of the 160? That is the question; that is the only question. And I want to say to you before I take my seat that the decision of a Republican Congress made by votes cast upon the ground that the contestant is a friend of this party or a friend of that party, or that the contestee is a Democratic newspaper editor—the decision of a Republican Congress made upon such grounds will be a disgrace to a Republican Congress. [Applause.] A decision made upon any ground except in consonance with the facts as presented upon the record and the law applicable thereto will be lacking in glory and will be an infamous one. [Applause.]

Mr. COOKE of Illinois rose.

Mr. MOODY. I believe I have the floor. I would like, before yielding the floor, to inquire of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE], whether he will consent to the previous question being now ordered?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. After the objection which was made to limiting the time, and so long as we are entitled to close the debate, and so long as we have been unable to come to any agreement as to the time at any moment during the progress of the debate, I can not consent.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, there are many gentlemen who wish to speak on this side of the question; but the universal demand that comes to me to allow the House to decide whether or not it will close this debate now, compels me, without any wish upon the subject one way or the other, to ask the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me one word before he does that?

Mr. MOODY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Only a word.

Mr. MOODY. Does the gentleman desire a word with the House or with me?

Mr. CANNON. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Three or four of my colleagues, and colleagues of the contestant, would be very glad to have five or ten minutes for the purpose of discussing the law and the facts in connection with this matter as they appear in the record. Therefore I want to appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts, in all fairness and fair play, not to move the previous question (which seems to me substantially out of order), and not to seek to take the control of the matter from the member who has under the rules and practice control of it. I would suggest to the gentleman that we adjourn now, or let the debate run fifteen or twenty minutes further. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Oh, gentlemen, our man has waited a year for his seat. You can certainly wait and let the case be properly presented.

Mr. MOODY. It is insisted here, Mr. Speaker, that the time belonging to the other side of the House, and much more than that time, has been already occupied. If I yielded to my own wishes I should say let the debate go on. But the House can do as they see fit in the matter. I have no wish about it one way or the other. Our desire is, if possible, to take a vote to-night, and while it puts me in a very painful position, indeed, to be in opposition to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, unless the House otherwise prefers I shall have to insist upon the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, in pursuance of the almost universal practice of the House it has been accorded to the gentleman in charge of any bill or resolution before the House to close the debate and move the previous question. I would suggest to the gentleman that the ordinary practice had better not be deviated from in this case.

Mr. MOODY. That is an appeal which, of course, I can not deny to the distinguished gentleman from Maine, but I would like to ask the gentleman if his appeal would be satisfied if we would allow, say, ten or fifteen minutes, to the other side and then take a vote—allowing them to close the debate?

Mr. DINGLEY. I would simply say, of course, if it is the desire of the House to come to a vote, I think that is only proper, although I think the motion should be made by the gentleman in charge of the matter at the conclusion of the argument.

Mr. MOODY. The difficulty is that the motion will not be made. There will be an attempt to adjourn. The House is here, we are all interested in the matter, and we ought to dispose of it. If they will agree to, say, ten or fifteen minutes, and then move the previous question, I have no objection, and I shall be glad to yield for that motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that a number of gentlemen have left the Hall under the impression that there would be no vote to-day.

Several MEMBERS. They ought to be here.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is now half past 5 o'clock, and the vote, if we should go to voting now, would take, say, until 7 this afternoon. Nothing can be lost by allowing the matter to go over and permitting gentlemen to present their views on the law and the facts, and take the vote on another day.

Mr. MOODY. I will yield to the appeal of the gentleman from Maine to the extent that I have already indicated. If gentlemen on the other side will take from our time—for this is our time, as we have occupied nowhere near the amount of time that has been occupied by the other side—if they will take fifteen minutes of our time, and then have the previous question considered as ordered at the end of that time, and agree that a single vote on the substitute of the minority shall be final on the whole case, and nothing more, I will grant consent to that programme.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we will not make, I think, if it requires unanimous consent, that agreement.

Mr. MOODY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a question of order on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. It is not in order for the gentleman from Massachusetts to move the previous question, for the reason that, while the rule may be silent on the subject in that respect, yet it is the practice of the House, an unbroken practice, so far as I know, for years, that the gentleman in charge of the bill or measure should be, as he has been always, recognized at the close of the debate to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember any case where the right to move the previous question has been refused to a member. The remedy seems to be very simple. If the House does not desire the previous question ordered, it can vote the motion down. The gentleman in charge of the bill was recognized originally and was in charge of it. He has not seen fit to move the previous question, but if some one else moves it and the House does not desire to have it ordered it can vote down the motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as a number of gentlemen have gone from the House, supposing there would be no vote on the question to-day——

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois upon the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS. Inasmuch as a number of gentlemen have gone, supposing there would be no vote to-day, and inasmuch as there are a number of gentlemen on the side of the contestant who desire still further to discuss the law and the facts, it seems to me that it would be improper to cut off the discussion in this way——

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, is this a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly thinks that is a point of order. These are considerations addressed to the House as to the propriety of ordering the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. That was simply a premise to my motion, which is that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOODY. I make the point of order that I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will overrule the point and put the question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I will ask the Speaker to first state the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has asked for the previous question. That is the matter pending before the House. Pending that, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LACEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Should we adjourn, what would be the condition of the case to-morrow, or the next time it comes up? Will it then stand upon the motion for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It will stand precisely as it does now.

Mr. LACEY. That is, the motion for the previous question will be pending?

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question will be pending.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS demanded a division, and pending the division demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 96, nays 139, not voting 120; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.
The Clerk announced the following pairs:
Until further notice:
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. SAYERS.
Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana with Mr. BLACK of Georgia.
Mr. MILLER of West Virginia with Mr. WOODARD.
Mr. STEELE with Mr. WASHINGTON.
Mr. MCEWAN with Mr. SULZER.
Mr. WILSON of Idaho with Mr. COWEN.
Mr. HUFF with Mr. MINER of New York.
Mr. MOZLEY with Mr. MOSES.
Mr. FARIS with Mr. SORG.
Mr. MEIKLEJOHN with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.
Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. MADDOX.
Mr. WILLIS with Mr. WILLIAMS.
For this day:
Mr. STEPHENSON with Mr. RUSK.
Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee with Mr. LAWSON.
Mr. LEFEVER with Mr. MAHANY.
Mr. BURRELL with Mr. COCKRELL.
Mr. LOW with Mr. MCCLELLAN.
On this question:
Mr. DOOLITTLE with Mr. MCLACHLAN.
Mr. STRONG with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.
Mr. BLACK of New York with Mr. BARTLETT of New York.
Mr. HENRY of Indiana with Mr. SHAW.
Mr. BENNETT with Mr. OWENS.
Mr. DOVENER with Mr. BROMWELL.
Mr. MILNES with Mr. MEREDITH.
Mr. QUIGG with Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky.
Mr. GROUT with Mr. GRISWOLD.

Mr. MORSE with Mr. BROSIUS.
Mr. SAUERHERING with Mr. ELLETT of Virginia.
Mr. DAYTON with Mr. OGDEN.
Mr. MCCLURE with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I withdraw my vote. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I see that I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. MCLACHLAN. I voted "aye," but I desire now to withdraw my vote for that reason.

Mr. STEELE. I voted "aye." I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. WASHINGTON, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. GROUT. I am reminded that I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRISWOLD, and so withdraw my vote. I voted "aye."

Mr. WILLIS. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS, but this case is specially excepted.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. A parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Pending that motion, would a motion to postpone the further consideration of this contested-election case until Friday be in order?

Mr. LACEY. Would not that be a dilatory motion after the motion just voted upon?

The SPEAKER. The motion would not be in order. The question is on agreeing to the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 145, noes 69.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on this. [Cries of "Oh!"]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 76, not voting 136; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.
The following additional pairs were announced:
On this question:
Mr. HERMANN with Mr. SNOVER.
Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts with Mr. HILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recorded in the negative.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Illinois.

The name of Mr. CANNON was called and he voted "yea."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. MOODY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory, Mr. Speaker. The motion is clearly dilatory, after the House has so clearly expressed its opinion upon this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think I have the right to make this motion. In my judgment—if I may be indulged a moment upon the point of order—I suppose it is proper that I should have just a minute. In my judgment, it is the right, at least at this stage of the proceedings, of any member to move to reconsider the vote. I am aware, sir, that a dilatory motion, and all dilatory motions, are not in order. I am also quite aware that the Speaker is made the judge, in his discretion, as to when a motion becomes dilatory. Having said that, I have said all I care to say; and I say that it seems to me, considering the extraordinary departure from parliamentary usage by the action of the gentleman who moved the previous question, that I have the right to challenge the attention of the House and of the country by this motion upon the merits.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the motion. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 127, noes 63.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on this vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 69, not voting 145; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this question:

Mr BRODERICK with Mr. MILLIKEN.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. SKINNER.

For this day:

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire with Mr. BAKER of Kansas.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a verification of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I submit that that is dilatory.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; that is a matter of right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to have the House convinced on the subject. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. I thank the Chair for his candor.

The vote was recapitulated by the Clerk, and the result was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to make a proposition to the gentleman from Massachusetts, now in charge of this matter. As many gentlemen are gone from the Hall, I suggest that consent be given that the House adjourn, and that the vote be taken to-morrow the first thing after the reading of the Journal. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MOODY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that if that should be done the time would be taken out of that which has been allotted to pensions, and this case may take an hour or two before we get through. I for one would not feel justified in assenting to the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Let the vote be taken Friday morning, then.

Mr. MOODY. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the House has manifested a purpose to take this vote now, and it is the obstructive tactics upon the other side that prevent it.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolutions.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a privileged motion, the motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Speaker has ruled upon that.

Mr. DALZELL. Not upon this motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not ruled upon that, but he will rule. Does the gentleman insist upon his motion?

Mr. HOPKINS. I should not have made it if I did not propose to insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule it in order.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 132.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered, 46 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 133, not voting 162; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. MEYER, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. HULING with Mr. STROWD of North Carolina, for this day.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refuses a recapitulation. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to know why. Is not that a matter of right? Mr. Speaker, I demand it, not as a matter of privilege, but as a matter of right.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair denies it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I should like to know how I am recorded. I want to know how I stand, if I can not know how other members stand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the way I voted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to know how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. LORIMER. My name was called twice, and I do not know whether or not I have been recorded. I should like to know whether I have been recorded or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. NEILL. That is right.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 60, the nays 133. [Applause.] The motion to adjourn is not agreed to. The question is now on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. On that question I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOODY. May the resolution be read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before that is read, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the resolution which the Clerk is now about to read the substitute for the original resolution reported by the majority of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contested election case of John I. Rinaker vs. Finis E. Downing be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 1, with instructions either to recount such part of the vote for Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois as they shall deem fairly in dispute, or to permit the parties to this contest, under such rules as the committee may prescribe, to recount such vote, and to take any action in the premises, by way of resolution or resolutions, to be reported to the House or otherwise, as they may deem necessary and proper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the order of proceeding. If this substitute should be agreed to, a vote will then have to be taken on the resolution of the committee as amended by the adoption of the substitute. Two votes will have to be taken.

Mr. COX. What is the substitute?

The SPEAKER. It has just been read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 35, not voting 176, present and not voting 5; as follows:

PRESENT AND NOT VOTING—5.

Black, Ga.	Meyer,	Sayers,	Woodard.
Cox,

So the substitute was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this question:

Mr. ROYSE with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. WATSON of Indiana.

For the remainder of the day:

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE]. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative on this resolution. I announce myself as present in order to make a quorum, if necessary.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]. If he were present, I should vote "aye." I wish my presence recorded.

Mr. COX. While I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] on this vote, I want to be recorded as present.

Mr. MEYER. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. I wish to be recorded as present.

Mr. WOODARD. I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MILLER]. I have answered "present," and desire to be so recorded.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, can I have a recapitulation of the vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can, because the vote is very close.

The vote was recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. On this question the recorded vote is 139 in the affirmative, 35 in the negative, and present 2. In addition there are present the following gentlemen, 12 in number: Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. PARKER, Mr. LONG, Mr. SAYERS, Mr. WOODARD, Mr. MEYER, Mr. BURTON of Missouri, Mr. BLACK of Georgia, Mr. COX, Mr. COUSINS, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. TRACEY.

A quorum being present, the ayes have it and the substitute resolution is agreed to. [Applause.]

The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOPKINS) there were—ayes 146, noes 21.

Mr. HOPKINS. No quorum.

Mr. MOODY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRETT. The House having voted to recommit this matter with instructions, which, although proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts as an amendment or substitute, was not an amendment or substitute, but simply a parliamentary motion, I ask whether or not it is necessary that a vote should be had on the resolution as amended by this motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. The gentleman from Illinois having failed to vote, and then makes the point of no quorum, is it not a self-evident proposition that it is a dilatory motion? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If it were a motion the Chair would pronounce it dilatory.

The Clerk will proceed with the roll call.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 13, present and not voting 33, not voting 172; as follows:

YEAS—137.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the names of members present and not voting.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BELKNAP, Mr. MEYER, Mr. REEVES, Mr. SNOVER, Mr. BEACH, Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. SAYERS, Mr. BURTON of Missouri, Mr. STRODE of Nebraska, Mr. WOODARD, Mr. COX, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, Mr. HUNTER, Mr. PRINCE, Mr. MURPHY of Illinois, Mr. LONG, Mr. GRAFF, Mr. CALDERHEAD, Mr. FARIS, Mr. AVERY, Mr. KULP, Mr. BLACK of Georgia, Mr. HICKS, Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin, Mr. CANNON, Mr. HADLEY, Mr. LEFEVER, Mr. HILL, Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. HOPKINS, Mr. HULICK, Mr. LORIMER.

Mr. HILL. I am paired with Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts, and desire to be recorded as present.

Mr. HULICK. I did not vote when my name was called, but wish to be recorded as present.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. JOHNSON, and desire to be recorded as present.

Mr. MEYER. I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HENDERSON, and desire to be recorded as present.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I desire to be recorded as present.

Mr. KULP. I am paired with Mr. HICKS, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. LORIMER. I find, Mr. Speaker, that I am recorded as having voted. I did not vote when my name was called, and desire simply to be recorded as present.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw my vote, and wish to be recorded as present.

Mr. HOPKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is a motion to adjourn now in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

The Clerk will read the names of those voting.

The names of those voting were recapitulated by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 137, the nays are 13, present and not voting 33. So, a quorum being present, the resolution as amended is agreed to.

Mr. MOODY. I move to reconsider the last vote, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. HOPKINS. I object.

Mr. LACEY. In that event, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LACEY. The resolution having been to recommit, and having now been voted on a second time, is not the second vote substantially equal to a reconsideration, the second not having been necessary?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if the point had been raised when the resolution was originally presented as a substitute for this question it might have been good.

Mr. LACEY. I make the point now.

The SPEAKER (continuing). But that point not having been made, and the proposition having been voted upon as a substitute before the question was raised, the Chair thinks that a motion to reconsider is the best way to meet it. As many as are in favor of the motion——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand the rule, when a matter has once been before the House and been recommitted, it is not in order to bring that matter again before the House by a motion to reconsider. I think the rule is expressly that way.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Chair has ruled upon that.

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). That the matter can not be brought back after it has been once, by a vote of the House, recommitted. I am satisfied the rule is that way.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think that matter is covered by a special rule of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I refer, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will allow me, to item 2 of Rule XVIII.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the second paragraph of Rule XVIII.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has that rule. The Chair does not think that rule applies to a matter like this, unless the gentleman can cite some authority. The Chair will hear whatever authority there is on the subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am very much inclined to be governed by the decision of the Chair, and if the Chair will announce his conclusion in the matter, it may be satisfactory to myself, having raised the question——

The SPEAKER. Without undertaking to decide, if the gentleman desires to cite any authority, the idea of the Chair is that this rule was intended to apply to cases of formal reference, for instance, reference after a first reading. Those matters are not to be brought back upon a motion to reconsider. The Chair thinks the rule was intended to cover a first reference, the policy of the rules of the House of Representatives having always been to cause everything to be referred to a committee before action by the House. The opinion of the Chair is that the rule was intended to cover such cases as that, and not cases where a report has been made by a committee and the matter is sent back with instructions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It may be that the Chair is correct in the ruling, and I am not now inclined to raise the question any further; but it occurred to me that it came within the provisions of the rule which I have cited, and that, like a motion to adjourn, it would execute itself upon being ordered and not be subject to reconsideration. Still I will not press it.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to add in this connection that that section of the rule has nothing to do with this motion to reconsider. The paragraph referred to merely says that the papers shall not be brought back into the House upon a motion to reconsider. If a bill had gone to the Senate, for instance, it would have to be brought back before a motion to reconsider could be entertained; but this merely means that the motion to reconsider can be entertained while the papers themselves are literally in the custody of a committee. I suggest that this section of the rule does not refer to the matter under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOPKINS demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 4.

Mr. HOPKINS. No quorum.

Several MEMBERS. Count, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). One hundred and eighty present. The ayes have it, and the motion to reconsider is laid on the table.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the correctness of the count and ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair disregards the challenge of the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 14, 1896.

Prayer by Rev. HUGH JOHNSTON, D. D., of the city of Washington.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 6256) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to George F. Fuller Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Manistique, Mich., a condemned cannon, was passed by the Senate yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House the resolution agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 708) to increase the pension of Albert Ellis;

A bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton;

A bill (H. R. 3189) to increase the pension of John S. Cochenour;

A bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of New Mexico, to issue bonds for the construction of a courthouse and jail at the county seat thereof;

A bill (H. R. 5105) to abolish days of grace on promissory notes, drafts, etc., in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 180) for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. GRAY and Mr. SEWELL members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., under the requirements of section 1327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

VISITORS TO ANNAPOLIS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. HALE members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., under the requirements of the act of February 14, 1879.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to the House its resolution agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia; and by unanimous consent the request was ordered to be complied with and the resolution returned to the House.

LIEN FOR FREIGHT ON IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. FRYE. Yesterday, when we reached on the Calendar the bill (H. R. 6836) to amend section 2981 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of June 10, 1880, the indication on the Calendar was that the bill had been reported from the Committee on Finance without any recommendation, and under those circumstances the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] moved the reference of the bill to the Committee on Commerce. The fact is that the Committee on Commerce a long while ago—two months ago, at least—favorably reported the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The Senate bill?

Mr. FRYE. The Senate bill. Later the other House passed a bill exactly like the Senate bill, and when it came from the House I asked that it might take the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar. That was agreed to, and the Senate bill was indefinitely postponed. I now ask that the action of the Senate yesterday, by which reference of the bill was made to the Committee on Commerce, may be reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. FRYE. The bill was read yesterday. It is eminently proper and right, being recommended warmly by the Secretary of the Treasury, and as it will take but a minute, I ask that it may be put on its passage.

Mr. HILL. What is the bill about?

Mr. FRYE. It relates to the general average and charges of steamboat carriers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 13th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1904) to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Daughters of the American Revolution, praying for the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Sandusky, Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 5113 to authorize money-order post-offices to receive money on deposit; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Harry Farmer and 11 other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that Frank J. Metcalf, who was injured in the Ford Theater disaster, be awarded a larger amount for his injuries than that granted to him by the Ford Theater Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PRINTING OF SECRETARY CARLISLE'S SPEECH.

Mr. VILAS. I move that the speech of Hon. John G. Carlisle, made before the workingmen of Chicago, April 15, 1896, a copy of which I hold in my hand, be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (for Mr. BRICE), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4275) to increase the pension of Mrs. Annis H. Enochs, widow of Gen. William H. Enochs, from $20 to $50 per month, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1601) to amend the military record of John S. Evans, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1381) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Patrick Larkin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2742) for the relief of Charles Fletcher, alias James H. Mitchell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 756) to correct the military record of William Kiser, of Noble County, Ind., submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. H. J. Kiernan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1109) granting a pension to Elizabeth Marshall, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1734) to increase the pension of Ann Catherine Hull, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2509) to authorize the erection of a statue of the late President Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg, Pa., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3087) to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 248) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish four pieces of condemned cannon to the city of Hastings, Mich., reported it without amendment.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7816) for the relief of John S. Burwell, administrator of the estate of A. L. Burwell, deceased, asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to whom was referred the bill (S. 3122) for the relief of Bridget Lane, reported it without amendment, and substituted a report thereon.

DISCRIMINATING DUTIES.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3040) to protect commerce, and for other purposes, to report it back with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, the bill in question is substantially a bill to authorize the President of the United States, by proclamation, to levy discriminating duties in certain cases. Those cases are wherever any foreign country levies any discriminating tax or duty against the products of the United States or increases its bounty or premium upon its own exports coming into the United States. It provides that the President be authorized by proclamation to state that fact, and, after the proclamation, that the Secretary of the Treasury be required to ascertain the exact amount of discriminating duty in the one case, or the export bounty or premium in the other, and after the amount and nature of the duty or bounty be accurately ascertained, that the President be authorized to impose just such countervailing duty or tax as will offset or equalize the discriminating duty or bounty levied by the foreign country. I will state that the recent action of the German Reichstag emphasizes, in my opinion, the necessity of some legislation of the kind proposed in the bill reported back by me.

The Committee on Commerce considered that the subject-matter of the bill was one beyond their jurisdiction. The bill relating, although indirectly, to finance and tariff, was, as they considered, beyond their jurisdiction, and came within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, I will read from Willett & Gray's Daily Sugar Trade Journal, published in New York, of the issue of May 12, 1896, the following:

GERMAN BOUNTY.

The Reichstag passed the new sugar-bounty bill to-day, fixing rates of bounties of 2.50 marks on raws and 3.55 marks on refined per 100 kilograms, in place of 3 marks and 4 marks, respectively, as last proposed by committee. The new rates give bounty on raws of 27 cents per 100 pounds, against present bounty of 13½ cents per 100 pounds, and gives bounty on granulated of 38½ cents per 100 pounds, against present bounty of 21½ cents per 100 pounds.

Taking into account the amount of raw sugar required to make 100 pounds of granulated, the new rate will be equal to 30 cents per 100 pounds on raws, against 38½ cents per 100 pounds granulated, or, say, 8½ cents per 100 pounds more bounty on refined than on raws, against present difference of 8 cents per 100 pounds. With a small saving also in paying duties, the new law shows a total reduction in American refiners' present protection of, say, 3½ cents per 100 pounds, or one thirty-second of a cent per pound, which is sufficient to call for a countervailing duty on the part of the United States.

The immediate effect of the passage of this bill is to increase the value of the present stock and all productions of refined to August 1, when the new law takes effect, as it will cause a heavy demand for refined in Germany meanwhile, to avoid the increased consumption tax from 18 marks to 21 marks per 100 kilograms.

Under the action of the McKinley law, German raw sugar was imported into this country under the stimulus of the export bounty of Germany to a very great extent. Since raws were placed upon the tariff list and a tariff of 40 per cent was made for differentials on refined not so many raws have been exported. The export article of late has mostly been of refined. However, in that statement I do not pretend to be entirely correct, but it is safe to say that under the operation of this new law proposed by the German Reichstag, to take effect upon the 1st of August next, the nascent and growing sugar industry of the Northwest, of Nebraska, California, Utah, and other States, will be entirely destroyed, because the export bounty under this new proposed law of the Reichstag will be increased nearly a hundred per cent.

Mr. GEAR. Is the Senator able to inform us what is the present export bounty or premium on sugar in Germany, and what is the proposed bounty?

Mr. CAFFERY. The present bounty is about 32½ cents, and this increases it 27 cents, about 100 per cent. The present bounty on granulated is increased from 21 marks to 38½ marks.

Mr. GEAR. Thirty-eight marks on how much?

Mr. CAFFERY. On 100 pounds.

Mr. GEAR. That would be four dollars and some cents.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should have said cents instead of marks. This is the quotation:

The new rates give bounty on raws of 27 cents per 100 pounds against present bounty of 13½ cents per 100 pounds, and gives bounty on granulated of 38½ cents per 100 pounds against present bounty of 21½ cents per 100 pounds.

I am authorized by the committee, from which I report the bill back to the Senate, to request prompt action on the part of the Finance Committee on this very important measure. I am not authorized to say, nor do I say, that the committee is entirely in favor of the bill. The only expression is that they are in favor of prompt action, and I think it is due to the industry threatened by the German law that some prompt action be taken by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that I am occupying the floor by the courtesy of other Senators, I shall not detain the Senate long, but I say the whole sugar industry is threatened with destruction by the proposed increase of bounty by the German Reichstag. The sugar industry is already laboring under a great many burdens, and I think it is meet and proper that the Congress of the United States should not permit a great industry like this to be destroyed by the discriminating action of a foreign country. That discriminating action has already driven out of Continental Europe all cane sugars, and if permitted it will destroy in the United States the industry upon which one-half of the people of my State gain their sustenance. Not to say anything about the possibility of the growth of the sugar industry upon the Pacific Slope and in the Northwestern States, there is a State already where this industry has taken deep root whose prosperity is threatened with destruction by the action of the German Reichstag.

I do not propose at this moment to discuss the features of the bill. I do not propose to dwell upon the point whether the Senate of the United States can take cognizance of such a bill. But I do want to direct the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that something is due to our home producers in the way of protection against the hostile action of a foreign country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3147) granting a pension to Priscilla Wetterman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 3148) granting a pension to Susan Buck; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 3149) for the relief of James T. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (S. 3150) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Robert Platt, United States Navy, to the rank of commander; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3151) granting a pension to Alice V. Cook, of St. Paul, Nebr., invalid daughter of John Y. Cook, deceased, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. HARRIS.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Hon. John S. Harris, late a Senator from Louisiana, the amount due from the beginning of his term on the 4th of March, 1867, until he was paid; said payment to be made from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2147) establishing additional regulations concerning immigration to the United States, in order that I may submit some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to call up the bill indicated by him, that he may submit some remarks in accordance with previous notice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I wish to state that the regular order is the Du Pont case, and by unanimous consent it is understood that that will be set aside temporarily in order that the Senator from Maryland may make a speech; but if the discussion should be prolonged, I would have to object.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the agreement, it was that after the river and harbor bill was disposed of, and after the routine business of this morning, the Du Pont case was to be taken up and proceeded with and voted upon at 5 o'clock on the second day, unless sooner disposed of.

Mr. FAULKNER. No; at 5 o'clock of the second day.

Mr. GRAY. At 5 o'clock; not sooner. The proposition to vote earlier was rejected, so that everybody might be here at the hour named.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I do not see the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is in charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, in his seat; but I wish to give notice that if no one wishes to proceed upon the Du Pont case after the Senator from Maryland has finished his observations, that appropriation bill will be called up.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to make an inquiry before this matter is passed over. There is a dispute as to the exact time we are to vote upon the Du Pont case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Five o'clock to-morrow was the time fixed.

Mr. CULLOM. Not before that hour?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not before that hour.

Mr. GORMAN. I appeal to Senators to allow my colleague to proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly; the Senator from Maryland has obtained unanimous consent to submit his remarks, and I ask that then the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who is anxious to make a speech of some three-quarters of an hour on the same subject, be permitted to do so, and after that the Du Pont case will be taken up and proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. The Senator from Oregon requests that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] be permitted to address the Senate after the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] shall have concluded.

Mr. GORMAN. With the distinct understanding, Mr. President, that immediately thereafter the Du Pont case is to be taken up and proceeded with according to the agreement entered into several days ago.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. So that the vote upon the amendment to the resolution and the resolution itself shall be taken at 5 o'clock to-morrow evening.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That we shall proceed with the Du Pont case until 5 o'clock to-morrow, and then we shall proceed to vote on it; but what particular vote it shall be is a matter to be determined at the time.

Mr. GRAY. It is a vote to dispose of the case of Mr. Du Pont one way or the other; to admit him or reject him. That was the understanding.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask that the bill (S. 2147) establishing additional regulations concerning immigration to the United States be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill called up by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (reported by Mr. LODGE from the Committee on Immigration February 18, 1896), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, in amendment of the immigration and contract labor acts, be, and hereby is, amended by adding to the classes of aliens excluded from admission into the United States the following:

"First. All persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language, except that an aged person not so able to read and write who is the parent or grandparent of an admissible immigrant may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

"Second. For the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read and write, as required by the foregoing section, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on numbered uniform pasteboard slips, each containing five lines of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. These slips shall be kept in boxes made for that purpose and so constructed as to conceal the slips from view, each box to contain slips of but one language, and the immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made. Each immigrant shall be required to draw one of said slips from the box and read, and afterwards write out, in full view of the immigration officers, the five lines printed thereon. Each slip shall be returned to the box immediately after the test is finished, and the contents of the box shall be shaken up by an inspection officer before another drawing is made. No immigrant failing to read and write out the slip thus drawn by him shall be admitted, but he shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him, as now provided by law. The inspection officers shall keep in each box at all times a full number of said printed pasteboard slips, and in the case of each excluded immigrant shall keep a certified memorandum of the number of the slip which the said immigrant failed to read or copy out in writing."

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, with the broad acres of this country yet unsettled and untilled, with a land virtually unredeemed from primeval silence and solitude, with a soil as yet virgin, with an affluence and amplitude of domain adequate to the happiness and maintenance of 500,000,000 people, there is no reason why luxury and want and why capital and labor should look askance at one another.

While we have mountains to tunnel, rivers to bridge, forests to fell, and mines to develop there is no reason to turn back from our shores the offered laborer who asks for a home and opportunity of self-support on our unoccupied fields or in the channels of industry that need his labor.

Immigration is as essential now to our development as it ever was. From 1820 down to the present time the influx of foreign population to the United States has, in all those years, never been beyond 15,000,000 people. We have to-day in the United States a foreign-born population of 9,000,000 people, making an average of one foreigner to every nine native born. Within the period of forty years, from 1850 to 1890, there has been an increase in the census years of only 1 per cent in the foreign immigration to the United States in each ten years.

Census year.	Number of foreign born.	Per cent of total population.
1850	2,244,602	9.68
1860	4,138,697	13.16
1870	5,567,229	14.44
1880	6,679,943	13.32
1890	9,249,547	14.77

Instead of 72,000,000 people, the United States can accommodate hundreds of millions of people without being overcrowded. One of the most prosperous countries in Europe is Belgium, with a population of 530 inhabitants to the square mile. The next in population is England, with 505 to the square mile. The area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, in 1890 was 2,939,000 square miles. This area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, at the same ratio of population as Belgium and England, could support, instead of 72,000,000, the stupendous aggregate of over 1,557,670,000 people; that is to say, 100,000,000 more than the entire population of the whole earth to-day. We have one State, Texas, which is as large as England, France, and Germany combined. And yet with such a capacity and possibilities, when we have only 72,000,000 out of a possible 1,600,000,000, when we have only 21 people to support to the square mile, while Belgium has 530 and England 505 to the square mile, being at the same time the most prosperous nations of Europe, we talk about restricting immigration:

It will be interesting, Mr. President, in this connection to call attention to Mulhall's statistics giving the following table of inhabitants to the square mile in 1890 of the different countries in Europe:

Inhabitants per square mile in 1890.

United Kingdom	184	Portugal	136
England	505	Sweden	28
Scotland	135	Norway	16
Ireland	148	Denmark	133
France	190	Holland	350
Germany	288	Belgium	530
Russia	42	Switzerland	190
Austria	166	Greece	88
Italy	260
Spain	86	Europe	90

United States, exclusive of Alaska and Indian Territory, 21.31 per square mile.

This shows that the most prosperous nations in Europe are those that have the largest population per square mile.

The Western States have for occupancy and open for settlement, exclusive of Alaska, 579,464,133 acres of land. This would make 3,621,650 homesteads of 160 acres each. On an average of five persons to a family, there is room in these States for 18,000,000 farmers, fruit raisers, wine growers, truck farmers, miners, mechanics, and laborers of all classes, which means 18,000,000 consumers of manufactured products, clothing, shoes, groceries, farming stock, implements, etc., giving labor to other millions of mechanics, miners, and laborers of all classes, adding billions to our national wealth.

The Western States want these lands occupied, and who will occupy them if the European immigrant does not?

But, even more than the West, the great undeveloped South wants immigrants, and is glad to welcome the foreigner, whether educated or illiterate, if he only works.

The Houston (Tex.) Post says that—

Texas can find room for 100,000,000 people and then not be as crowded as many countries are; in fact, not as much as some of the Eastern States in this Union are. And yet she has only 3½ or as much as 4 per cent of this number.

But, Mr. President, while I have here at hand any number of newspaper articles upon this important subject, I will spare the Senate the reading of more of them, but will ask permission that they may appear in the RECORD.

The density of population at the census of 1890, according to States, was as follows:

Density of population at census of 1890.

States and Territories.	1890.	States and Territories	1890.

From whence it will be seen, Mr. President, that there is no necessity for this measure under consideration. In my judgment, Mr. President, our present laws, rigidly, conscientiously, and impartially enforced, are sufficient to prevent all the evils of immigration that are complained of. These laws not only prohibit the admission into the United States of Chinese laborers, but add the following classes of aliens:

All idiots, insane persons, paupers or persons likely to become a public charge, persons suffering from loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases, persons who have been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, or any person whose ticket or passage is paid by the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come.

If this legislation stopped here it would be sweeping enough in its character to meet every emergency in the way of restricting undesirable immigration, but it goes further than this. It provides that no steamship transportation company or owners of vessels shall directly or through agents, under heavy penalties, either by printing or personal solicitation, invite immigration to the United States, except by ordinary circular letters, or other representations stating the terms of transportation, etc.

It is charged that emigration is largely stimulated by steamship agents in Europe, and that the European countries send us their superfluous population. This assertion has no foundation in fact. Immigration to our shores is coming to be counted as a serious loss by the countries from which it is drawn. Indeed, the different governments of Europe do not think they have any surplus population and strive by the strongest laws to make emigration of their subjects as difficult as possible. In Germany, for instance, steamship agents are allowed to act only within a narrow range prescribed by minute police regulations. They must be residents of the district in which they do business and citizens of that country. They must obtain a license for that purpose and deposit a large sum (in Germany 20,000 marks) with the police authorities, and it is then difficult to obtain such a right. Often slight infractions of the police regulations and the emigration laws are at once punished by heavy penalties. No steamship line is permitted to circulate information about foreign countries which might be considered as inciting to emigration. Even a simple comparison, for instance, between Germany and the United States, showing the advantages of the latter, is considered as belonging to this interdicted class of literature.

In addition to these acts of Congress the most thorough sifting process takes place in Europe. When emigrants apply for passage they have to answer very particular and searching interrogatories, a copy of which must be filed with the Commissioner of Immigration in this country.

We have the testimony of the labor organizations of this country that the present laws, if carried out as they are now administered, fully serve the purpose for which they were intended. Let us glance for a moment at what the labor organizations have to say on this subject.

Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, which has an aggregate membership of 652,300, says:

While, in my opinion, it may be necessary to restrict immigration in some cases, American workingmen are reluctant to impose any restraint upon the natural right of a man to choose his own place of abode.

Mr. Morse, secretary of the International Machinists' Union of America, says:

This trade is not much affected by the influx of alien labor. The foreign elements chiefly affecting the engineering trade are the Swedes and Germans.

"Swedes and Germans" are of the class of immigrants commended by the author of this bill as being those desirable.

Mr. O'Keefe, editor of the Knights of Labor Journal, says that this order does not object to immigration in the abstract, but does object to immigration induced by representatives of steamship companies or their agents.

Mr. Anderson, general secretary of the Philadelphia Operative Bricklayers' Union, with 36,000 members, states that this trade has no strong feeling against immigration. It may injure the trade here and there, but in the mass he thinks it does no harm.

Mr. P. J. McGuire, general secretary of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, says that his society is divided on the subject of foreign immigration, some being in favor of one and some of another bar of restriction; but in his opinion, as he says, the more thoughtful men among the members think that immigration in the past has really made the country what it is. He believes that New York changes its labor population every few years, men who have been there some time moving out and being replaced by newcomers.

Mr. G. W. Perkins, president of the Cigar Makers' International Union, of 30,000 members, says a large number of immigrants have come into the cigar trade. Of these, many are Germans who at first are socialists, but who gradually become good trades-unionists. A considerable number of Russian Jews have of late years come into the trade, but wages do not seem to have been reduced in consequence. On the contrary, they seem to have increased in the well-organized centers of the trade.

The New York State branch of the American Federation of Labor, sitting in Albany, reported among other things the following:

That while believing in the necessity of greater efficiency in the administration of the immigration department, we nevertheless hold that extreme radical measures of restriction would be contrary to the spirit of our times and the welfare of our country. Natural and wholesome immigration has been the source of unbounded benefit to our country, and our vast natural resources are such as would easily support many times our present population. * * * We wish to condemn the old Know Nothing sentiment which uses the immigration question as a pretext. The same spirit attempts to rise from the dead through this blind clamor and again bid defiance to the irresistible tread of industrial and social progress.

The Junior Order of American Mechanics, of 160,000 members, calls itself a patriotic fraternity. In its declaration, among other things, it asserts:

We affirm a warm and hearty welcome to all immigrants who desire to better their condition and become a part and parcel of our nationality, but we have not one square inch of room for the anarchists, the socialists, or nihilists, or for any one who is not willing to vow allegiance to that flag which is powerful enough to shield and protect them as well as us in the exercise of our religious and civil liberty.

Among the opinions of statesmen and economists on this subject, Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President of Harvard University, has been good enough to say:

I believe every healthy and honest man, woman, or child brought into this country to be an altogether desirable addition to the resources of the United States. Consequently, I think that immigration should not be restricted, except by rules intended to keep out paupers, criminals, and persons afflicted with incurable or contagious diseases. As to the contract-labor law, it seems to me a stupid piece of demagogic barbarism. More laborers, skilled and unskilled, are just what this half-occupied continent needs.

Mr. Edward Atkinson, whose writings on economic questions are well known, in an article the drift of which will be gathered from its title, "Incalculable room for immigrants," says:

It seems almost pusillanimous to refuse a refuge to the oppressed and to the industrious and capable for fear the institutions of this country may suffer. If we can not deal with one-half of this great continent, of which the resources are as yet hardly even known, will not this prove that our capacity is not yet equal to our opportunities?

These labor organizations, therefore, do not favor any such proposed restrictive and prohibitive legislation as proposed by this bill, or a consular inspection, or a high head money tax. They, although subjected to the competition of new labor forces, have no voice to raise against the admission of alien immigration.

This law has been strenuously enforced ever since its enactment, and the good effects of it are discernible each year in the diminishing number of immigrants coming to our shores. By this bill it is proposed to make a new class of excluded immigrants, adding to those who have just been named "the totally ignorant." Paupers, diseased persons, convicts, and contract laborers are already excluded. Three of this class, paupers, diseased persons, and convicts, of course we do not want and will not have under any circumstances. The bill excluding contract laborers has excluded the best of the class of immigrants who would come to this country, the skilled laborers. Whether this is wise it is not my purpose now to consider. Now we propose to exclude the next best class of laborers under the educational test. It is not the learned and the refined, it is not the doctors, lawyers, and professional men, whom we look for in the immigrant ship, nor yet the dilettante of the youth of southern Italy, who frequent the Olympic games, or, breathing fresh perfume from their curly locks, with their lily fingers pat the red brawn of the gladiators in the arena and bet their sesterces upon their head, but we do want the strong, clean-limbed, ruddy-cheeked, vigorous, young, and healthful toilers who are willing and able to carve out with their own good right hands the way to fortune and to favor in the land of their adoption. Uneducated they may be, not able to read or write in their own tongue or in that of any other, but not bad hearted; poor in purse, but not paupers.

We will educate these immigrants when they get here. We will find the task less difficult to make a homogeneous mass of these people, adapting them to our customs and to our purposes, than if they had preconceived notions from the education which they had received abroad. We do not want them partial to the learning and culture of Europe. We do not want an importation of men with ideas hostile to our native civilization. In the composite population of this Republic we will have a nation of Americans, peculiar to our own civilization. While it may not be "home born and home bred exclusively," in their hearts there will have grown up a spirit which will make them the faithful bodyguard of our liberties, who would be "driven into the sea at the point of the bayonet before they would renounce one principle of our Constitution."

Let us for a moment, Mr. President, consider the class of uneducated who came into our ports in the year 1895. Since the passage of this act of Congress referred to there has been a marked decrease in the amount of immigration to this country. Immigration for the fiscal year 1893–94 amounted to 285,631, and for the fiscal year 1894–95 to 258,536, a decrease of 27,095, thus showing the smallest immigration since 1879. Nearly a quarter of the Italian immigrants who have arrived at the port of New York lately have been debarred admittance to the country. Commissioner Senner says the wholesale detentions are having a deterrent effect on Italian immigration. As an instance of this, he says the steamship Hesperia, which has a capacity for 1,500 immigrants, is bringing only 200 to this port. I ask, Mr. President, to have made a part of my remarks Table No. 7 of the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, by which it appears that, owing to our healthful laws, immigration has decreased from the countries usually furnishing the greatest number of immigrants.

From the foregoing tables it appears that during the last fiscal year 258,536 immigrants arrived in this country. Of these, 256,117 were landed and 2,419 were debarred and deported at the expense of the various steamship lines transporting them. Of those deported, 694 were under contract to perform labor in this country made previous to their arrival and 1,725 were deported as coming within the prohibitions of the act of March 3, 1891.

In addition to the above, 177 immigrants who had been landed were returned to the countries whence they came, having become public charges within one year after their arrival in the United States. The latter were returned at the expense of the steamship lines bringing them if the cause of their having become public charges existed prior to landing; otherwise at the expense of the immigrant fund.

It is gratifying, says the Commissioner-General of Immigration, to be able to say that—

We know of no immigrant landed within a year who is now a burden upon any public or private institution. The class of immigrants has been of a good, healthy, and hardy character, well qualified to earn a livelihood wherever their services were required. They comprised both skilled and unskilled laborers.

Now let us see in this last importation of 1895 how poor they were and how many paupers there were because of their illiteracy:

The money we know they actually brought with them amounted to $4,126,723, but as the immigrant is only required to satisfy the inspector as to the amount when under $30, he is not required to disclose any above that amount; yet with some it is reasonable to suppose that the money actually brought very much exceeds that reported, as in many instances they bring comparatively large sums to invest in small business enterprises or to purchase lands and build homes for their families in the New World. Experience shows that this amount could be safely multiplied three or four times.

Multiply, therefore, the four millions, as ascertained that they actually brought, by four, and we find that instead of bringing four millions they brought sixteen and a half millions.

Of the 152,000 immigrants arriving at the port of New York during the six months ended June 30, 1892, more than $3,060,000 was brought in, one man bringing with him $25,000 and another $10,000. Multiply these as stated by Commissioner-General Stump and we have nearly twelve and one-half millions in 1892. An incident showing the amount of money brought to this country by aliens was disclosed at Ellis Island when upon searching an immigrant it was ascertained that he had more than $10,000 in his possession, although at the time of preliminary inspection he had informed the officers that he had no money whatever. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], arguing from the report of the committee, claims that the immigrants who would have been shut out by the illiteracy test are those who bring less money to the country and come most quickly upon public or private charity for support. And yet the class of immigrants coming in within the two years referred to, though largely illiterate, added to the material wealth of the United States twenty-eight and one-half millions.

In summarizing the results of the committee's investigations, which have been fully set forth in their report, as referred to by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, it is found that he claims that the illiteracy test will bear most heavily upon the Italians, Russians, Poles, Hungarians, Greeks, and Asiatics. These are the immigrants the educational test will keep out, while the consular-inspection bill could not keep them out; whereas, judging from a letter addressed to me, under date of April 16, 1896, the American Anti-Semitic Association, Brooklyn, N. Y., protests most loudly against the educational test, claiming that this would let in the classes that ought to be kept out, as all of these can read and write. They demand equally loudly the passage of the Stone consular-inspection bill. Now, as between the Russian Jews themselves and the Senator from Massachusetts, on this educational test being effective, who is right and who is wrong? The Russian Jews ought to know!

The letter is as follows:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 16, 1896.

HONORED SIR: We respectfully beg to call your attention to the inclosed resolutions, passed at the regular monthly meeting of the American Anti-Semitic Association.

Advices received from Washington say that a powerful Jewish lobby, pretending to represent the German-American voters, is at work to prevent the passage of effective laws that would hinder the immigration of their own people; and to our great consternation we noticed that recent proceedings in the House Committee on Immigration seem to indicate.

Public opinion calls for effective measures. The educational-test bill will not exclude the Russo-Polish Jews. They all read and write the Hebrew jargon.

We indorse the consular-certificate bill for the countries of eastern and southern Europe.

Shall the Rothschilds and Hirsches score another victory against the American people?

Yours, very respectfully,

FR. JO. GROSS,
The President of the A. A. A.
E. FINDEISEN,
Chairman of Committee.

To the Honorable Senator CHARLES H. GIBSON,
Washington, D. C.

AMERICAN ANTI-SEMITIC ASSOCIATION,
Brooklyn, N. Y., April 16, 1896.

PROTEST AGAINST THE JEWISH IMMIGRATION.

Resolutions passed at the regular monthly meeting of the A. A. A.

Delegates from branch organizations were present.

Whereas the present laws for excluding the objectionable Russo-Jewish immigration have proven entirely insufficient, and the moral and social danger of a continuous influx of these people is strongly agitating the public mind;

Whereas in a history of over two thousand years the Jews have never shown an example of assimilation with other nations, and the presence of this people, alien in race and religion, striving after the financial and political supremacy in the Christian countries of the world, is creating serious disturbances everywhere:

Resolved, That we protest against the passage of the McCall educational test bill as entirely inadequate to debar these people, nearly all of them being able to read and write the Hebrew jargon.

Resolved, That we favor the Stone consular-certificate bill for the countries sending us this undesirable immigration, namely, Russia, Austro-Hungarian Empire, Italy, Roumania, Servia, Bulgaria, Turkey, Asia, and Africa, with the instructions to the United States consulates abroad.

E. AUG. LEHUERMANN,
The Secretary of the A. A. A.
E. FINDEISEN,
Chairman of Committee.

Mr. President, if the United States intends to close our portals to foreign immigration entirely, if we propose to say that we have enough of foreigners on our shores, and that we do not want any more and will not have any more, well and good; let us say so. No objection under the law of nations can be made to our so doing. If we are going to surround ourselves with a Chinese wall, over which none save the anointed children of education shall climb, under the specious claim of protection to American labor, as in the past we have undertaken to build a like wall for the protection of American manufactures, then let us do it, and take the consequences. But we will not put ourselves, I take it, in such an attitude to the rest of the civilized world.

If our purpose springs from a fervent desire to benefit the people by restricting immigration, then we must look for some more legitimate and practical means than this measure now under consideration. This bill will not accomplish it. Of all the proposed legislation before the Senate of the United States within my experience, nothing is further removed from wisdom and justice than this. It is undemocratic, unrepublican, un-American, and has no health in it. It is barbaric and cruel; in its operation it will separate families and divide those among them who may be able to read and write from those who can not. It is a standing menace to the future of the West and South; it will keep out from the country immigrants who are desired and will admit those who are not.

The uneducated laborer, whose strong muscles and willingness to work we are in need of, will be driven back, while the communist and socialist, and loud-mouthed and filthy anarchists who labor with their tongues, demagogues, et id omne genus, because they are able to read, will be allowed to come in—evil fellows who work not themselves, but who foment discord and discontent among workingmen, who, if left to themselves, would be good citizens. These are the educated class whom this bill would admit.

The question of restricting immigration into the United States is not a new one. It has been the subject of legislation heretofore. We have all the laws we want. In some parts of the world there are too many people for the work there is to be done, and in other parts there are not enough. Whenever these conditions arise the excess of laborers in one part of the world seeks the excess of labor in the other part. The process began with the beginning of time and will continue to its end. Our present position among the nations is greatly due to it. If the increase of our population had been dependent upon the excess of persons born and growing to maturity over those dying, it is quite safe to say that its number would not be more than half, possibly not more than a third, of what it now is. Instead of having more than 70,000,000 of people within our borders we would have only 40,000,000, or perhaps only 30,000,000.

A great part of what has been done to open up our country and develop its resources would have remained undone. It would have been impossible without the aid of the strong and willing laborers coming to us from the old countries to have made a great part of the West fit for the homes of the splendid population which now enjoys it. The thousands of miles of railroads that cross and recross our country in every direction, annihilating distance and making those who live in the remotest parts neighbors to all the rest, could not have been built. The commerce carried by the agency of these roads would not have sprung up and the numerous and happy villages and cities created and supported by it would have no existence. Without the men who have sought homes on our shores our mines would have remained unopened, our canals undug, and many of our useful industrial works unperformed.

Without them our people might still have skirted the slopes of the Alleghanies; the western boundary of our civilization might still be on the east side of the Mississippi, and the wide expanse beyond might still have remained the pasture of the buffalo and the hunting ground of the savage, where the rank thistle nods in the wind, and where the wild fox digs his hole unscared! The downfall of this great and glorious Republic from any cause, at any time to which the most farsighted can now look forward, is not a matter of dread to me. But if in the dim, mysterious future, mercifully made impenetrable to our gaze, there should come a period when this country, the pride of her own people and the admiration of the world, shall endure the lot of all things perishable, among the causes of its downfall immigration will not be found.

Mr. Jacob Riis says:

The immediate duty which the country has to perform for its own protection is to school immigrant children first of all into Americans, and next into useful citizens. The problems that seem so perplexing in the light of freshly formed prejudices against this or that immigrant yield to the simple solution that discovers all alarms to have been groundless. Yesterday it was the swarthy Italian, to-day the Russian Jew, that excited distrust. To-morrow it may be the Arab or the Greek. The one immigrant who does not keep step or, having fallen out of the ranks, has been ordered to the rear, is the Chinaman, who brought neither wife nor child to push him ahead. He left them behind, that he might not become an American, and by the standard he himself set up he has been judged.

It has been the wise policy of our Government to welcome the immigration of all classes of laboring men. For a time it was wholly unrestricted, and as long as the flow was natural, consisting of a stream of hardy, healthy, and honest men and women, coming of their own accord, no restriction was required; but when advantage was taken by organizations in various parts of Europe of the lack of laws in this country regulating immigration to ship paupers, cripples, diseased persons, whom they wished to get rid of, and criminals, proper measures were speedily taken by our Government.

I am opposed to the passage of this bill and am unwilling for it to become a law. It is not needed. The spirit that presided at its birth and now urges its passage is illiberal and un-American. It is the same spirit that spread its baneful influence over the country some forty years ago, which apparently died out; but which again shows sign of pernicious activity; and the bill is worthy of its originators. It appears to be general in its purpose; but is certainly aimed at the poor and ignorant alone. It is carefully drawn, and is accompanied by a report containing numerous tables prepared to show the necessity for its enactment. The classes especially aimed at by it are the Bohemian, the Russian, the Italian. These are declared to be unfit to land on our shores and to become our fellow-citizens.

But—

experience has shown that no aliens coming here have done the country better service, and they have been among the most peaceable of the people.

Three arguments are presented why this bill should become a law:

First. The selfish one that if the people excluded by the bill are allowed to come in they will compete with Americans for work and lower their wages.

Second. That such immigrants are idle and vicious, and likely to be a plague and burden to the community.

Third. That they are alien and inferior, and if allowed to mix with our people will deteriorate them and lead to national decadence and ruin.

It does not require much consideration of the first argument to arrive at the conclusion that it is wholly groundless and no reason at all. The best proof that unrestricted immigration does not tend to reduce wages is the fact that at the present day, after all these years of unrestricted immigration, the wages of the workingman in this country are higher and the hours of daily labor shorter than ever before. It needs only a superficial acquaintance with the nature of wages to show that they do not decrease as population increases. England has a greater number of inhabitants per square mile than Germany, and yet wages are higher in England than in Germany; and the same relation again exists between Germany and Russia. It is principally the skill and productiveness of the laborer that determines the rate of wages. As long as there is room in this country for both skilled and unskilled labor we should welcome every man that is willing to work.

And again, labor unions, which more than ever before in the world watch over the interests of workingmen, by direct or indirect methods effectually prevent the undercutting of wages. The rise and fall of wages due to obscure causes may occur, and be without remedy, but if it is caused by nothing else than competition among the workingmen themselves, labor unions may be depended upon to regulate it. But competition between laboring men of the class affected by this bill and Americans will never be, for skilled labor and unskilled labor work in different fields, too far apart for the higher class to be interfered with or jealous of the lower. As compared with the laborers of the class affected by this bill, all Americans are skilled laborers. They seek the shops, factories, foundries, machines, railroads, engine rooms, bridge and iron constructions, and other places where special aptitude, training, and acquired skill give larger value to their labor. There is no danger that he will overstock the market or that there will be more of him than there is demand for. In the Iron Trade Review of Cleveland there is an article calling attention to the scarcity of skilled men. And in all the departments where their work is needed there is an increasing instead of a decreasing call for such workmen.

But the Bohemian, Russian, and Italian must take and are glad to take the meaner sort of occupations—street sweeping, sewer cleaning, the digging of ditches and drains, the making of excavations, the outdoor work about mills and factories, which does not require skilled labor or special training, but only strength and industry—menial service, peddling, waiting in hotels and restaurants, fruit selling, knife grinding, toy and image making, and a great many other things which Americans do not seek and will not willingly undertake. All of these, together with many indoor employments, such as cigar and garment making, fall to the share of the newly landed, poor, and illiterate immigrants. Americans do not want such work. Hebrews, Russians, and Italians do want it; and the reason for their coming is that they may get it. They are the only persons to do it, and their presence here is a logical necessity.

The second reason alleged why this bill should pass is that these people are idle and vicious. The argument seems to be that poor and ignorant people are idle and vicious; that these people are poor and ignorant, and therefore are idle and vicious. I admit these people are poor and ignorant both, but even if they are it does not follow as a consequence that they must be vicious. A writer in the Forum of July 1, 1892, well observed—

That no sensible man will deny or underestimate the value of knowledge or education, but they do not form the only criterion to judge the worth of a man. Virtue and patriotism are not privileges belonging exclusively, or even preeminently, to wealth and learning. Scoundrels usually possess a fair education, so far as it can be acquired in schools or from books, and an educational test, in its practical workings, may not prove to be what is expected by its advocates.

Governor John Page, of Virginia, reported Patrick Henry as saying: "Natural parts are better than all the learning on earth."

And, indeed, the experience of all men is that the poor and ignorant are far from being necessarily bad, and it is a cruel and wanton injustice to make such a charge against them.

The tables in the report accompanying this bill show that there are a great many juvenile offenders whose parents, one or both, are foreign. But the census of 1890 shows that one-third of our people are children of parents one or both of whom came from another country. So it does not follow that these juvenile offenders are only of Russian, Bohemian, or Italian origin. They may be of other foreign parentage. In this respect the tables are ambiguous, insufficient, and valueless to prove the charge made by the advocates of this bill against this class of immigrants.

It may also be remarked, in passing, that the term "juvenile offenders" may include little chaps who have been arrested for playing ball in the streets, for being impudent to a majestic cop, or for trespassing upon forbidden grass. The offenses, at any rate, can not be very heinous.

It will be instructive to hear what is said of this class of immigrants by persons who have made a study of them. Tissot, a well-known French writer, says of the Russians:

There is nothing more gentle, more humane, than the Russian peasants, and murders are much less frequent in the Muscovite country districts than in the streets of Berlin and Paris.

In the consular reports published by the State Department in 1890 Italians are thus spoken of:

He gives the police no trouble; the criminal statistics of New York show a diminution in the arrest of foreigners. Only 794 Italians out of a total of 20,000 arrests in the last quarter of 1889, and these mainly for petty offenses. Of the 794 arrests of Italians, but 17 were women. The Italians of New York in some respects may not be a very desirable fraction of the population, but it does not appear to be disorderly or dangerous. The little knowledge of the anarchist is more dangerous than the industrial ignorance of the Latin races. These people are chiefly the peasant farmers of Calabria—vigorous in body; if illiterate, not stupid; if poor, not paupers; intellectually above the average so far as native powers are concerned. I was able to find among 1,075 immigrants not one dweller in an Italian city; all were peasants originally in Italy. As the Irish took the unskilled work off our hands a quarter of a century ago and the French Canadian came to relieve the Irish, it is now the Italians who have come to relieve the Canadian French. It is impossible to develop new country, to open new railways, to build new cities, without unskilled labor. New countries require a larger contingent of raw muscle than old countries. The Italian came because he was wanted.

The Italian beggars do not emigrate. The lazzaroni of Naples can not be induced to go elsewhere, for nowhere is life so easy to him. As a rule, the conditions of life are such that dwellers in cities do not migrate. If we get the illiterate immigrant, we also get the bone and sinew of Europe. What manner of men and women ensue depends in part on the environment which this country supplies.

You in the United States get our better industrial lower class. We could not get our tramps to go if we wanted to. You will find an improvement in the Italian immigrant of the future, I think, because education in Italy is now compulsory, as it is in most of European States to-day. All the younger ones can now read and write.

How easily these immigrants fall into American manners one must have noted who has observed the effect of one or two years of American life on the abject and underfed Italian peasant. Between this adaptability on the one hand and an intense nationality on the other hand, it can easily be seen that Italians who lose their grip of Italy will speedily get a powerful American bias. Their children, at least, are likely to be good citizens of the Republic, perhaps in many cases as valuable as the descendants of Gallic or Teuton stock. Variety of stock must itself strengthen the race whose energies already express the best results of the combination of northern races. As the Latin stock contributed not a little to German vigor, may not the same stock reenforce the new nation on this side the sea?

The largest permanent immigration is from the province of Turin. From Lombardy permanent immigration also tends to increase. Calabrian immigration also increases, but arrivals from Tuscany are diminishing. Rome sends absolutely no Roman, old or young. It is a fact suggestive of the powerful hold of the cellars and attics of crowded European cities that, although Naples is the most densely populated city in Europe, many a village of Calabria sends to the United States more immigrants. It is not cities that are contributing to the cities.

Mr. Landis, of Vineland, who has had most extensive dealings and intercourse with the Italians, both in their country and in this, says:

In the settlement of Italians of Vineland there is a population of 1,000 Italians, about 6 to 12 in a family. There are in this Italian colony 200 owners of land; the farms average about 20 acres each. I sold the land on credit, mainly. The occupants invariably pay for their places and get on well. Since 1871 these Italian families have averaged about $20 each increase of wealth, so that their industry since 1871 (a period of about twenty years) represents an aggregate of $400,000. There is not an Italian in my county in an almshouse. There is not an Italian begging in the place.

The lesson of my journey in Italy is that the Italians are good farmers, steady, sober, and industrious. The sense of art, which is powerful in the Italian race, crops out even in their agriculture. Their cottages are tastefully treated; their interiors are attractive; their agricultural utensils are primitive, but they move forward on touching land in the New World. One-half the Italians in the Vineland settlement can read and write.

The testimony that I have been able to collect relative to the Hebrews exhibits their character in an equally favorable light. I quote from the Forum, volume 16, page 172:

Those who are willing enough to admit our indebtedness to immigration in the past, object to Jewish immigrants, saying that the character of our immigrants is not what it was twenty years ago, forgetting that twenty years ago the prejudice against Irish immigrants was as strong and unreasoning as that which now exists against Jewish immigrants. * * *

Although the Russian Jews have now for several years taken an active part in the industrial, intellectual, and civil life of New York, few of its citizens know anything of this earnest, intelligent, and intensely interesting people. * * *

The Jews are a temperate people, and the saloon is not likely to become an element in their social or political life. * * *

Jewish immigration is free from the objection so commonly urged against immigration in general, that it increases crime and pauperism. The Jewish quarters in New York, although more densely populated than any other tenement-house district, is rarely the scene of serious brawls or disturbances. Policemen are rarely seen there, and these find but little demand for their services. The records of police courts are remarkably free from Jewish names. This is principally owing to their temperate habits, while their strong domestic virtues, their love of their wives and children, prevent family troubles, whose settlement forms so large a part of the work of civil courts and police justices.

Statistics show that during the last few years, when Jewish immigration has so largely increased, crime among this nationality has not shown a corresponding increase. The whole number of Jewish prisoners in New York State is 300. This remarkably small number in a State which contains so large a Jewish population is a conclusive proof of their law-abiding character.

In Sing Sing, out of a total of 1,600 prisoners, there are only 72 Jews, and of these 19 are American, leaving only 53 foreign born. In Clinton prison, among 900 there are only 25 Jewish prisoners. In Auburn there are 36 Jews among 1,160. In the workhouse on Blackwells Island out of 1,100 inmates there are only 5 Jews. The superintendent of the workhouse says that a Jew is seldom brought back a second time. There has never been a Jewish woman in the workhouse. In the penitentiary at Albany there are only 2 Jews among 700 prisoners. There is 1 Jew prisoner in each of the penitentiaries of Syracuse, Rochester, and Buffalo.

The Anti-Immigration League of Boston has published a mass of statistics intending to show that Italians, Hungarians, Russians, and Poles are less desirable immigrants than those coming from other European countries, but from the Massachusetts reports the character of these people is doubtless the same here as in other States, so that the facts of their criminality, insanity, and pauperism, compared with the people of other parts of Europe which are found here, will hold all over the country. Take the last report of the Massachusetts State prison, in the official year ended September 30, 1893. There were 140 commitments. Of those committed, 97 were native born, and of those born abroad, 5 came from the British provinces, 15 from Ireland, 7 from England, 1 from Scotland, 1 from Wales, 3 from France, 4 from Italy, 1 from Germany, 1 from Austria, 1 from Sweden, and 1 from Finland. Italy and Austria, the countries complained of as furnishing the worst immigrants, contributed only 5, and Russia and Poland none of those committed. This looks as if these objectionable people were really the desirable ones.

Take the last report of the State reformatory for the same official year. The commitments during the year were 185, of whom only 11 came from Austria, Italy, Poland, and Russia together. There, once more, the case against the south and east of Europe is so much reversed as to make the figures of the league look ridiculous.

Take, once more, the birthplace of prisoners committed to all the jails and houses of correction in the State of Massachusetts for the same year. The total was 11,824, of whom only 177 came from Italy, Russia, Poland, Austria, and Hungary. There, again, is by far the best showing for these people who are principally aimed at by the league as the poorest of our immigrants.

In a notice published last year in a New York paper Mr. William Lloyd Garrison, takes issue with those who regard a restriction of immigration as desirable, quoting the authority of Dr. Senner, the immigration commissioner of New York, who has kept a record of what becomes of the foreigners who land at that port. Mr. Garrison denies that it is the "dregs and offscourings of Europe" that land upon our shores. "On the contrary, it is not the poorer class of European cities who emigrate to America, but the harder working people from the rural districts. But even if all immigration were seriously objectionable, it would still amount to only one family added to a preexisting hundred every five years. Our institutions must have lost their vigor if they can not subjugate 1 per cent of elements the most unruly during the term prescribed as the preparation for citizenship. Even if they come to be massed together in groups that are congruously un-American, they have still the environment of our educational system and our laws, and these have accomplished greater transformations than that of Hungarian miners and Italian laborers into useful American citizens."

If the problem of assimilating the "foreign element" had been an excessively hard one, the effect would be shown in the States where there was a preponderance of the "foreign element"—either foreign born or of immediate foreign descent. Massachusetts had 57 per cent foreign born or of foreign parentage; Maine 77 per cent. Maine is therefore a more representative American State than Massachusetts; but is there any distinction in the institutions or the legislation of those States that would warrant the belief that the "foreign element" in Massachusetts had not been successfully assimilated? In Minnesota there are to each 100 native inhabitants 239 of foreign birth or of foreign parentage, and in Wisconsin the proportion is 100 native to 264 foreign. Is there anything in the government of these States, or in the tendency of their institutions, such as schools, courts, etc., indicating that the foreign element was injuriously affecting the welfare of the country? Is there any higher grade of intelligence, public spirit, or material prosperity in Indiana, Maine, Missouri, or Kansas (States showing strong antiforeign complexion) than in Wisconsin or Minnesota? On the contrary, are these latter not the peers of their sister States in the conditions referred to?

On the 11th of April the same Mr. William Lloyd Garrison, whose remarks I have given above, at a dinner given by the Massachusetts Reform Club in Boston, speaking on the subject of the restriction of immigration, said:

You may prove that in the slums of the city there is an undue proportion of illiterate foreigners. You can not prove that their condition is not bettered by their change of place.

The measures proposed to limit immigration are ridiculously inadequate. The $10 fine will simply be an addition to the passage money, depleting to that extent the scanty possessions of the poor people who need every penny of their hard-earned savings to start the new life. The test of reading and writing is worthless as a safeguard of character.

To stop emigration or to reduce emigration European nations must remove the causes which are behind emigration—land monopoly, landlordism, and militantism, words of golden truth. Our most effective method of stopping this influx will be to cultivate these same devastating causes. These causes are the common enemies upon which the guns of reformers should be trained, not upon fugitives from European and Asiatic oppression. [Great applause.]

The Hon. John E. Russell, ex-governor of the State of Massachusetts, on being called upon to speak upon the same subject, said:

I do not think that the test of illiteracy is of much good as an immigration test. I agree with Mr. Garrison's remark that the country is in more danger from the literate than from the illiterate. It is the cupidity and neglect of the literate which we need to fear most.

This testimony to character comes from those who have studied this class of immigrants, who are fair minded and not infected by the pestilential intolerance that characterizes the real promoters of this bill. It is not among this class of immigrants that the professional disturber of the peace, the avowed enemy of social order, is ever found. They do not furnish the sturdy vagabond, ever ready to commit robbery and murder if his unwarranted demands for money are not at once complied with; the instigators and leaders of riots, the manufacturers and throwers of bombs, or those who penetrate into the homes of prominent citizens to destroy with malignant wantonness lives useful to the state. But it has been asserted that we have already had all or nearly all the immigration required. The examination of this part of the subject will be brief.

The Congressional committee appointed in 1892 to investigate the immigration question in its official report made the following statement:

We welcome with open arms the worthy immigrant who, by himself or with his family, comes to our country to live under its laws, to make it his home, and, together with our yeomanry, by honest toil and labor, seeks to better his condition.

Not less significant was the address of the governors of Southern States, who met in convention at Richmond, Va., at the beginning of the year 1893. This address was directed to the people of the United States and Europe, and contains the following passage:

They (the Southern States) are anxious to have immigrants settle among them. To the worthy immigrant they extend the hand of welcome, with the assurance that he will find an educated, warm-hearted, hospitable, progressive people, among whom he can live in amity and peace, without regard to his religion, his politics, or his nativity.

It seems, therefore, that the hue and cry which has been raised against immigration is confined almost exclusively to a few States where the American Protective Association and the Boston Anti-Immigration League have been able to work upon the feelings of the native element. The people, however, who so vehemently inveigh against foreign immigration because the populous cities of the East are not apparently in need of any increase of population from that source, entirely forget that the West and South possess nearly all the primary wealth of the country; that their natural resources are almost unlimited, and need for their development the brawny arm of the foreign immigrant; and, finally, that the commercial, mercantile, and industrial interests of the East, nay, even the value of property in the Eastern cities, are for the most part dependent on the untrammeled progress of the West and South.

I should be doing injustice to this feature of my theme did I fail to here insert as part of my remarks the following eloquent tribute paid to the immigration question by Rev. De Witt Talmage in a sermon he delivered on Sunday last in the city of Washington:

It is too late now to discuss whether we had better let them come. They are here. They are coming this moment through the Narrows. They are this moment taking the first full inhalation of the free air of America. And they will continue to come as long as this country is the best place to live in. You might as well pass a law prohibiting summer bees from alighting on a field of blossoming buckwheat; you might as well prohibit the stags of the mountain from coming down to the deerlick, as to prohibit the hunger-bitten nations of Europe from coming to this land of bread—as to prohibit the people of England, Ireland, Scotland, Italy, Norway, Sweden, and Germany, working themselves to death on small wages on the other side the sea, from coming to this land where there are the largest compensations under the sun.

Why did God spread out the prairies of the Dakotas, and roll the precious ore into Colorado? It was that all the earth might come and plow, and come and dig. Just as long as the centrifugal force of foreign despotisms throw them off, just so long will the centripetal force of American institutions draw them here. And that is what is going to make this the mightiest nation on the earth. Intermarriage of nationalities! Not circle intermarrying circle, and nation intermarrying nation. But it is going to be Italian and Norwegian, Russian and Celt, Scotch and French, English and American.

The American of a hundred years from now is to be different from the American of to-day. German brain, Irish wit, French civility, Scotch firmness, English loyalty, Italian æsthetics packed into one man, and he an American! It is this intermarriage of nationalities that is going to make the American nation the greatest nation of the ages.

Just open the map of the continent and see how it is shaped for immeasurable prosperities. Navigable rivers, more in number and greater than of any other land, rolling down on all sides into the sea, prophesying large manufactories and easy commerce. Look at the great ranges of mountains, timbered with wealth on the top and sides, and metaled with wealth underneath. One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of coal! One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of iron! The iron to pry out the coal. The coal to forge and smelt the iron. The land so contoured that extreme weather hardly ever lasts more than three days—extreme heat or extreme cold. Climate for the most part bracing and favorable for brawn and brain. All fruits. All minerals. All harvests. Scenery displaying autumnal pageantry that no land on earth pretends to rival. No South American earthquakes. No Scotch mists. No English fogs. No Egyptian plagues. The people of the United States are happier than any people on earth. It is the testimony of every man that has traveled abroad. For the poor more sympathy! For the industrious more opportunity!

The annual increase of our population by immigration is about 300,000 people, and who can compute the increase to our national wealth thereby represented? Dr. Young, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in Washington in 1872, made a scientific research as to the pecuniary value of each immigrant, and arrived at the conclusion that the average capital value of each immigrant is $800. Dr. Young, however, emphasizes at the same time that it is wrong to place so low an estimate on a human being as to regard a man only as an automatic machine, computing his productive power minus his running expenses. Besides, all these immigrants bring a little money along, a fair average being $20 per head. At that rate the 300,000 immigrants bring annually $6,000,000 into this country. When here, they must live in houses which must be built and furnished, thus giving employment to a large number of other people, and if the housing of them requires only $15 a head per annum, it would mean an outlay of $4,500,000. They must also buy clothes, and millions of dollars are spent on that. They travel and increase the earnings of our railroads, and last, but not least, they must eat, and if they spend only 20 cents per day per head for that, it means an increase of our home market for food products by nearly $22,000,000 per annum. But the beneficial influence of the foreign-born citizen has been felt in every walk of life, and it is impossible to measure the value of the activity of his brain, of his skill in handicraft, the industrial arts and trade, of his taste as an artisan, of his inventive genius as a mechanic, or of his endurance and frugality as a farmer.

In the year 1839 there arrived a Swedish immigrant, better known as Capt. John Ericsson. What was his value to this country, Mr. President, as estimated on the 9th of March, 1862, when the country watched with bated breath the doubtful issue between the Merrimac and the "cheese box" of a Monitor, the creation of Ericsson's genius? Was it $800 or $800,000 or $8,000,000? This is only one instance of the part taken by citizens of foreign birth in our long struggle for national unity, which sheds a luster around those whose valor, devotion, and patriotism upheld and strengthened the nation in her hour of greatest need. If the names were reviewed of those to whom the nation owes a debt of gratitude for their sacrifices of life and blood untold thanks would be found due those whose cradles stood on foreign shores and over whose graves on our own shores alien mothers wept bitter tears.

In the report of the president and board of directors of the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore for the year 1893 I find this expression of opinion:

There should be no impediment to immigration beyond the broad principle of moral, mental, and physical disqualification; no plea of competitive labor which closes our doors to those who would contribute to our wealth and happiness, while we throw them open to the most degenerate of European population.

There is every reason for the exclusion or dismissal of the sunken and degraded. But the deportation of those who, lured by the siren voice of Freedom, have sought the shelter of our laws; the proscription of an entire population of one particular nationality, regardless of individual rights and good behavior, finds no vindication in the spirit of American Government.

To further show the feeling of the people of my State, I quote an article referring to recent legislation in the legislature of Maryland, whose session has just ended, establishing a bureau of immigration. The article is taken from a Baltimore paper of April 6, and epitomizes some of the provisions of the bill. It is in part as follows:

It is also made the duty of the State superintendent to visit Europe once in each year for the purpose of soliciting immigration to this State, and he must remain at least four months visiting different countries in the prosecution of his work. The remainder of his time he may devote to personally soliciting immigration from the other States of the Union and from Canada, in the meantime advertising according to his judgment. He is also empowered to make contracts with railroad and steamship companies for transportation for immigrants, and to make necessary arrangements for their temporary accommodation upon their arrival at Baltimore. The first term of office is to begin May 1, 1896. For the purpose of carrying out this comprehensive scheme the sum of $5,000 per annum for two years is appropriated.

So that in my own State immigration is not only welcomed but great pains are taken and expense incurred to secure it.

The report accompanying this bill shows that questions touching the kind and amount of immigration desired have been addressed to the authorities of twenty-six States, and the replies received are brought forward to sustain the advocates of the bill.

It is evident that one at least of the questions I have referred to was framed so as to draw out a reply showing what class of immigrants was preferred, and naturally a preference was expressed by English-speaking people for immigrants who spoke their own language, and next, for that class of foreigners with which our people were best acquainted. Some of the States, it was thought, needed no more immigration, but by no State, where immigration was desired, was any objection expressed to the incoming of this class of people. Kentucky, it is true, did not want forced immigration, but Kentucky was ready to welcome the class of people affected by this bill, if they came of their own volition.

I have in my hand a number of clippings from newspapers published in numerous and widely separated parts of our country. The tone and sentiment are the same in all of them: Give us more laboring men. We need them to farm our lands and develop our resources. There is no hard limitation laid down that the laboring men shall be of this or that nationality or shall profess this or that creed. Give us the men. We will undertake to environ them with conditions of life whereby both they and their descendants will be made true and faithful Americans.

We need common laborers in this country to develop our splendid resources, to dig or fill in, to build up or tear down, and we do not care whether they are literate or illiterate. Their children feel the stimulus of American life and obtain our common-school education, and, being of healthy stock, become good and valuable citizens, having a sound mind in a sound body.

The great immigration convention at St. Paul in December, the immigration conventions in North and South Dakota, Washington, Oregon, and the county conventions throughout these States emphasize the fact that immigrants to populate these States and till the vacant lands of the Northwest and Western States are much wanted and great efforts will be made to secure them.

With reference to the congestion of immigration in the seaboard States, referred to by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], it is natural, perhaps, that the three seaboard States should for a time be overcrowded and include in their population more persons of foreign origin than is desirable. But this condition arises ex necessitate rei. The fact that the three great ports of entry of foreign immigration lie within their borders accounts for this superabundance. Foreign immigration must come there first, but the immigrants do not mean to remain in these States. They come to America to find homes, to go where there is work for them, and as fast as they are able they progress westward, mingle with the people, and lose their identity as foreigners. If these overcrowded States find that their geographical position has been the means of imposing this burden upon them they should remember that the same geographical position has brought them advantages that far more than compensate.

Mr. President, I now approach what has been stated to be the greatest and most serious question of all—that is, the danger of race deterioration if the classes aimed at by this bill should be permitted to come in and mingle with us. The Senator from Massachusetts deals with this question with the seriousness and solemnity it would deserve if the danger were a real one.

It is not complimentary to one acquainted with the American people to ask him to believe that nearly 70,000,000 of such proud, independent, self-reliant, intelligent people as they are can be deteriorated by contact, however intimate, with a few thousand foreign immigrants, even if they were worse than it is claimed these are. No, sir; the Americans are no such pliable, defenseless people. As a race they are not yet formed, it is true; what they may turn out to be at the end of a long series of years yet to come can not be surely known; but it may be safely trusted that the fruit will be worthy of the seed, and the descendants who will enjoy this completed and perfected country will be worthy of the ancestors who, with unparalleled wisdom and justice, devised its plan and laid its foundations. The dread of race deterioration is a monster conjured from the realm of fantasy and without reality. It is intended to terrify the ignorant and mislead the credulous.

Mr. President, the ultimate perfection of the human race depends upon the recognition of the right of every man to be treated as a man, whether he be Jew or Gentile, literate or illiterate. Character is largely the result of environment, and depends more than is generally admitted upon the habitat of the individual. It is hardly possibly to imagine a gay and joyous Puritan or a cold, unbending son of Italy; but it is not too much to say that if the home and the surroundings of the two had been changed long ago, the warmth of the southern skies might have softened the hardness of the Puritan heart, and the solemn mystery of the long night in the wintry north might have entered the soul of the Italian and given it an element of gravity and firmness.

But it is certain that the Latin race is at least one-half Germanic. From the earliest times Italy has been the spoil of the Germans. Brennus had predecessors as well as successors. It surely can not be said that the Romans, who with the Germans commingled make up the present Latin race, were an inferior race. Not the people from whom we derive our civil law; our philosophy; whom we have been taught from childhood to admire. Not the people represented in our recollections by Brutus, by Regulus, by Cæsar, by Cicero, by Virgil, by Horace, by Lucretius, by Marcus Aurelius, and by Justinian. The race that produced these people, that dominated the whole world, that advanced civilization everywhere it went, can not be a bad one. Nor was the amalgamated product bad. At first it struggled for existence in one of those strange periods of man's history when everything seemed to be going to ruin and destruction. Periods which came before in the world's history and will come again—wherefore no man can tell; periods which may be likened to sick spells which do not kill a man, but greatly injure and depress him; periods when the light of civilization flickers and all evil influences predominate. It is not fair to judge a race passing through such times with the same rigor as might be used in piping times of peace.

Italy was the center of the world, and because it was the center the evil of the Dark Ages was most virulent in her midst.

If the condition of the Italian is to be regretted, if he is poor and illiterate, the reason for his being so is not attributable to his own race inferiority. Think what the modern Italian has been and is, and think of Columbus, of Dante, of Galileo, Petrarch, Leonardo, of Volta, of Michael Angelo. Remember that for more than a thousand years no man's education has been considered complete until he has visited Italy and studied its incomparable art in painting, sculpture, and architecture. Remember that banks, life insurance, modern ideas of commercial exchange, were all invented or first generally practiced in Italy; remember that during the whole of the dark period, when literature, learning, and art seemed in danger of being lost to the world, they were preserved and cherished by the Italians. Remember these things, and do not say that the Italians are an inferior race or unfit to mix with ours.

So likewise, in whatever direction we turn our eyes, we find the once despised and for a long time misunderstood Jew, courageously, persistently, and successfully striving to better his condition. "He is no idler or dreamer, but a worker in every field open to him." Almost at the same time Disraeli and Gambetta, men of Jewish stock, ruled—the one England and the other France. Montefiore and Hirsch are in the front rank of philanthropists; Rothschild and Bleichroder in finance. Maimonides in his time and Spinoza later were preeminent in the intellectual world, and Darmstetter, Adler, and Bernstein are now of the highest rank as scholars. Heine's place in poetry remains to be filled, and all musicians are familiar with the names of Mendelssohn and Halevy and Rubinstein. He excels in all the arts that engage the attention of mankind, except in the cruel one of shedding blood, and the civilized world is fast coming to accept the Jew's opinion of war.

I very much question, Mr. President, whether the restriction of immigration is all that is aimed at in this bill. There is more behind it, as it occurs to me. It is contemplated in this bill not simply a seeking to benefit the institutions of this country in the restriction of immigration. It is not prompted by a genuine desire to ameliorate the condition of the workingman, or to prevent the greatest evil of all that is threatened in what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] calls race deterioration. The promoters and advocates of this bill are not the honest farmers and workingmen of this country. No solicitude for their interest has suggested it. Behind the Anti-Immigration League of Boston there is an influence, subtle and potent to a degree in its character, which finds its opportunity in this bill to give expression to its venomous hatred to the Catholic Church of the United States.

This organization to which I refer, Mr. President, is known as the "American Protective Association"—a secret, oath-bound, red-lettered, left-handed, dark-lanterned organization—organized recently by a resident of Clinton, Iowa, who was the founder of the order and the author of its ritual. "America for Americans," and undying hatred to foreigners, are the first and governing principles, so called, of the order!

The very first in the enumerated order of their public declarations is "Restriction of immigration," added to which, further on in their so-called platform, is the declaration that—

> All private schools, convents, nunneries, monasteries, seminaries, hospitals, asylums, and educational or charitable institutions to be open to public inspection and under Government control.

This dangerous organization, Mr. President, which is generally believed to be instigating and urging the passage of this bill, has for its real purpose hostility to the Catholic Church.

It is the child of envy, hatred, and malice—the offspring of a pestilential brood of mischief-makers, who lurk about the doors of legislative halls, and hang on the flanks of political parties, seeking to lure lawmakers from the wide paths and open day of rectitude into the devious ways and darkness of evil doing—breathing threatenings and vengeance where they can not cajole and deceive.

The platform of this organization or its public declaration of its principles is one thing—it is what it pretends to do; what it is sworn to do is quite another thing. Their voice is Jacob's voice, but their hands are the hands of Esau. Let us see, Mr. President, what there is in their claim of patriotism in this so-called "patriotic order."

Every applicant to membership to the councils of this order—the notices of the meetings of which are always sent out in red letters—are required to subscribe to what is called the "scroll." This scroll sets out another declaration of principles from that described in their public declaration. It is as follows:

> I hereby declare I am a firm believer in a Deity; nor have I any sympathy with Roman Catholicism; that in my opinion no Roman Catholic should be allowed any part or parcel in the control of or to occupy any position in our public schools. On the contrary, I realize that the institutions of our country are in danger from the machinations of the Church of Rome. I believe that only by the removal of Roman Catholics from office of public trust can justice, right, and true American sentiment be fully subserved, and that by the concerted and continued efforts of lovers of American liberty only can such results be consummated and continued. I pledge myself to defend the Government of the United States and of the State in which I reside against invasion, disorder, treason, or rebellion, either by ecclesiastical or foreign forces, and against the usurpation of temporal or spiritual power whereby men become slaves to party and the Roman Catholic Church.
> I am willing to bind myself by a vow sacred and unavoidable. I am a Protestant, and have been for —— years.
> I belong to the —— Church and the following societies:
> Age ——.
> Residence ——.
> Occupation ——.
> Recommended by —— ——.
> Recommended by —— ——.

Omitting in this connection, Mr. President, the "circumstantia, the paraphernalia" of the council chamber, and the various other oaths the candidates are required to subscribe to in the various stages of their progress to their full membership in this order, I come to that oath subscribed to before what is known as the "department of church" or "ecclesiastical department." Here the candidate is required to take the following oath:

> I do most solemnly promise and swear that I will always, to the utmost of my ability, labor, plead, and wage a continuous warfare against ignorance and fanaticism; but I will use my utmost power to strike the shackles and chains of blind obedience to the Roman Catholic Church from hampered and bounden consciences of a priest-ridden and church-oppressed people; I will not allow anyone a member of the Roman Catholic Church to ever become a member of this order, I knowing him to be such; and I will use my influence to promote the interest of all Protestants everywhere in the world where I may be; that I will not employ a Roman Catholic in any capacity if I can procure the services of a Protestant.
> I further promise and swear that I will not aid in building or obtaining by my resources any Roman Catholic church or institution of their sect or creed whatsoever, but will do all in my power to retard and break down the power of the Pope in this country or any other; that I will not enter into any controversy with a Roman Catholic upon the subject of this order, nor will I enter into an agreement with a Roman Catholic to strike or create a disturbance whereby the Roman Catholic employees may undermine and substitute the Protestants thereof; that in all grievances I will seek only Protestants and counsel with them, to the exclusion of all Roman Catholics, and will not make known to them anything of any nature matured at such conferences.
> I furthermore promise and swear that I will not countenance the nomination in any caucus or convention of a Roman Catholic for any office in the gift of the American people, and that I will not vote nor counsel my friends to vote for a Roman Catholic, but will vote for a Protestant, so far as it may lie in my power; should there be two Roman Catholics on opposite tickets, I will erase the name off the ticket I vote; that I will endeavor at all times to place the political positions of this Government in the hands of Protestants to the entire exclusion of the Roman Catholic Church or the members thereof, to the mandate of the Pope.

To all of which I do most solemnly promise and swear. So help me God. Amen, Amen, Amen.

This is the organization, Mr. President, that proposes to play no small part in American politics!

This is the "association" that proposes to "protect" our American institutions!

This is the "patriotic" order—God save the mark—the very first element of which is to deny the first tenet of American liberty—freedom to worship God—and to "punish religious beliefs which it does not share by depriving those who hold them, not only of their political rights, but, if possible, of the means of livelihood as well"!

In a most excellent article in the May number of the Century Magazine, entitled "The mischief of the A. P. A.," the writer says:

There should be no need of warning intelligent citizens against the dangers of such organizations.

They are the deadly enemies of democratic institutions.

The mischief of this movement has lately begun to reveal itself at the national capital. The defeat of the appropriation for Indian schools, because most of these schools are under the care of Roman Catholics, is due to these societies, and it is to their hostility that we owe the shameful proposal to exclude from the national gallery of statuary the effigy of the great pioneer and discoverer, Father Marquette. With respect to the schools, they avail themselves of a sentiment which widely prevails, and which is reasonable enough, but which in this case is greatly overstrained, with the result of depriving the Indian pupils of educational privileges. Not only are Roman Catholics to be refused permission to take part in the defense of their country, but those who decline to ostracize them must themselves be ostracized.

The Père Marquette incident is such an illustration of bigotry as ought to bring a blush to the cheek of every American. That the great French priest was a brave and noble man can be disputed by nobody; that his work among the Indians was one of beautiful devotion is not a matter of controversy; that to him was largely due the discovery of the Upper Mississippi River and the opening of the great Northwest to civilization is the testimony of history. Yet simply because he was a Roman Catholic priest the "patriotic" orders would deny the State which is most closely associated with his beneficent activity the right of celebrating his services to the nation.

The mischief of this association can not find its stronger rebuke than in the eloquent language of the Senator from Wisconsin but a few days ago in this Chamber, in speaking to the resolution of Congress thanking the State of Wisconsin for the statue of James Marquette, the renowned missionary, explorer, and discoverer of the Mississippi.

But, Mr. President, the State of Wisconsin, now a Commonwealth of 2,000,000 freemen, rejoicing in prosperity and happiness on the soil he trod so long ago, in raising this stone in the nation's Hall of Statuary does not merely celebrate a name "illustrious for historic renown," a character whose excellence is worthy of perpetual remembrance. It means still more, that it shall stand there as a testimony and monument to a principle of our social order of the utmost value to mankind—the principle of religious liberty! Sir, this is no rule, as sometimes miscalled, of toleration. I contemn the term. I deny all it implies. It is the right, absolute, uncontrollable, of utter, perfect liberty. It is an inalienable right. The coward, the willing slave, can not divest himself of it. It goes with him in his bondage, however recreant he be to nature.

Sir, he is wrongfully despoiled, his right invaded, a grievous injury done, when to any man is denied any part or share of his social rights or privileges by reason of his religious faith. If property, if place, if honor be his rightful due among his fellows, he who strikes aught away of either because of religious opinion is an enemy to law, to humanity, and all its hopes. Hostis humani generis.

And therefore it is, sir, that this statue of James Marquette will stand as a monument and emblem of religious liberty. The noble right to honor and remembrance among men, which the legislature of Wisconsin and the Congress of the United States have declared to be his, he is not denied. It is sacredly preserved.

The Democratic party of Oregon, in its convention held at Portland a few days ago, set forth in no uncertain terms the views of the Oregon Democrats in reference to this organization, which are as follows:

That religious differences should find no place in American politics, and the Democratic party is opposed to a spirit of intolerant bigotry fostered for political purposes by those who seek to breed discord and animosity among the citizens of this Republic.

Secret political parties are a curse to party, state, and nation.

We heartily welcome the assistance of all good citizens who will cooperate in the suppression of any political movement organized for religious proscription.

Mr. President, secret oath-bound political parties having the enactment of laws and the guidance of public policy for their objects are inimical to the welfare of this Republic and a dangerous menace to its liberties. They should not exist within our land. There is no reason in this country, where there is nothing to prevent the fullest and freest public discussion of any subject, for the existence of secret societies, whose places of meeting are not known, whose proceedings are carefully concealed, whose members are oath bound. There is no kind of honest political work which needs to be thus hemmed in and concealed. Such political associations have been universally condemned wherever in the world they have existed, and most justly. They have the approval of no thoughtful men who have given the subject consideration.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, thus speaks of parties generally, and his remarks apply with still more force to secret societies:

All combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct and control the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of the fundamental principles of the nation and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-conceived and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people.

The whole people are equally interested in the welfare of this country, and none should be refused an equal share with the rest in every deliberation and in all legislation affecting it. All political clubs, societies, and associations start on their career with professions skillfully drawn so as to make it appear that their purposes are patriotic and worthy of support; but all of them, as soon as they have obtained power, are used by unprincipled men to do wrong. This is the history of the Carbonari, the Nihilists, the Jacobins, the Anarchists, and the Commune, and this will be the history of the A. P. A. unless its evil tendencies are perceived in time by the American people and its dangerous career stopped by their good sense and judgment. I have faith, Mr. President, without bounds or limits, in the American people, in their moderation, wisdom, justice, and courage. I do not believe that they will submit to the dictation of any such organization as the A. P. A., but that they will promptly and effectively stamp with the seal of their condemnation this impudent and dangerous interference with the interests of this Republic.

Moreover, Mr. President, there is no reason for the assertion that the country is in danger from immigration because of the increase of Roman Catholics to our population.

There is no more danger from such immigration than there is that a man should die of thirst on the shores of Lake Superior!

The following tables show plainly the numerical difference between Catholic and Protestant immigration:

The immigration statistics, Mr. President, of the United States, since 1890 opened, have amazed all Europe in the spread of the English tongue consequent upon the movement of races.

"Of the 15,000,000 that Europe has sent us since 1820 to develop the resources of this Republic, Great Britain has sent us 6,000,000, Germany 4,500,000, and Ireland 3,500,000. Since that time," says Mr. DINGLEY, "English has advanced from 21,000,000 to 125,000,000 speakers—from 13 to 31 per cent! English is now spoken by twice as many people as any of the other tongues of Europe. English is now the speech of the world of travel and of trade."

I feel that I would do injustice to one of the ablest consular reports ever made to the State Department did I not here refer to the closing remarks of Mr. DINGLEY on this most important subject. He says:

> Emigration which begins to travel and passes from transient into permanent characteristics gives rise to commerce, to geography, and to the expansion of all forms of human life.
> The Queen of Sheba left locusts and wild honey on becoming an emigrant, just as the Italian gives up coarse bread and curd on becoming an American! It is the blessing of all races and all nations that man is an emigrating animal. The provincial intellect which expands itself in hating foreigners is in the thick skull of prejudice! The nation which wants the foreigner least to-day is least wanted of steam, invention, and social and political progress. The rise of prejudice is the fall of industry!

On this side of the sea and at the close of the nineteenth century a craze against foreign immigration would be irrational, suicidal, anti-American, and antirepublican!

There is no such condition affecting us, Mr. President, as "unrestricted" immigration.

There lies no such peril at the portals of our land; no such danger has begun to threaten us.

The gates which have stood open wide have not been unguarded.

Mr. President, if symptoms of decay in the character of our people should appear, it will not be from "race deterioration due to the influence of immigration." If our people should deteriorate, their morals become corrupt, and their character fall from its present high standard, the influences bringing about so dire a calamity will be found in the idleness and luxury of the very rich, the aping of foreign manners and customs, the evil example of titled adventurers, greed for public notoriety, and to skepticism and the neglect of religious duties.

These and the enervating effect of governmental paternalism may in time threaten the ruin of our country. I do not believe that such can be. But for such ruin, if it should ever come—if in the places where our temples stand the "lean wolf shall unmolested make her lair"—these patient, peaceable, hard-working, frugal immigrants will not be responsible therefor.

When "civic honor and public spirit died," then only did the thronging Goths and Vandals trample Rome; "then only did the barbarians come, as the carrion kite drops from the India sky on the dead beast of the jungle."

Mr. President, over against The Unguarded Gates of the poet Aldrich, so dramatically and forcefully presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, I can not forbear to contrast the glowing words of Emma Lazarus, a daughter of the "Scattered Nation," in her poem addressed to the "New Colossus"—Bartholdi's statue of Liberty Enlightening the World:

> Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
> With conquering limbs astride from land to land;
> Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
> A mighty woman, with a torch whose flame
> Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
> Mother of Exiles. From her beacon hand
> Flows world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command
> The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
> "Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp," cries she,
> With silent lips; "give me your tired, your poor,
> Your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free.
> * * * * *
> Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost, to me;
> I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Immigration, I joined the committee in reporting favorably the bill that is now under consideration. I believe it is just and proper as a matter of self-protection that there should be some restriction upon immigration. Those immigrants who are paupers, who are unsound in body or unsound in mind, who are morally and physically unfit to enter this country should be excluded.

The bill only aims to cover a part of the ground. It simply seeks to enforce what is known as the literary test. It simply provides that immigrants who are over 14 years of age shall be required to read and write some language, either that of their own country, the land of their nativity, or of some other country. This is a fair and reasonable test as far as it goes.

It may be conceded that perhaps in some cases it will work a hardship; that sometimes there are good and healthy immigrants, fit to enter this country and become good members of society, who could not pass this test. But it is very difficult in a matter of general legislation to fit all cases. We have to legislate upon general lines and under general principles, and so we can not at all times reach and meet individual cases. Whatever few cases of hardship there may be are more than made up by the great advantages that will accrue to the country from a restriction such as is proposed. I want to disabuse the Senate of the idea that seems to be implied by the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] that the bill is inspired by anything of an A. P. A. nature, or any opposition to the Catholic Church. Nothing of that kind ever entered my mind, and I do not think anything of the kind entered the minds of the committee.

Mr. President, I do not care about entering into any particular discussion of the merits of the bill more than to state my views in regard to it. I propose rather to make a brief recapitulation or résumé of the immigration to this country during the past years of the Republic, and the effect it has had upon the institutions of this country.

Mr. President, the darker and more unpromising features of the immigration problem have been presented on this floor in eloquent and vivid language. I shall not undertake to question or contradict anything that has been said in favor of restrictive legislation. I shall content myself, and feel that I have done my duty, in presenting to the Senate the brighter and more promising side of the problem, and in calling your attention to the substantial and important benefits that have accrued to our country from the continued flow of immigrants to our shores. By having both sides presented, you will be better able to divest yourselves of all prejudice, better able to judge impartially, and, above all, better able to legislate wisely on a matter of so much importance.

The question should be considered in its economic, its political, its social, and its ethnic features. Our own experience should be scanned and studied, for it will furnish us much information and many valuable lessons. We have been, to a large extent, a nation of immigrants, and a large share of our history is a history of immigration. No nation of modern times has had such a varied and extended experience in this field.

The chief factors in our extraordinary growth and development have been our free system of government, our abundant supply of cheap and fertile lands, and the immense immigration to our shores. The first two have brought about, absorbed, and utilized the third. And the three combined have been a trio, in force and magnitude, such as no other nation ever possessed. Ample space, ample freedom, and ample numbers have given us a force and momentum of growth unknown and unheard of in any other nation, and the evidences of it are palpable on all sides.

It is estimated that from 1783 till 1820 about 250,000 immigrants settled in the country. Our entire population at the latter period was, according to the census then taken, 9,633,822—scarcely 200,000 more than our foreign-born population in 1890. Since that time, up to the beginning of the present year, 18,022,785 immigrants have come to this country. It is claimed that these figures are too high because no account has been taken of immigrants who, having gone back on a visit to their native land, have, on their return, landed a second time at our ports. But whatever discrepancy there may be on this score is more than counterbalanced by the fact that no account has been kept of the immigration through or from Canada since 1885. I append to my remarks a table of the yearly immigration since 1820. It shows a continued and incessant though fluctuating flow.

In 1890, out of a total population of 62,622,250, 9,249,547 were foreign born, 8,085,019 were natives whose parents were both foreign born, and 3,418,656 were natives with one foreign-born parent. It thus appears that 20,753,222, or about a third of our population, was at this time foreign born or directly of foreign parentage. If the same ratio of increase be applied to our entire volume of immigration since 1820—in all 18,022,785—we have evidently had as a result of the same 15,753,737 native born with both parents of foreign birth, and 6,661,071 native born with one parent of foreign birth, or a total of 40,437,593 of foreign immigrants and their children of the first generation.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate to read it, but shall append to my remarks a table which states in detail the countries from whence all our immigrants have come. Only a small proportion of them have belonged to the learned professions or been skilled laborers. The great body have been small farmers, small tradesmen, and agricultural and other unskilled laborers. Nearly all of them have been from the ranks of the common people, the toiling masses of humanity. People of rank and of wealth have little occasion or desire to emigrate, nor, indeed have they been desirable in a country progressing under conditions such as ours.

We have needed men to dig our canals, to build our railroads, to open and exploit our mines, to clear our vast forests, to open, develop, and reduce to a state of cultivation our vast expanse of untilled land; in short, to perform the toil and drudgery and to bear the trials and misfortunes incident to the development of a new and unsettled country. This want has in a large measure been supplied by our foreign-born immigrants. In this field they have not been hostile usurpers, but have merely occupied ground that has most willingly been accorded to them by the native born. And this toiling, struggling mass of humanity, charged to a large extent with the drudgery of our progress and civilization, viewed from an economic and financial standpoint has added millions to the wealth and capital of our country. An immigrant increases our wealth in a twofold way—by the money he brings into the country and by his value as a laborer and producer of wealth.

The average amount of money brought by an immigrant has been variously estimated at from $10 to $100. There are no exact or complete statistics on the subject. I think that on the whole, during all the past, $50 would be a low, safe, and moderate estimate for each immigrant. But his chief value has been his productive labor capacity. Different estimates are put upon this. Friedrich Kapp, a former commissioner of immigration in the State of New York, estimated the economic or labor value of an immigrant at from $1,000 to $1,200. Dr. William Farr, a former head of the statistical department of the registrar-general's office, in England, estimates it at $875. Dr. Becker, the head of the German statistical office, estimates it at from $200 to $225, and Edward Young, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in 1871, in his special report on immigration made in that year, makes this estimate and statement:

From the foregoing considerations, therefore, the sum of $800 seems to be the full average capital value of each immigrant. At this rate, those who landed upon our shores during the year just closed added upward of $285,000,000 to our national wealth, while during the last half century the increment from this source exceeds $6,243,880,800. It is impossible to make an intelligent estimate of the value to the country of those foreign-born citizens who brought their educated minds, their cultivated tastes, their skill in the arts, and their inventive genius. In almost every walk of life their influence has been felt. Alike in the fearful ordeal of war and in the pursuits of peace, in our legislative halls, and in the various learned professions, the adopted sons of America have attained eminence. Among the many who rendered timely aid to our country during the late war, it may seem invidious to mention a single name, except for the purpose of illustration. In the year 1839 there arrived at the port of New York, in the steamship British Queen, which sailed from the port of London, a Swedish immigrant, better known as Capt. John Ericsson. What was his value to the country, as estimated on the 9th day of March, 1862? Was it eight hundred, eight hundred thousand, or eight million of dollars?

The average of these estimates is about $720. But conceding that even this is too high, surely $500 would be a very low estimate of the money brought and the economic value of each immigrant over 14 and under 40 years of age. About 70 per cent are within this age limit, and 70 per cent of our immigration amounts to 12,615,949. At $500 per head the total money or economic value of our immigration equals $6,307,974,500, which is $3,000,000,000 in excess of the value of the entire product of our gold and silver mines from April, 1792, till the end of the year 1894, as estimated by the Director of the Mint. And in this connection let it be noted that these immigrants have been among the chief labor factors in the production of this vast volume of mineral wealth.

The rapid settlement and development of our country and its marvelous increase in wealth and in population is in a large measure due to our extraordinary immigration. The immigrants have settled mainly in the Northern States. In 1860, the year before the great rebellion, our foreign-born population amounted to 4,138,697, and out of this number 3,845,443 were settled in the States that were not in rebellion. Allowing the same proportion of natives of foreign parentage to the foreign born as is given by the census of 1890, there must have been in 1860, in the Northern States, 3,361,297 natives with both parents of foreign birth, and 1,417,563 natives with one parent of foreign birth, or a total of 8,624,308 of foreign birth and of direct foreign parentage. And this total was 41 per cent of the entire population of the loyal States.

The entire immigration to this country from 1793 till July 1, 1861, was 5,383,508, and nearly all of it had settled in the loyal States. These immigrants and their children had, during this period, by their labor and industry produced and created a large portion of the wealth in these States. While no statistics can be found on this point, yet I have no doubt that on the eve of the great rebellion the proportion of the substantial wealth of the North produced by the immigrants and their descendants was equal to the proportion of their number then living. And it was this volume of wealth and numbers resulting from our foreign immigration that gave the North its great preponderance and made it more than a match for the South in men and in resources, and enabled it to preserve and perpetuate the integrity of the Union. Had there been no more immigration to the North than there was to the South since 1793 the two sections would have been nearer on a parity with each other and the struggle would have been more prolonged and more doubtful. And had the wealth and numbers of the immigrants and their children been a part of the South instead of the North the days of a united country might have been numbered.

It was not so much the immigrants who fought in our ranks on land and sea—they bore their share and did their duty as became them—nor so much the gift of the immigrant John Ericsson—his little Monitor—that gave us the ascendency as the force, the momentum, the irresistible impact of half a century of immigration. It was this gathered force, gathered in the bosom, and infused with the spirit, the inspiration, and the love of a great nation that hung like a threatening cloud—like a pall—over the scheme for the disruption of the Union. Not only did the immigrants and their children form an important factor in the suppression of the great rebellion, but even in the days of the Revolution, when the great Republic was first brought into being and was in its infancy, they were a most important element of our success. A large portion of the Continental Army was of foreign birth, indeed the very backbone of the men in the ranks were of that class. The historian Lecky says:

No troops had shown themselves more courageous, more patient, and more devoted than the Pennsylvania line. Its privates and noncommissioned officers consisted chiefly of immigrants from the north of Ireland.

From an ethnologic and social standpoint, immigration has, beyond a fair question, infused much vital force of a better kind into the being of the nation. The immigrant has not been a mere inert labor machine, but he has also been a physical, a moral, and a mental factor, that has been responsive, and has brought accessions to the intellectual and moral make-up and instincts of the nation. We are an English-speaking people, of English texture and origin, but of a more cosmopolitan character, of more pronounced elements of strength and energy, and with a greater concentration of force and vigor than was possessed by the English of the England that gave us birth, or even by the English of today. In the eyes of the universal observant world, the Yankee is never confounded with the Englishman, nor is he ever placed in the rear rank. It took England more than fifteen hundred years to produce the Englishmen of the colonists. She began with the Celts, and these, according to Professor Huxley, were only an earlier edition, a more primitive product of the great Teutonic or Germanic race. These are his views on this important question:

All accounts which have been handed down to us by the Romans and the Greeks of the physical character of the Celtic-speaking people known to them, and whom they called Gauls or Kelts, agree in ascribing to these terrible enemies of theirs a tall stature, fair hair, of a reddish or yellow tinge, blue eyes, and fair skins. Such were the Gauls whom Cæsar conquered; such were the Gauls who settled in Asia Minor, to whom the epistle to the Galatians was written; such, again, were the Britons with whom Cæsar fought in northeastern Britain. But all the ancient authors give exactly the same account of the physical character of the ancient Germans. There is not a doubt that they, also, were tall, blue-eyed, fair-haired, and fair-skinned; so, without doubt, were all the other Teutonic-speaking people, whether Angles, Saxons, Danes, or Norsemen. So close was the physical resemblance of the Celts and the Teutons, who in the early days of the Roman Empire inhabited the right and the left banks of the Rhine, that it was and is a matter of discussion whether particular rights belonged to the one division or the other. And we hear of Celtic tribes who tried to pass themselves off as of German origin, an imposture which could not have been attempted had any clear physical difference existed between the two stocks.—Pall Mall Gazette, January 10, 1870.

These primitive Celts of Great Britain were, by language—which to some extent represented distinct traits of character—divided into two dialects at the time of the Roman invasion, the Cymric, spoken in England, and the Gaelic, spoken in Ireland. Neither of these dialects were of kin or affinity to any English or Teutonic dialects. While the greater portion of the Celts of England and Ireland were of Germanic origin, there was a considerable element of dark-skinned, black-eyed, dark-haired people found in southwestern England and in certain parts of Ireland, especially the south and west. These are the so-called Milesians, and these are the same as the primitive people of southern France and Spain. In France they were called Basques and in Spain Iberians.

While the language of these people has been lost, their blood has maintained itself among the English race, and is the basis of the darker element among our people. Our earliest forefathers, then, were a mixture of Teutonic and Iberian Celts, in which the former element preponderated. Then came an early infusion of Scandinavian or Germanic origin, called Picts, located in the north of Scotland. This was succeeded by the great Roman invasion under Julius Cæsar. The Romans never occupied Ireland, but were in possession of England for upward of 400 years, and when they departed they had neither impressed their blood nor their language upon the natives of the country. The people were still Celts, speaking two dialects, and of a twofold origin.

Then for over five hundred years there was an outpouring, an invasion, and an infusion from northwestern Germany and Scandinavia of Angles, Saxons, Jutes, Danes, and Norsemen, in the order named, and all of them branches of the great Teutonic family. These invaders infused much of their blood and all of their language into the native Celts. It was during these years of invasion and conquest that the language of the invaders—the Anglo-Saxon—the mother of our present English, became the language of the country, and it was also during these years that that amalgamation of races took place which gave us the prototype of the Englishman of Elizabeth and Oliver Cromwell. The new language and the new race, thus formed, has ever since remained in the ascendant, and did not succumb to the Norman invasion. The Normans—a people of mixed Gaelic and Norse blood—conquered, and for centuries bore rule, yet they never impressed their blood nor their language in any material degree upon the native races.

But the Normans succeeded in fastening their system of government—feudalism, with all its complications and drawbacks—upon the English people, the traces of which, well marked and defined, remain to this day. Norman architecture, Norman land tenures, Norman jurisprudence, and a Norman gentry and nobility are the legacy of the Norse-Celts. But they also gave the English this legacy: a spirit of resistance to tyranny, a spirit of aggressiveness and belligerency, and a spirit of conquest and imperialism.

We must never forget that it was the Norman barons that forced Magna Charta from King John, and that it was their descendants that inspired and consummated the English revolution of 1688, which, for the first time, settled and made clear the bulwarks of English liberty and the underlying principles of the English constitution. They mapped out and fortified the true ground of constitutional liberty the world over.

Native Celts, liberally infused and amalgamated with Germanic races and duly tempered and hardened by the Normans, constituted the ethnic make-up of the English people who colonized these shores. They were the concentration and quintessence of the Saxon and Celt, the Norman and the Norseman. A blending of all these made the mightiest nation on the face of the earth; and our vast immigration has only measurably enlarged, broadened, and deepened the process. The earlier grafting was upon a Celtic stock; this later grafting has been upon an English stock of the seventeenth century. In both cases the grafts are from the same source, but the Germanic races of the nineteenth century are as much superior in culture and intelligence, in capacity for self-government and refinement to those who succeeded the Romans in Britain as the English of the seventeenth century were superior to the native Celts who confronted Julius Cæsar. There has been in this century a finer graft upon a better stock, and surely the result is a nobler tree.

I have compiled and shall append to the printed copy of my remarks a table, classifying our immigration by races. From this table it appears that the blood of nearly 15,000,000 of Germanic people has been infused into the heart and loins of the American people. And these immigrants have not come to these shores, as their ancestors did to the Celts of Britain, as a scourge, as freebooters, and as pirates, but they have come on a mission of peace, to participate with us and to aid us in evolving from the great undeveloped resources of this country a mighty nation, mighty in wealth and numbers, and above all mighty and noble in the make-up and texture of its people. The new blood is transfused into the old. The sluggishness of ease and plenty is quickened by the unrest of limited opportunities and honest poverty.

The immigrant Nikola Tesla transmits and guides the unutilized force of the American Niagara. In the great realm of human development the one is the lesser though necessary complement of the other. It can not in fairness be said that this great Germanic immigration has been of other than great advantage to our country. The immigrants, however seared and benumbed they may have become from the environment of the land of their birth, have no sooner landed on American soil than they have, intuitively and as if by inspiration, responded in full measure to the intellectual, moral, and political instincts and requirements of the nation, and have become thoroughly assimilated to all that is good and progressive among our people, and the children of these immigrants have become the most intense and emphatic of all Americans within our borders.

But while all this is admitted as to the Germanic races, it is said that people of other and inferior races, wholly unfit for American institutions and wholly unfit for self-government, flock to our shores. And Russians, Poles, Hungarians, and Italians are cited as samples of these races. He who belittles and affects to despise these races knows little of their history and ethnic make-up.

The Italians were a great people in art, literature, and statecraft while our English ancestors were still in a state of barbarism, and though they afterwards, through various causes, sank to a low level, they have in our own day and generation, through many adverse circumstances, restored their country to a higher and better level than it ever occupied before and placed it in the rank of the great nations of the world. The poorer classes are still suffering from some of the evils of the past and it may take a little time for them to become fully emancipated, but the innate vigor of the race will soon dispel all the foggy mists of the past.

The blood that flowed in the veins of Virgil and Dante, Raphael and Michael Angelo, Columbus and Napoleon, Cavour, Garibaldi, Victor Emmanuel, and Crispi surely will not contaminate our English of many strains. And the Russians—Tartar, Slav, and German as they are—who dare accuse them of being an effeminate or stagnant people? Scarcely more than two centuries ago they occupied the outer verge of Europe and the frozen zone along the polar belt of Asia, remote from the navigable sea, and with ports only at Archangel and on the Caspian Sea. Europe looked upon them as a race of barbarous Tartars. To-day their country covers a full third of Europe and almost half of Asia and extends from the Gulf of Finland on the west to the Gulf of Vladivostock on the east, and from the Polar Ocean on the north to Persia, British India, and China on the south. A people who, a half a century ago, on a narrow peninsula in the Black Sea, were almost a match for the united power of England and France, and who to-day are the arbiters of the peace of Europe, and who have, in the hour of our greatest need, given us their effective moral support—will the blood of such a people render us effeminate or denude us of virile vigor and manhood?

And Poland—poor, unfortunate, and dismembered Poland, victim of a worthless nobility and an unkind fate, hemmed in and garroted by the great powers, with many of your best sons and daughters in exile. It can be said of these people, as has been said of the Irish, they have been greater in many other lands than their own. As a nation they have been a failure, but as a people they are full of energy, ability, and fire.

Then we come to the Hungarians—those sons of the ancient Huns, who once overran and held the civilized parts of Europe in their grasp and afterwards stood as a barrier between Europe and the unspeakable Turk. They were a sturdy, headlong, and dominant race in those pregnant days of the past, and such they are still. To-day they are the backbone and furnish the statesmen and the statesmanship for the Austrian Empire. They have infused vigor, energy, and renewed life into the old decrepit House of Hapsburg. They once pined for a separate existence as a nation, but to-day they bear rule in realms greater than they hoped for in the days of Kossuth. The people of this race will never debase our Anglo-Saxon blood, nor render it torpid and stagnant.

And who can say, with his attention fixed upon the Balkan Peninsula, that the Slavs are unfit for free government? Less than a quarter of a century ago the Bulgarians were vassals and serfs of the Turks, and had been such for centuries past. As the outcome of a great war and through the treaty of Berlin they regained their freedom and were erected into an independent state, under the form of a limited monarchy, with a parliament of their own choice. In spite of the machinations of Russia and in spite of the misfortune of imbecile princelings placed at their head, from the days of their freedom till the present moment the Bulgarian people have made rapid and solid strides, politically and economically, both as a people and as a nation, and they have succeeded in placing their Government on such an enduring basis that even the murder of their ablest statesman caused no political upheaval and left no opening for the entrance of the wily Muscovite.

They stand to-day, a young nation, promising, ambitious, fiery, and full of hope, on the outer battlements of Christian Europe, as palpable evidence of the fact that sound, vigorous blood will survive and overcome the servitude of centuries. Who fears contamination from such a people as these? A strain of the irrepressible, hot, riotous blood of these nations of southern Europe infused into our ethnic make-up will certainly do no harm, and may be productive of much good. It may infuse into our stolid and phlegmatic Germanic blood an element of vim, force, and fire now absent, and may give it an effervescence of tone and temper that may dispel much of the prosaic in the drudgery of life. What Professor Huxley has said of the darker people of Spain, Portugal, and southern France is apt and germane in this connection, and I can not forbear to quote it. These are his words:

> When the genealogy of the English people is thoroughly worked out, we find that our forefathers are reduced to two stocks—the one, a lightly made, short, dark-complexioned people, the Iberians, who, as far as they can be traced back, talked Euskaldunac, a language which has not the least resemblance to any other spoken in Europe; the other, a tall, big-limbed, fair people, who, as far as we can trace them, have always talked some form or other of the languages of the great Aryan family to which German, Latin, Greek, Persian, and Sanskrit belong, and of which the Celtic tongues are outlying members. In everything which constitutes a race these Aryan or Celtic and Teutonic nations are of one race. In every particular by which races of mankind differ the Iberians and the Aryans are of different races.
> Thus English political ethnology offers two problems:
> 1. Is there any evidence to show that the Iberians and the Aryans differ in their capacity for civilization or in their intellectual and moral powers? All I can say is, that I know of none. Whether in Greece or Rome, in modern Italy, France, Germany, or England, the dark stock and the light have run neck and neck together.
> 2. Is there any evidence to show that there is what may be called a political difference between the Celtic Aryan and the Germanic Aryan? I must say once more that I can find none. And one of the keenest observers who ever lived, and who had the opportunity of comparing the Celt and the German side by side—I mean Julius Cæsar—tells us especially that the Gauls in former days were better men than the Germans; that they had been corrupted by contact with civilization, and that even in his day the races who held the Black Forest in possession were the equals of the Germans in frugality, hardiness, and every virtue of man or warrior. Put side by side with this the picture of the Saxon when, England fairly won, he sank into the slothful enjoyment of his possessions; and after the Conquest fell so low that the invective of Giraldus Cambrensis against the Saxons of his day as idle, worthless fellows, cowards and liars, fit only to be drudges and menials, reads just like an extract from an English or American leading article against the low Irish. Do not let what I have said mislead you into the notion that I disbelieve in the importance of race. I am a firm believer in blood, as every naturalist must be, and I entertain no doubt that our Iberic forefathers have contributed a something to the making of the modern Englishman totally distinct from the elements which he has inherited from his Aryan forefathers. But which is the Aryan element and which the Iberian I believe no man can tell, and he who affirms that any quality needful for this, that, or the other form of political organization is present in the one and absent in the other makes a statement which I believe to be as baseless in natural science as it is mischievous in politics.—Pall Mall Gazette, January 10, 1870.

It may, however, be urged that our great immigration has depressed, or will depress, the price of labor. This might be true if American labor was content to remain in the rut of mere labor; but our experience in the East and all over the country has demonstrated that the large influx of foreign labor has led American labor to seek higher pursuits and more profitable callings. The result has been, on the whole, the promotion of American labor to greater and more enlarged spheres of usefulness. When the American girl was crowded out of the kitchen and dining room by her foreign-born sister, she entered the schoolroom as a teacher, the store as a cashier or saleswoman, and the countinghouse as an accountant or bookkeeper; and when the American boy was crowded out of the factory, the mine, and the rolling mill by his foreign-born brother, he became a captain or a lieutenant of industry, and sought and assumed higher callings in various directions. And the process that has thus been going on between the native and the foreign born has also been going on among the foreign-born themselves.

High wages and good living under the sunshine of American institutions have rendered an earlier crop of foreign-born laborers fit and anxious to be crowded out of their labor sphere and placed on a higher industrial level by a later arrival of foreign-born labor. And thus it has come to pass that continued immigration, so far from depressing the scale of wages, has rather resulted in gradually promoting labor to a higher level. And this is a great gain.

Brute toil and the almighty dollar is not the chief aim of our existence. All who are fit to survive, fit to stay in the ranks of a great nation, by their very nature aspire to a higher plane of development; and the space above, in the social and economic world, results in a large degree from the pressure below. The crude ore becomes pig iron, and the latter becomes the finished engine. I shall not, however, take up your time any further on this feature of the case, but shall content myself with quoting from the report of the Immigration Investigation Commission for the year 1895 the following evidence as to the effect of immigration upon wages:

The influence of immigration on wages is too large and complex a subject for the commission to discuss with any fullness at the present stage of its investigations. The opinion is widespread that wages have fallen since the great tide of immigration set in. The facts do not bear this out. The statistics of immigration already given (see page 8) show that large immigration has almost invariably been coincident with (not necessarily the cause of) prosperity, and the report of the Senate subcommittee of 1891, which was charged with the duty of ascertaining the course of prices and wages of labor, shows further that wages have been highest during these same periods of prosperity. Not only, according to this report, have wages steadily increased during the last three decades of steadily increasing immigration, but they have been the highest during those years in which immigration has been the largest (page 10).

But finally the objection is made that the immigrants furnish an undue proportion of criminals. A superficial examination of our statistics may lead to this opinion, but a more careful consideration and study of the subject in all its aspects makes it plain that such opinion is incorrect and unfounded, and that the immigrants do not, as a matter of fact, furnish more than their proportionate share of criminals, and, in many localities and places, even less.

A short time ago I requested the Hon. Hastings H. Hart, secretary of the board of corrections and charities of the State of Minnesota (a most excellent authority), to investigate this subject thoroughly, and to give me the result of such examination.

In compliance with this request, Mr. Hart has sent me the following letter, with accompanying tables, which demonstrate and make plain that there is no basis, in fact, for the common notion that foreign-born citizens furnish an undue proportion of the criminal population of the country. I quote his letter, which speaks for itself, and which makes it evident and palpable that the immigrants are as law abiding as the native born:

BOARD OF CORRECTIONS AND CHARITIES, STATE CAPITOL,
St. Paul, Minn., April 27, 1896.

DEAR SIR: * * * The statistics which are published showing the ratios of crime are entirely misleading as applied to foreign immigration, for the reason that the prisoners are compared with the entire population of the country—men, women, and children. The children furnish practically no criminals and are nearly all credited to the native-born population, so that the children of foreign-born parents are credited to the native-born population and used against their own parents.

Of the prisoners of the United States 95 per cent are above the age of 15 years and 84 per cent are above the age of 21 years; so that the children ought to be left out of the count. The women of the country furnish only 9 per cent of the criminals, and they may be left out of the count.

In Table No. 1, which I inclose herewith, I have compared the male prisoners of the United States with the males of voting age, and the result is just the opposite from that which is obtained by comparing the prisoners with the males of voting age.

The native-born population of the United States in 1890 numbered 53,390,600; the native-born prisoners, 65,977; ratio, 1,235 to a million. The foreign population numbered 9,231,381; the foreign-born prisoners, 16,352; ratio, 1,744 to a million, an apparent excess of foreigners over natives of 41 per cent.

But the number of native-born males of voting age was 12,591,852; native-born male prisoners 61,637; ratio 4,895 to a million. The number of foreign-born males of voting age was 4,848,459; foreign-born male prisoners 14,237; ratio 3,235 to a million; showing an actual excess of natives over foreigners of 50 per cent.

In the table I have omitted the Southern States, for the reason that they contain only 7.5 per cent of the foreign-born prisoners in the United States; but if the Southern States were included, it would make the showing worse for the native born on account of the large number of colored prisoners.

It will be seen from the table that the men of foreign birth furnish less prisoners proportionally than those of native birth in each division of the Northern States, as follows—(see columns 2 and 3 of Table No. 1):

Number of prisoners to each million males of voting age.

	Foreign born.	Native born.
Northern States	3,240	4,445
North Central division	1,915	3,550
North Atlantic division	4,615	5,205
Western division	4,360	6,410

By reference to Table No. 1 it will be seen that the showing is in favor of the foreign born in every Northern State and Territory except Maine, New Hampshire, Arizona, and New Mexico. While the showing is more favorable to the native born in the Northern States than for the whole country, the ratio of the native-born criminals is still 37 per cent larger than that of the foreign born.

If we compare the foreign born with the pure native born—i. e., the native born of native parents—the showing is more favorable to the native stock. (See columns 2 and 5 of the table.)

Number of prisoners to each million males of voting age.

	Foreign born.	Native born of native parents.
Northern States	3,240	4,075
North Atlantic division	4,360	4,135
North Central division	1,915	3,715
Western division	4,615	6,050

In the North Atlantic division alone the ratio of foreign-born prisoners exceeds that of the pure native born. The excess is found in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania; but in Rhode Island, New York, and New Jersey the showing is in favor of the foreign born. In the Central and Western divisions the record is in favor of the foreign born in every case except Arizona and New Mexico.

If we compare native born with native born the result is as follows—(see columns 3, 4, and 5, Table 1):

Number of prisoners to each million males of voting age.

	Total native born.	Native born; parents foreign.	Native born; one or both parents native.
Northern States	4,445	5,665	4,075
North Atlantic division	5,205	8,510	4,135
North Central division	3,550	3,005	3,715
Western division	6,410	7,645	6,050

Here there is a marked diversity between the different sections of the country. The children of native-born parents show about the same ratio of criminals in the North Atlantic and the North Central States; but the children of foreign parents show nearly three times as high a ratio in the North Atlantic States as in the North Central States. In every one of the North Atlantic States the showing is against the children of foreign parents; but in every one of the North Central States except Illinois and North Dakota the showing is in favor of the children of foreign-born parents. Of the Western States, five show against the native born and six against the foreign born.

The difference in the showing in different parts of the country is due to the character of the immigration. (See Table No. 2.) We can not compare the criminals with the adults of each country for the reason that the census does not so divide them, and it does not make very much difference as long as we compare foreign with foreign.

The following is the number of prisoners to each million of inhabitants of the same nationalities from the principal countries which send immigrants to this country: Mexico, 7,758; Italy, 3,047; Ireland, 2,970; England, 2,106; Hungary, 2,082; Scotland, 1,977; Canada, 1,611; Austria, 1,403; Germany, 1,001; Denmark, 852; Sweden, 730; Norway, 644; Bohemia, 304.

The result is, as will be seen from the two tables, that those States which have a large Irish and Italian immigration—Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey—show a high ratio of crime among the foreign-born immigrants, while those which have had a large proportion of Germans, Scandinavians, and Slavs, like Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nevada, and the Dakotas, show a low ratio of criminality among the foreign immigrants.

Not only that, but in the States of the North Central division the foreign born show a ratio of crime only a little more than one-half as large among the foreign born as among the native born, and the result is to bring the average of crime in these States very low. I believe that it may be said truthfully that Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North and South Dakota, and Nebraska have a smaller ratio of criminals to the population than any other territory of equal size or any other portion of equal numbers in the civilized world, and this immunity from crime is due to the high quality of the native and foreign immigration into these States, especially the foreign immigration.

I have no doubt that the excessive ratio of crime among the English-speaking immigrants is not due so much to the character of the nations from which they come as to the fact, of which there is uncontrovertible evidence, that known criminals have immigrated to America from those countries. I believe that the apparent decrease of crime in Great Britain is owing to this fact, in an appreciable measure.

The indiscriminate denunciation of foreign immigration is not only slanderous, but it is suicidal.

It will be easy for any experienced student of statistics to verify the figures which I present in the inclosed table.

I shall take pleasure in furnishing any additional information on request.

I am, Senator, yours, with high respect,

H. H. HART, Secretary.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Washington, D. C.

Many of the immigrants who come to our shores are unskilled laborers of the poorer class. Oppressed by poverty at home, they come here to better their condition, and, above all, to find a better and brighter future for their children. Many of them enter, on their arrival, the field of drudgery and labor, at the foot of the ladder, in our large cities—a place cheerfully accorded to them by the native born. Toil and drudgery, such as is theirs, too often seek relief in the flowing bowl, and this brings crimes of common grades in its wake. This is an incident and misfortune of labor, in the lower strata, the world over, among native as well as foreign born. It comes not from the innate depravity of the race, but from the environment and misfortune of certain classes of its members.

Slums are the human excrescences of rapid and congested growth—an incident of even the highest state of civilization. All large cities have their slums among all nationalities the world over. And the poor, the profligate, and the unfortunate—the men of sheer brute toil, whether native or foreign born—make up a large quota of the slum population. And while the proportion of foreign born in the slums of our large cities may be great—by reason of the original environment and pinched poverty of the immigrants—yet, in numbers and in character the slums of our cities will bear favorable comparison with the slums of the great cities in other parts of the world.

We are all creatures of circumstances. Place these unfortunate sons of toil in the slums of a great city, whether they be native or foreign born, and they are apt in some measure to deteriorate, apt to become drunkards and criminals. Place the same men on farms in the woodlands or on the broad prairies of the West, and they become prosperous and model farmers, and their children become full-fledged Americans to all intents and purposes, as though they were the descendants of generations of native born.

In conclusion, let me draw your attention for a brief moment from the slums of the great cities to the prairies and the woods of the great West. Fifty-five years ago Minnesota was a Territory—an undeveloped wilderness, the home of large bands of roving Indians, with but 6,000 white people within her borders. Eight years later she became a member of the American Union, with a population of over 150,000 people. In 1895, pursuant to a census then taken, she found herself with a population of 1,574,619 people, of whom 517,535 were of foreign birth and 573,783 were natives but of foreign parentage. In 1894 her assessed valuation was $642,903,651, and her permanent school and university fund was $11,746,187, and she expended during the year for educational purposes, in all, $3,945,645; and 337,761 pupils were enrolled in her common, graded, and high schools, 1,839 in her normal schools, and 1,828 students in her State university.

Out of all this population there were but 613 inmates in her State prison and State reformatory—the only places for confinement of adult criminals outside of the jails and workhouses—and out of this prison population 423 were native born, and 190 foreign born. And in the State reform school for incorrigibles and juvenile offenders there were 428 inmates, of whom 339 were native born, and 89 of foreign birth. No State can show a finer record than this; and the foreign born have a prison record better even than the native born. Such is Minnesota. And she is, to a large extent, under the sunshine and dew of her free institutions, the product of the industry, the perseverance, the frugality, and the thrift of her foreign-born citizens and their children. But she is entitled to all and more than all they have brought her.

They came there, most of them, poor and empty handed, with no capital but stout hearts and willing hands, but possessed of an intense desire and purpose to become good American citizens. She received them with open arms, as though they were to the manor born, and on a parity with her own people. And to-day, after the lapse of half a century, she can truly say that they have not betrayed the trust she reposed in them. As the good wife, though loving her mother, still gives her husband the uppermost place in her affections, so do the foreign-born sons and daughters of Minnesota, though loving the lands of their birth, still place her, and the great country of which she is a part, uppermost and foremost in their love and affection.

"They bear a love for the country of their adoption as if she were their daughter. Smoke her pipe in peace, bear her tomahawk in war."

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon from the Committee on Privileges and Elections February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

The pending question being on the amendment of Mr. TURPIE, to insert the word "not" before the word "entitled," and to strike out the last clause; so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, knowing that the Du Pont case would be before the Senate to-day, and having it somewhat in mind, I took up a morning paper and my eyes fell upon this startling headline: "The most marvelous thing in a century." I supposed, of course, that the article which followed referred to the marvelous, the most remarkable and strange occurrences which took place in the joint meeting of the members of the two houses of the legislature in the State of Delaware on the 9th day of May, 1895; and I confess that I was surprised when on reading the article I found it related only to a patent medicine.

The occurrences which took place on the 9th day of May, 1895, in the joint assembly of the State of Delaware constitute the most remarkable thing which has taken place in the last century. I do not know but that I ought to qualify that statement by saying that the arguments which have been used in the Senate to sustain the declared result on that day are even more remarkable; and I do not know but that I ought to qualify it further by saying that if the Senate, by a majority vote, dividing on party lines, should sanction what was declared to be the effect of that day's proceedings, it would be more marvelous still.

What was it that took place on that day? The legislature which met in January previous in the State of Delaware was charged with the duty of electing a United States Senator. The house consisted of 21 members when full and the senate consisted of 9 members. When the legislature came to ballot in the separate houses no election resulted from the ballots thus taken, and on the 16th day of January, I think, 1895, according to the United States statute, the members of the legislature of Delaware met in joint assembly for the purpose of proceeding to elect a Senator. They continued every day from that date until the 9th of May, 1895, meeting in joint assembly and balloting for a Senator without any result.

In the meantime, on the 9th day of April, the governor of Delaware, Joshua Marvil, died. By the constitution of Delaware, to which I shall allude more specifically hereafter, the speaker of the senate, William T. Watson, became the governor of the State, and from that day, the 9th of April, when he became governor of the State, he abandoned the exercise of any duties as senator or as speaker of the senate and assumed the duties and functions of governor of the State. He occupied the executive office. He had not been present in the senate during that whole month. He had not entered the joint assembly of the members of the two houses during that whole month.

On the 9th of May, a resolution having been passed for the final adjournment of the legislature to take place at 3 o'clock p. m. on that day, the joint convention met, having taken a recess from the day before, at 9 o'clock in the morning, and commenced balloting for a Senator, with the usual result, 29 votes cast, no one receiving more than 14, the other 15 being divided among several of the candidates; and it so balloted until 11 o'clock, when a recess was ordered for one hour.

During that morning William T. Watson occupied the executive office; did not come to the senate, did not come to the joint meeting of the members of the legislature; but upon the reassembling of that joint meeting, this governor of the State of Delaware entered the joint meeting of the members of the legislature, assumed to preside over it; did preside over it, assumed to vote in it; did vote in it for some 27 times, and upon each of those ballots Mr. Du Pont received 15 votes and the other candidates received, including the vote of the governor, 15 votes, this governor, acting as presiding officer of the joint meeting of the members, declaring in each instance that there was no election, as no one had received a majority of the votes cast, and when the hour of 3 o'clock came, declared the joint meeting adjourned without day, and the legislature adjourned.

For a hundred years in the State of Delaware it had never been supposed by anyone that a person occupying the position of governor, whether elected by the people or whether called to that position to fill a vacancy occurring by the death of the governor elected by the people, could take part in the senate of the State of Delaware or could be a senator. There had been nine instances in which the speaker of the senate had been called to occupy the position of governor owing to the death or resignation of the governor who had been elected by the people, and in no single instance upon any occasion had the person so called to occupy the position of governor acted as senator, occupied a seat in the senate, acted in a joint convention of the two houses, or a joint meeting of the members of the two houses, or cast any vote. I venture to say, and I think it will not be contradicted, that during that whole one hundred years it had never been supposed that he could do it. It had been the accepted understanding of every man who had occupied the position of governor under those circumstances that he could not do it, and the affidavits here show that on the morning of the 9th day of May, 1895, William T. Watson, occupying the position of governor of the State of Delaware, himself believed that he had no right to do it.

But something occurred during that hour of interval between the morning and noon session of the joint meeting which changed his mind and decided him to act. A member of the house who had been constantly voting for Mr. Addicks as Senator, upon the last day, a Republican, feeling that he could not take the responsibility of preventing an election of Senator in the State of Delaware, gave notice that he proposed in the joint meeting which was to assemble at 12 o'clock to vote for Mr. Du Pont, which would give him 15 votes, a majority of all the votes which had been cast in the joint meeting from the 9th day of April, 1895, to the 9th day of May, 1895. Then it was that Governor Watson was called upon to take a seat in the joint meeting and to vote, and thereby prevent an election; and it is in the sworn affidavits here that he said he could not do it, for he had no right to do it. He was then told that Chancellor Wolcott either had rendered a different opinion or Chancellor Wolcott himself informed him that it was his opinion that he could do so. So, against his own idea of what his duty was, in violation of his own idea of what his power was, he entered that joint meeting and cast his vote 27 times; and, assuming the presidency of the convention or meeting, declared that no election was had.

Mr. President, I venture to say, on this simple statement of the case, there was not only no man in Delaware who up to that hour believed that Governor Watson could do that thing, but until this effort to refine away the plain provisions of the constitution of Delaware occurred upon the consideration of this case there was no man in the United States who would have believed or did believe that Governor Watson could legally do this thing. Am I not justified, therefore, in saying that of all the remarkable performances which have ever occurred relating to the election of a United States Senator in the last century this is the most remarkable of all? The marvel of it will only be exceeded if this Senate allows such a usurpation, such a violation of constitutional law, such a wicked prostitution of power to prevail and prevent the seating in this body of Mr. Du Pont.

The debate in this case has taken a very wide range. The provisions of the Delaware constitution are perfectly plain. Upon looking at that with an unprejudiced eye it would admit of but one construction, and yet this debate has extended over all English and American law. The Constitution of the United States and the constitution of every State in the Union have been discussed with the utmost technicality and, I may say, with exceeding ingenuity. I shall not attempt to follow the Senators who have attempted to argue away and to argue out of sight the plain provisions of the constitution of Delaware by these ingenious, thinly spun, hair-splitting arguments upon the constitutions of other States and upon the Constitution of the United States.

Sometimes I have thought, Mr. President, that I should never be able to establish in this body the reputation of being a great constitutional lawyer, because to establish that reputation it seems to be thought necessary to be able to argue all day—one day, two days, or three days—upon questions which do not affect the main result, which do not affect the main question, and to show a wealth of learning and research which will impress not only this Senate but the entire country. I despair of ever being classed in the ranks of constitutional lawyers if that be necessary to constitute one. I have never learned to—

> A hair, 'twixt south and southwest side—

but I do think, as a lawyer, I can understand the plain provisions of the constitution of Delaware which are important to this case. Nay, I think that a layman, one who makes no claim to be learned in the law or distinguished as a constitutional lawyer, may read as he runs and can not err therein. It is only by refinement, by raising false issues, by attracting the attention of the Senate to matters not connected with this case, that there is any possibility of obscuring the result.

As every case contested in a judicial tribunal finally resolves itself into one or at the most two simple propositions over which the contention proceeds, so this case has resolved itself into two simple propositions. Those who claim that Mr. Du Pont was not elected must maintain that William T. Watson, on the 9th day of May, 1895, was not governor of the State of Delaware, or they must maintain that, admitting that on the 9th day of May William T. Watson was governor of the State of Delaware, the Senate has no right to inquire into that legal question as to whether he was or was not. It is to those points that I propose to address the few remarks which I shall make in favor of Mr. Du Pont's claim to a seat in the Senate.

I say, then, that Mr. Watson was a governor of the State of Delaware; and I think nothing shows more clearly the search, the earnest search, which those who oppose Mr. Du Pont's claim to be entitled to a seat here have made to discover what William

T. Watson was if he was not governor; and the very able, learned, and distinguished Senators who have argued this question do not seem to agree as to what he was. The very fact that they can not agree to my mind shows how futile and how untenable is the position that he was not a governor. I had supposed that there was only one kind of a governor in a State or that there could be but one kind of a governor; that a man who was entitled to perform all the functions of the office, that a man who took the oath required for a governor, that a man who exercised all the privileges and prerogatives pertaining to the office of governor, that a man who received the emoluments of the office, was a governor, and only such a man was a governor; and that no matter how he came to occupy the position, if those requisites were present, if he was capable of performing without limitation all the functions and exercising all the powers of the gubernatorial office, if he was entitled to enjoy all the prerogatives of that office, if he had sworn to execute that office, and if he received the salary and emoluments of that office, he was governor. There is no other distinction to be found in any law book, and those questions determine in every case whether a man is the officer that he claims to be.

But it seems that the Senators who have argued this case upon the other side have discovered a variety of governors. It would be amusing, if it were not so serious, to recapitulate the kinds of governors that they think may exist in a State. Counsel against the claim of Mr. Du Pont conceded that he was a governor, but called him an "ad interim governor." That is one kind of a governor which has been invented for this case. The journal of the convention has discovered another kind of a governor, "a speaker-governor," for in the journal of the convention it says: "The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the senate, preceded by Speaker-Governor Watson, attended by the clerk and sergeant-at-arms, proceeded to the hall of the house of representatives;" and "Speaker-Governor Watson directed the clerk to call the roll;" and "Speaker-Governor Watson declared the houses adjourned sine die."

Mr. VILAS. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. VILAS. I was just going to ask, has not the constitution of the State of Delaware a right to say what he should be and what he should be called?

Mr. PLATT. I will come to the constitution of the State of Delaware. The constitution of the State of Delaware only recognizes one kind of a governor, and I will show it thoroughly before I get through.

So we have the conceded governor by the counsel against Mr. Du Pont, called "ad interim governor"; we have a "speaker-gov ernor," according to the journal of the joint assembly; we have, according to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], a most astonishing kind of a governor—"a stop-gap governor"; we have, according to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], "a speaker of the senate who ad interim exercises the powers of governor"; and we have, according to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], "no governor at all, but a speaker, and only a speaker."

Mr. GRAY. Now give us what the constitution calls him.

Mr. PLATT. I trust the Senator will allow me to proceed in my own way.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not remarkable, Mr. President, that those who claim that William T. Watson was not to all intents and purposes governor of the State of Delaware should be driven to the strait of inventing these unheard-of governors, even to the idea which the Senator from Delaware is entitled, I think, to a patent on, the inventing of a "stop-gap governor"? As I said, it would be amusing if it were not so serious.

The constitution of the State of Delaware provides for the election of a governor by the people, who shall hold his office for four years, and it then provides, in section 14, that—

Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

Is there anything there which indicates that there may be two kinds, or three kinds, or four kinds of governors in the State of Delaware? But Senators say that because this language is used, "shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified," that that means that the person who at the time of the death of the governor happens to be the speaker of the senate does not become to all intents and purposes governor, but he simply exercises the office of governor. None of the Senators go so far as to say that he is in no sense a governor, except the Senator from Indiana, who says he is a speaker, nothing more, and that this language which I have read from the constitution of Delaware confers upon the speaker, upon that officer, the duty of discharging, while the vacancy continues, the duties of governor, but that he becomes in no sense the governor. Well, Mr. President, that meets the issue squarely. All the other theories that he is not a governor in the full sense, but a governor in a limited sense, an "ad interim governor," "a speaker-governor," "a stop-gap governor"—all those contentions, it seems to me, are simply evasions of the one issue here. The Senator from Indiana meets it boldly, if not successfully.

Senators say that the words "exercise the office of governor" are inconsistent with the idea that he is governor, and they seem very strangely to have overlooked the fact that in this very same constitution and in this very same article the words "exercise the office of governor" are used to denote the man who is elected governor. Section 5, article 3, is as follows:

No member of Congress nor person holding any office under the United States, or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

Does not that refer to the elected governor? Does it refer merely to a speaker who, upon the theory of the Senator from Indiana, has thrust upon him the obligation to perform the duties of governor and performs them ex officio? No. This section 5 uses the words "exercise the office of governor" synonymously with the phrase "hold the office of governor." It can not be held by any refinement of reasoning not to apply to the elected governor, and there is no distinction, therefore, to be drawn in this constitution of Delaware between an elected governor and a governor who, under the terms of the constitution, becomes governor in case of a vacancy. It is somewhat remarkable that this phrase has not attracted the attention of the Senators who hold that the words "exercise the office of governor" are incompatible with the idea that the man called upon to assume the position in case of a vacancy is the governor. I will read it again:

No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States, or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

Is not that the same thing as saying that no man holding any such office shall be governor—shall be elected governor? Does not this refer to the governor who may be elected? Unless Senators can resort to some more ingenious refinement of reasoning than they have yet resorted to, there is a large stumbling-block which they can not pass over and can not remove out of the way. The language is the same.

SEC. 14. Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office, etc.

SEC. 5. No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States, or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

But in the very language in the constitution, in section 14 of Article III, the plain implication is that there may be a governor of the State who is not elected by the people, and that the person who assumes the vacant place, who succeeds to the vacancy by reason of having been at the time when the vacancy occurred speaker of the Delaware senate, is a governor, though called to fill a vacancy, as truly as though elected by the people.

Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until—until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

Why did they put in "elected by the people" if the person who exercises the office is not as fully governor as a governor elected by the people? Why does it not say "until a governor shall be duly qualified"? If a speaker of the senate, occupying the office of governor is not a governor, then the words "elected by the people" are entirely surplusage. You will find that language repeated several times here—a plain implication, as the language to which I have heretofore alluded is a plain declaration—that the person, whoever he may be, who is called to the gubernatorial chair by reason of the death or resignation of the person filling it is governor.

If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

Why did it not say "until a governor shall be elected by the people and duly qualified"? If it had used that language there might possibly have been an opportunity to reason by implication that the only governor known to the State of Delaware was a governor elected by the people. If the speaker of the senate or the speaker of the house called to the gubernatorial chair were not the governor, then this language is entirely out of place.

I come now to the third phrase in section 14 of Article III:

If the person elected governor shall die, or become disqualified before the commencement of his term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, the person holding the office shall continue to exercise it until a governor shall be elected and duly qualified.

Plainly, Mr. President, the term "holding the office" is used synonymously with the term "exercise it," as it is used in section 5.

But here is another provision which I should like to have the Senators explain who say that a person coming to the gubernatorial chair by reason of the provisions of the constitution in case of the death of the governor is not a governor. It is the last clause in section 14.

Mr. GRAY. Of what article?

Mr. PLATT. Of Article III.

The governor shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature.

We have in the commencement of section 14, Article III, the provision that—

Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate, or upon a further vacancy happening in the office by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified.

Now, can not the governor who has been called upon because he was speaker of the senate, or, in the next instance, called upon because he was speaker of the house, be removed for inability by two-thirds of the members of the legislature in each branch? If so, it is declared here in the constitution in plain words and terms which can not be overcome that the person so called to the office of governor is governor.

The governor—

It makes no distinction how he came to be governor—shall not be removed from his office for inability but with the concurrence of two-thirds—

And it is already provided in the section that in the case of the inability to discharge the office of the governor who has come from the speaker's chair to the gubernatorial chair the speaker of the house of representatives shall be governor.

I do not think I need go further, Mr. President. These provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware are simple; they are plain; they are not capable of more than one construction, because the words "exercise the office," when applied to the person who was speaker but who becomes governor, are the same words which are used in section 5, referring to a governor who is elected by the people. In the last clause any kind of a governor is referred to, or rather it precludes the idea that there can be but one kind of governor in the State of Delaware, and when the inability of that governor occurs he can be removed by the concurrent vote "of two-thirds of all the members of each branch of the legislature," and not otherwise.

It is a refinement of ingenuity—I was going almost to say unworthy, I will say it is out of place in this body—to deny that the State of Delaware has a governor to-day, or that he is any less a governor than if he had been elected by the people. The constitution declares that he shall be governor when it declares that he shall exercise the office of governor. The only difference between him and an elected governor is in the length of his term of office. The elected governor holds his office for four years. The governor who comes to the chair because at the time of the death of the elected governor he occupied the position of speaker of the senate holds his office until another governor has been elected and qualified. That may be a longer or shorter time. In the State of Delaware it has been as much, I think, in some instances as two years and a half; in some instances it has only been a few months. It might be more than four years. The person called to the gubernatorial chair under this provision of the constitution that the person occupying the position of speaker of the senate at the time of the death of the governor shall become governor may have a longer term than the elected governor. He may be five years in his place, because under the provisions of the constitution in case there is a contest he would hold until the end of the contest, and if the contest extended over the whole four years of the term of governor he would hold that four years in addition to the months or years that he had held in consequence of the death of the preceding governor. Is there anything in that which detracts from the dignity, the power, or the character of the governorship, assumed, cast upon the person who was speaker of the senate?

There is another provision here. I do not turn to it at this moment, but I can state what it is. It may so happen under the constitution of the State of Delaware, and has so happened, that the person thus called upon under the constitution to become the governor of the State is required to exercise his office after his senatorial term shall have expired. I can not turn to the provision, but there will be no controversy on that subject.

Now, if in the person who becomes governor it be only the casting of certain powers and duties upon another officer, how is it that the person holding that office must, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, continue to hold it after his term of office expires? If anything were needed to make the contention perfectly conclusive that it is the man who becomes governor and not the officer who is called upon to discharge the functions of governor, it seems to me that this fact is irresistible.

I had wondered how that argument would be met. I had wondered how the Senators who said that there was no governor of the State of Delaware under such circumstances would meet it. I do not recollect that the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] attempted to meet that argument. He said, indeed, there was no governor in Delaware to-day; that there was simply a speaker there who was charged by the constitution with performing the duties which the governor, if there were one, would have to perform; and yet, if I am not mistaken, he entirely overlooked the fact that the very same person, who he says is speaker and not governor, will, if I am not misinformed as to the term of his service, be governor, exercise the office, perform the duties of governor, after his senatorial term and speakership shall have expired.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] saw the pinch of the case and he invented a way out. He is entitled to great credit for his ingenuity, but I think he exercised it at the expense of his reason. He says that the constitution of the State of Delaware in such a case prolongs the term of the senatorship, and when the constitution says that a senator shall be elected for four years he may possibly have been elected for eight.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator mind if I correct him in that statement?

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I expressly stated that the constitution did not prolong the office of senator; it prolonged the office of the speaker of the senate. I expressly stated that it did not prolong the office of senator, and gave my reasons for it.

Mr. PLATT. Then the Senator is driven to the more absurd contention that a man may be the speaker of the senate of Delaware who is not a senator. He would be obliged to allow that the senate of Delaware might elect an outsider to be its speaker. Is there anything in the constitution which says, except by this remote and ingenious implication, that the speaker of the senate may continue to be speaker of the senate after the senate has dissolved and gone into the dreary past; that he lives on, a sad survivor of the senate of the State of Delaware? Oh, Mr. President, when the necessities of the case require a resort to such arguments the case must be poor indeed!

Now, if a man be governor of the State of Delaware—and for this purpose I do not care what kind of a governor—whether a governor elected by the people, an ad interim governor, or a stopgap governor—if he be a governor of the State of Delaware he can not be a senator.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me right there, before he leaves the point he has just been discussing so clearly—unanswerably, as I think—I should like to call the attention of the Senator to another absurdity.

Mr. PLATT. I should be very glad if the Senator would do so.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It seems to me the argument of my distinguished friend from Mississippi leads him——

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Oregon is referring to me, I do not hear what he is saying.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was about stating that it seems to me another suggestion can be made in addition to the one suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, which shows the untenability—I said absurdity a moment ago—of the argument of the Senator from Mississippi. If the effect is, as claimed by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, to extend the office of speaker over and beyond the period when that same speaker ceases to be a senator, and he continues, as he must continue under another provision of the constitution of the State of Delaware, to exercise the office of governor until a governor elected by the people is duly qualified, then it might happen, and undoubtedly would happen in perhaps many cases, that a new senate would come into power and a new speaker would be elected; and you would then have two speakers, not a speaker pro tempore and a regular speaker, but two speakers of the senate of the State of Delaware at one and the same time.

Mr. PLATT. Or the senate would find itself in the remarkable situation that it would have no speaker. It could not elect a new speaker constitutionally and legally, and the old speaker would be governor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. One of the two would happen.

Mr. PLATT. One of the two.

Mr. President, I was proceeding to say that no matter what kind of a governor William T. Watson may be, if he is a governor, he can not be a senator; because if he is a governor he holds the office of governor, and it is expressly provided in section 12 of Article II that—

No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State, or the United States, except the attorney-general, etc., shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.

It would seem as if it could not be contended that William T. Watson was not in the office of governor, was not holding the office of governor; it would seem as if all these provisions of the constitution of the State of Delaware were too plain to admit that he was not in the office of governor, that he was not holding the office of governor; and if he is, he can not, by the plain prohibition of the constitution, be a senator at the same time. If he is an ad interim governor, he can not be a senator at the same time; if he is even a stop-gap governor, he can not be a senator at the same time; and even if he is only a speaker-governor, he can not be a senator. There is no distinction made. In either of the cases he is holding an office.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has taken the only alternative in arguing the case, and that is that he is not a governor in any sense. When counsel admitted that he was a governor, though only an ad interim governor, when the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] admits that he is a governor, only a stop-gap governor, and when the journal admits that he is a governor, only he is a speaker-governor, his right to be a senator, to act as a senator, is conceded away. The only difficulty with the argument of the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Mississippi, who also, I think, holds that he is not a governor, but only a speaker who ad interim exercises provisionally the office, was plainly seen by the Senator from Delaware and by counsel in the case, and that is that it is untenable, that the constitution of Delaware calls him governor, provides that he shall be governor, makes no distinction between him and the governor elected by the people, indicates by plain implication of language that a governor elected by the people and a governor called because he occupies the office of senator or speaker of the senate at the death of the governor are the same.

If this be so, Mr. President, there is no use going any further in the case to inquire whether there is an incompatibility in these offices, to inquire what effect the conduct of the people of Delaware, what effect the conduct of former officials, what effect the precedents have upon the construction of the constitution, because once admit that William T. Watson was governor of the State of Delaware, and he can not be a senator of the State of Delaware at the same time. It is utterly needless to go into the question as to whether, in case there is no new election of a senator ordered, he can resume a place as senator when his term of office as governor expires, because he can not be a senator while he is governor, and it is not claimed that he can be if he is governor, as I understand it, when the argument is resolved down to its final analysis.

I might say the argument has been adduced here that the people of the State of Delaware have treated the office of senator as if it existed so that when the person who was called to be governor because he was speaker of the senate ceased to be governor, he could come back and resume his place, and therefore the constitution must be construed as making it proper, constitutional, and compatible that the governor might at the same time be a senator of the State. If that be so, Mr. President, if that has any effect upon the construction of the constitution, then the fact that no governor has ever attempted to exercise the office of senator or speaker of the senate, or, while governor, to perform any duty attaching to the office of senator or speaker of the senate, is equally conclusive that the constitution does not permit it.

I do not need to go into the argument that the constitution of Delaware is not to be construed by or in the light of what has been done by speakers of the senate during the last hundred years. It is utterly immaterial, I think, for the whole case hinges upon the question whether Watson was a governor, any kind of a governor, in any sense a governor in which the constitution of Delaware recognizes that officer. If he was, he could not be a senator. Constitutions can not be construed by what has been done or suffered to be done by the people of a State or even by a legislature. It may be evidence of what people have thought about it, but it can not in any way affect the meaning of the constitution; and if it be true that it evidences the fact that the people of Delaware thought the office still remained, although the man was for the time being taken away from it, so that when his office of governor ceased he could return to the office, then it also evidences the fact that the people of the State of Delaware never believed that while in the office of governor he could attempt to discharge the duties of senator or of speaker of the senate.

That, I think, is quite enough to say upon this branch of the case. I am not on the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I have not studied carefully every detail and every word in the reports and in the arguments. I have, as I think, given sufficient attention to the case to see where it hinges. It all hinges upon the question whether William T. Watson on the 9th day of May, 1895, was governor of the State of Delaware as he was supposed to be, and I should be very sorry to see the Senate, driven by the necessities of party, to declare, in plain opposition, as it seems to me, to the constitution of Delaware—in plain opposition to what has been thought to be for a hundred years constitutional law in the State of Delaware—that William T. Watson was not governor on that day. I might go into the argument as to the impossibility of his performing the duties of senator at the same time when he performed the duties of governor and was governor. But that has been fully gone into by speakers who have preceded me.

But one illustration comes to my mind which I think shows the entire absurdity of the claim that in the nature of things a man can be a governor and a senator at the same time. It is as impossible as that two particles of matter shall occupy the same space at the same time. I suppose that in the legislature of the State of Delaware, as in every other legislative body, there must be some rule, as there is in this body, to provide for securing the attendance of absent members in the senate and house, and that less than a quorum may compel the attendance of absent members. Just think of the senate in session, not a quorum present, and less than a quorum directing the absent members to be summoned, and a sergeant-at-arms sent after William T. Watson, governor of Delaware, in the field at the head of the army and fighting the battles of the State or in the discharge of any other gubernatorial duty, to bring him into the senate. If he is a senator, it could be done. No, no; he was not senator and he was not speaker of the senate.

The view which I have advanced, namely, that William T. Watson, immediately on the death of Joshua A. Marvil and the taking of the oath of office, became governor of the State of Delaware and remains governor of the State until this time, and that there is no limitation or qualification upon his right to that office, is abundantly justified by the case of Chadwick vs. Earhart, quoted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] in his admirable argument upon this question. The constitution of the State of Oregon provided as follows:

> In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state; and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability both of the governor and secretary of state the president of the senate shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor elected. (Constitution of Oregon, Article V, section 8.)

It was claimed that the duties of the office of governor became thereby annexed to the office of secretary of state; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolved upon the secretary of state. Chief Justice Waldo, in delivering the opinion of the court upon this claim, proceeds to say:

> This position seems to require, first, either that the office of governor should continue vacant during the time the secretary discharges its duties, and that such duties be in some way performed by the secretary of state, as such, consistently with a condition of vacancy; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in no wise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.
> In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant and yet there be a person—not the deputy or locum tenens of another—empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how in such a case the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office; and, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.
> It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent in that office. Such is the case here. The secretary of state, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes governor, and consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office.
> In Merriam vs. Clinch, 6 Blatch., 9 (1867), Mr. Justice Blatchford said: "Three times since the adoption of the Constitution the President has died, and, under the provision referred to, the powers and duties of the office of President have devolved on the Vice-President. All branches of the Government have, under such circumstances, recognized the Vice-President as holding the office of President, as authorized to assume its title and entitled to its emoluments. The Vice-President holds the office of President until a successor to the deceased President comes to assume the office at the expiration of the term for which the deceased President and the Vice-President were elected."
> The case of The People, ex rel. Church, vs. Hopkins (35 N. Y., 74) is much in point. In 1859 a law was passed in New York establishing the office of superintendent of insurance. The superintendent was to be appointed by the governor for the term of three years, with authority to appoint clerks, one of whom was to be designated his deputy, and to "possess the powers and to perform the duties attached by law to the office of principal during a vacancy in such office, and during the absence and inability of his principal." The superintendent resigned his office, the duties of which thereupon devolved upon the deputy. The deputy claimed the salary of r superintendent during the time he discharged the duties of the office, and it was held that he was entitled to such salary.
> The court, by Grover, J., supported the conclusion reached by references which are especially pertinent in this case: "But there are precedents which, though not judicial, I regard as entitled to be considered as decisive of the question under consideration. In the constitution of the State adopted in 1822 will be found the following provision: 'In case of the impeachment of the governor or his removal from office, death, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor absent or impeached shall return or be acquitted.' (Const. 1822, Article III, section 6.) On the 11th of February, 1828, the office of governor became vacant by the death of De Witt Clinton, the then incumbent of the office, and its powers and duties, under the above provision of the constitution, devolved on Nathaniel Pitcher, then lieutenant-governor. The question arose whether he was to be regarded, in the exercise of the powers and performance of the duties so vested in him, as acting governor, or in the performance of the contingent duties of lieutenant-governor, and, as a consequence, whether he was entitled to the salary of the former office, or the compensation given to the lieutenant-governor for his services as such.
> "It was held by William L. Marcy, then comptroller, that he was to be regarded as the acting governor and entitled to the salary given by law to that officer. The same questions, under the same provision, again arose in 1829, upon the resignation of the office of governor by Martin Van Buren, and the powers and duties of the office devolving upon Enos T. Throop, then lieutenant-governor, and were decided the same way by Silas Wright, then comptroller. It will be seen that these questions were identical with that in the present case. We surely shall not go far astray in following the precedents established by these able jurists, wise statesmen, and rigid economists."

The principle on which the second question is to be decided, namely, whether the appellant shall cease to be governor when he ceases to be secretary of state, seems to be this: If an office be appendant, as the expression is in 1 Leon, 321, to another office, the determination of the first office will determine the second. This is the case where a person holding any office is ex officio entitled to some other office. For instance, in City of Portland vs. Denny (5 Oreg., 160) the recorder of the city of Portland was ex officio a justice of the peace. In that case the office of justice of the peace was appendant to the office of recorder and determined with it.

On the contrary, if the nomination or appointment to an office be by descriptio personæ of one who holds some office by the title of which he is described, and who, on some contingency, is to enter and fill another office, the answering the description at the time the contingency arises designates him as the person who is to enter and fill the office, and when, as thus designated, he enters into the office he holds it in his natural and not in his official capacity. This seems to be the principle which applies when the office of governor devolves on the secretary of state on the happening of any of the events specified in the constitution. That the president of the senate, who holds under a similar title, ceases to be president of the senate when he becomes governor seems evident, for the two offices are incompatible at common law and there is no constitutional implication that both offices shall be held together. It would follow, therefore, that the president of the senate would hold the office of governor, once incumbent, without reference to his office of president of the senate. Now, as two offices may remain distinct which are not incompatible, though the officer is the same person, it would seem that the same principle should govern the holding of the office of governor by the secretary of state.

This question therefore must also be answered in favor of the appellant and judgment be entered accordingly.

Judgment reversed.

Now, the only other branch of the case is one to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a few minutes. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], I think, apprehended perhaps better than any of the other Senators what may be called the pinch of the case, and therefore pressed harder home upon the Senate a doctrine from which I utterly dissent, and that is that the Senate can not inquire into this case because each house of the State of Delaware is by the State constitution made the judge of the qualifications and elections of its own members, and that the senate of Delaware had so acted that this matter was res adjudicata, and the Senate of the United States has no power to inquire into it. Indeed, Mr. President, the views of the minority of the committee seem to me to abandon the contention that William T. Watson was not governor of the State of Delaware and therefore could be a senator, and to rely almost wholly upon the supposed doctrine that the Senate can not inquire, because in some mysterious, undefined, vague way the senate of the State of Delaware has passed upon his right to act as a senator and as speaker of the senate, and to enter the joint convention and preside there and vote there and declare there had been no election. That matter has been answered fully by the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The senate of the State of Delaware never had an opportunity to pass upon that question, according to the testimony in this case, and if it were admitted, which I shall by and by take occasion to deny, and to deny earnestly, that if the senate of the State of Delaware had acted upon it the Senate of the United States would be shut out from making any inquiry, yet the evidence utterly fails to show that the senate of the State of Delaware ever acted on the question as to whether William T. Watson while governor of the State could also act as senator.

Now, what were the facts? As I said in the opening of my remarks, there had been a joint meeting of the members of the two houses in session from 9 o'clock until 11 o'clock on that day. Then there had been a recess of the joint meeting taken until 12 o'clock. At 11 o'clock the senate reassembled, and the speaker elected by the senate when Mr. Watson assumed the office of governor, Mr. Records, presided at the meeting. Bills were passed. The journal does not show that anyone else took the chair. The journal—and I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the journal—shows that Mr. Records occupied the chair during the whole session.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not only does the journal fail to show that anybody else took the chair, but it shows by the votes taken every few moments that Mr. Records was in the chair and voted.

Mr. PLATT. Yes, and that Mr. Watson was not there. I feel like saying to the Senator from Indiana, from the stress which he laid upon the journal, that I thank him for that word, because the journal not only utterly fails to show that Mr. Watson came to the senate and assumed in the senate to occupy the chair of speaker, but it does show that the chair was occupied by another person who had been chosen to occupy it.

I do not care for the purposes of this case and this argument whether Mr. Watson came at a minute to 12, as the Senate was getting ready to go to the joint assembly and stepped to the chair, or whether he stepped to the head of the procession after it had started for the hall of the house of representatives where the joint meeting was to be held, and marched at the head of the procession of senators into the joint meeting. In neither case had there been an opportunity for the senate to pass upon the question whether he was entitled to occupy the speaker's chair. It is not claimed seriously that the senate ever did pass upon that question either silently or publicly, either by act or by acquiescence.

Now, admit the whole doctrine that is claimed by Senators on the other side, that if the senate of Delaware had acted, if the senate had passed a resolution saying that the governor had a right to come there and take the speaker's chair, or if the senate had acquiesced in it, the Senate of the United States would be obliged to stultify itself, if it thought otherwise, and say it could not inquire into it. Admit that argument to the full extent, and how is it possible for Senators who claim that this case turns upon that point to say there had been any decision and the matter was res adjudicata? Stand by the journal. That seems to be the sacred thing in the minds of those Senators. The journal does not show it. The affidavits do not show it. No evidence points to the fact that the senate ever had an opportunity to consider whether it would permit the governor to come to the senate and occupy the speaker's chair. If there is any evidence tending to show it, remotely looking to it, I have failed to observe it.

The senate could not act in joint meeting of the two houses. The senate could not pass upon that question after it entered the hall where the joint meeting was held, because it was not a joint convention of the two houses. Suppose a protest had been made. Who would decide it? Suppose some senator had challenged the right of Watson to occupy as speaker of the senate the position of presidency of the meeting. Who would decide it? We have had trouble enough of that sort in the discussion as to who would decide questions which might arise when the two Houses of Congress meet to count the electoral vote. But the two houses did not meet. It was, under the statute, a meeting of the members of the two houses, and there could be no protest made there, and there is nothing in this case which prevents the Senate from looking into it even upon the most extreme claim of the limitations of the power of the Senate made by Senators upon the other side. It seems to me that ought to dispose of that branch of the case, and it does dispose of it.

I have heard—I do not know whether in this discussion or outside—a Senator express the opinion that the fact that Mr. Watson marched at the head of the procession of senators into the joint meeting and presided there without protest would govern his vote. Is there anything in the constitution of Delaware which says that a joint meeting of the members of the two houses or the members of the legislature in joint meeting shall have power to decide upon the qualifications of their members? I think not. If there be not, what matter whether there was a protest or not? What matter whether his right was challenged there? The senate could not decide it. There is no constitutional power in the joint meeting of the members of the two houses to decide it. The protest was made in fact and, as I understand, presented before the final adjournment of the joint assembly. But whether it was made or not, what does it matter even upon the extreme claim put forward here of the powerlessness of the Senate to inquire into the validity of the election of persons claiming to be elected Senators? The senate never passed upon the question whether while Watson was governor he could also exercise the office of senator. The joint meeting could not have passed upon it.

But go a little further, Mr. President, although I wish to say that it is outside of this case. If William T. Watson was governor of the State of Delaware, he could not be senator. If the senate had not passed upon that question, the Senate of the United States is not concluded. The joint meeting could not pass upon the question, and therefore it did not pass upon it, and the Senate of the United States is not concluded from making an inquiry. That, as it seems to me, is all that there is in this case. But I desire to go a little further, as I wish to take this occasion to enter my dissent——

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question, in order that I may understand his position thoroughly?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Is it the Senator's position that the Senate of the United States, in any case of a contested election for United States Senator, can pass upon the qualifications and right to a seat in a State legislature of any member of that legislature whose qualifications have not been especially passed upon and made the subject of a judgment by the house to which he belongs?

Mr. PLATT. I shall make that claim very soon.

Mr. GRAY. That is the Senator's proposition?

Mr. PLATT. That is my own opinion, differing, perhaps, from what has been supposed to be the accepted doctrine of the Senate. But I do not think that case arises here. That Watson had been a senator, elected and sworn in, is true. That he could be a senator while governor was not passed upon, was not acquiesced in by the senate. That question arose subsequent to the time when he was permitted to take his seat as senator. Something new had come in; he had gone into a new office. A new question arose—not whether he was elected as senator and entitled to a seat as senator, but whether as another officer he could act in the senate. That question was never settled either by acquiescence or by direct act or passed upon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Suppose, instead of succeeding to the office of governor, he had become insane, and thus in the eyes of everyone absolutely disqualified to exercise the office of senator. In such case the fact that his qualifications as senator had been passed upon away back yonder when he took his seat certainly could not apply to the case, could it?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to ask him a question? I do not understand the Senator as maintaining, except as a matter of personal opinion, that it is necessary, in order to recognize the judgment of a legislative body, that it shall have expressly passed upon the case.

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. VILAS. If a body recognizes a member, suffers him to act, is not that the judgment of the body that he is entitled to be there?

Mr. PLATT. The senate of the State of Delaware never did that. That is what I have been trying to show for the last twenty minutes. There is no evidence to show it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. He did not himself go back.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Connecticut, then, is waiving the legal point and addressing himself to a mere question of fact as he supposes it to be from the evidence?

Mr. PLATT. That is precisely what I was saying; that admitting the doctrine to the full extent claimed even by the Senator from Indiana, there was no opportunity for the senate of the State of Delaware to pass either directly or by acquiescence upon the question whether Watson, as governor, could vote in the senate or go into the joint convention.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one other question? Does it make any difference during what length of time a body recognizes a person as a member of it? Is it not its judgment so long as it recognizes him?

Mr. PLATT. I would hardly want to say that. I think if I had been a member of the senate of Delaware and William T. Watson at 30 seconds of 12 o'clock had appeared there and pushed the speaker whom the senate had elected out of his chair and occupied it for a space of thirty seconds I should have been too dumfounded and startled to have had my acquiescence had any effect upon the situation.

Mr. VILAS. I am not going to debate that proposition now with the Senator, but I wish to ask him a question. If he had been there and that had taken place and he had not recognized it to have been the usage of a hundred years, would he not have protested against it, and does he not suppose that no protest or objection was made to the speaker's resuming his chair for the reason that it was supposed to be right until the necessities of some hours later raised a question which has found courageous debaters in this body?

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that during the whole hundred years any governor had come back and assumed the speaker's chair?

Mr. VILAS. No; he has always been recognized as the speaker exercising the office of governor and entitled to resume his seat when the temporary performance was over.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is different.

Mr. PLATT. When the temporary performance was over! Did anybody in the State senate suppose that the time for him to cease the discharge of his duties as governor had arrived? Oh, no. The Senate will not stand on any such very narrow technical application of the doctrine, though the doctrine may be admitted. The record——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me?

Mr. PLATT. In one moment. The record fails to disclose the fact that he came at all. The weight of evidence is to the conclusion that he did not come at all to the speaker's chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think under the circumstances it is fair that the Senator from Wisconsin should answer this question, and that is whether he considers the acquiescence by the senate of Delaware, for the time specified and shown in the record, in the return by Governor Watson to the senate and his resumption of the duties to have been an adjudication by the senate of Delaware that he was entitled to continue to act as speaker and senator, which is binding upon the Senate of the United States?

Mr. VILAS. I think just this: The senate did not adjudicate, but it recognized him as a member of its body without question on the part of any other one of the senators there.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I ask the Senator what force he gives to what took place. Does he say, whether it was a judgment or not, or a vote or not, that it gave Watson rights that he would not otherwise have possessed, and that the Senate of the United States is precluded, by what took place at that time, from inquiring whether as a matter of fact and of law he was then speaker of the senate and a senator?

Mr. VILAS. The senate of the State of Delaware was rightfully composed of nine senators, and when the other eight recognized him as the ninth, they made him so de facto, whatever might be the case.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator thinks——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment. The Senator from Wisconsin, then, thinks that upon that principle, whether or not Watson had the right to come back and act as speaker of the senate or senator, as a matter of fact and of law what took place precludes the Senate of the United States from inquiring into the title. To put the facts as they were, a few minutes before 12 o'clock, having been absent thirty days, never having undertaken to act as senator or as speaker of the senate during that time, he came back and superseded Speaker Records and marched with the senators to the place of joint meeting. Does the Senator from Wisconsin, as a lawyer, give those transactions the force and effect of a decision by the senate of Delaware that gave Watson title as senator, whether he otherwise had such title or not?

Mr. VILAS. I do not say it was an adjudication, but I say it was the recognition of his being de facto senator and speaker, and as the constitution designates it, and not speaker pro tempore.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the Senator from Wisconsin holds, then, that what took place gave Watson a right to vote for United States Senator whether he had the right before he came in and did this thing or not. That is the Senator's proposition.

Mr. VILAS. He was recognized as a member of that body.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator hold that by so recognizing him it gave him title, whether he had it or not?

Mr. VILAS. If the senate of Delaware recognized him as their ninth member, the Senate of the United States has not a right to say that there was a vacancy in that membership and that but eight were there.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am inclined to think that what I would call an adjudication by the State senate would be binding. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] argues in favor of a broader right of inquiry on the part of the United States Senate. But I wish to bring home to the Senator from Wisconsin and to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who is aching to get into the discussion again, that to say it was a recognition by the State senate of an intruder as senator, who had no right otherwise, unless recognized by the senate and determined by the senate to be one of its members—to say that because Governor Watson came back there under the circumstances stated in this case is the most extraordinary proposition of constitutional law that I ever heard even two Democrats make.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to supplement what has been said before he answers?

Mr. GRAY. No; I would rather not, if the Senator from Oregon will allow me. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have not the floor. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has the floor.

Mr. PLATT. I am not through; but I do not object to interruptions.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I wish to reply to him dum fervet opus, as the Senator used to say when at school.

The proposition upon which we rely on this side of the question now before the Senate is that Mr. Watson, like every other member of the senate of Delaware, having once been admitted as senator and his qualifications and election having been certified to as appears upon the journal, he remains a de facto senator until he is ousted by a judgment of the legislature, and the proposition then is, in the words of Mr. Cushing, which I will adopt as more perspicuous and authoritative than any I could use, as to cases of the character to which I have just referred:

> In cases of this kind the existence of the vacancy must be declared by the assembly itself. In cases arising under this and the preceding section there is, in fact, no vacancy until it is so declared or implied by the resolution of the assembly itself.

Until the senate of Delaware had, by resolution or some other action tantamount thereto, declared or implied a vacancy in the seat of Mr. Watson, there was none, and this Senate is not competent to declare such a vacancy.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me right there, that is a different question entirely——

Mr. GRAY. That is the question we are arguing here.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is a different question from the one put by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. GRAY. Yes; a very different one from the extraordinary position just taken by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No.

Mr. GRAY. But the one sanctioned by all the authorities is the one I have just put.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It was argued at length on the other side, and I think by the Senator from Delaware himself, in the able argument he made in this case as to what took place in the senate of the State of Delaware, that if Governor Watson came in and took the chair a few moments before the houses met in joint assembly that was an adjudication of his qualification to sit as a senator, that it was res adjudicata by virtue of what took place there that day. The Senator from New Hampshire desired the Senator from Wisconsin to state whether, in his opinion as a lawyer and as a Senator, what did take place there that day, leaving all other questions out of consideration, and in the absence of any adjudication—Governor Watson would have a right to sit as a senator and whether what took place that day amounted to an adjudication or a judgment?

I say, Mr. President, there are but two kinds of judgments in cases of that character. The one is called actual adjudication, actual judgment; the other is called constructive. Of course it will not be claimed that this was an actual judgment. The only question remaining is, Was it a constructive judgment? It does seem to me that what took place there that day in the few moments that Governor Watson occupied the speaker's chair can not be considered from any possible standpoint as a constructive adjudication of the right of a person who otherwise had no right to be there to sit and act as a senator.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I had not intended at any time to argue this proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I said from the answer made by the Senator that he would not hold that to be a constructive adjudication.

Mr. VILAS. I rest my opinion of the clear duty of the Senate to reject the claim of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in this body upon a different branch of the case altogether; but since the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was making the discussion he did, I wanted to ask a question as to his view upon the subject; and in response to the Senator from New Hampshire I do wish to say that in such a case as he puts it is of course inconceivable that in a legislative body of the dignity of the senate of the State of Delaware a man with no right, no shadow of right, should be admitted as a member of the body, and take the office of its president or speaker to conduct its proceedings, leading it to a meeting in joint convention with the other house of the legislature, and there to preside for hours unchallenged over that joint convention; and I do say that a recognition of such an important officer as that by such a body as that without a challenge, without a question, was a constitution of that person as, at least, de facto a member of that body.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, all that is a correct statement of plain constitutional law. There is no doubt that Mr. Watson was once a senator of the State of Delaware. The case starts with that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And speaker.

Mr. CHANDLER. He was elected a senator of the State of Delaware and while he was senator he was chosen speaker. The counsel for Governor Watson has taken the pains to put into this case the record of his original election as senator. There was no need of that; that was folly; that fact was not disputed. No one has denied that there was a senate of Delaware with nine members, and that William T. Watson was one of the nine.

Mr. VILAS. It was never otherwise adjudicated, was it?

Mr. CHANDLER. There never was any resolution that he was entitled to his seat. I grant that where a senator takes his seat in the beginning of a session and remains continuously in his seat, without his right being disputed, there grows up a recognition that fairly may be called an adjudication. The Senator from Oregon has stated that not only here and now but has stated it in his report.

But this is the point to which I am coming. Mr. Watson having been unquestionably senator, having been unquestionably speaker of the senate, became governor by the death of Governor Marvil, and the whole claim, the whole contention in this case that has occupied the attention of the Senate in this relation, has been that when Watson became governor, took the oath of governor, and left the senate chamber and acted for thirty days as governor, he ceased to retain the power to act as senator; and we have pointed to the fact that not in a hundred years of the life of the State of Delaware under the constitution has any such governor ever undertaken to act as senator while he was governor; and the contention on our side is that any act as senator of a governor while he is governor is null and void. That is our contention.

Mr. VILAS rose.

Mr. CHANDLER. Shall I yield to the Senator?

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Do I understand him that he still remains a senator, but without the power to act as such?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer that question a little later, if the Senator will allow me. We will get through with one question first.

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. When Governor Marvil died, there was no doubt Governor Watson was senator and speaker of the senate, and there is no need of proving that he had been originally elected. He was a senator and speaker of the senate, and he became governor; and we say he became disqualified from acting as senator while he was governor, that he could not act as governor and act as senator at the same time. The proposition of the other side I understand to be this: The proposition which the Senator from Wisconsin made a little while ago was that even if Watson ceased to be senator, or ceased to have the right to act as senator, so that he was without title and without right to act from the time he became governor down to the time when he entered the joint assembly, yet the fact that he entered the senate chamber a few minutes before 12 o'clock, took his seat in the speaker's chair, and went with the eight senators to the joint meeting, was a recognition of Watson as having a right, of his being a senator and having a right to vote as senator, which is conclusive upon the Senate, and gave him the right to cast that vote whether he otherwise possessed it or not. That was the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin, for he stated distinctly that he held that a recognition of the right of Watson to vote made by the State senate gave him the right to vote whether he otherwise had the right to vote or not, and the senate was precluded from inquiring as to whether he had the actual right or not. That is the contention on the other side, which I characterize, with all due respect, as absurd.

It can not be, if Watson by being governor was disqualified as senator, that the senate determined and decided and adjudicated that he had resumed and had the right to resume his functions simply by what took place in this case, and which has been cited to us all through the debate by the other side as a recognition of Watson's right by the senate, which made his right to act res adjudicata, so that his right can not be any further inquired into.

Mr. VILAS. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me one moment, I am not going to undertake to state or argue the proposition which has been so very ably argued by other Senators; but in respect to the point as to which the Senator from New Hampshire has with so much force presented the views he entertains, I think he does not yet apprehend the point as they make it. Their point is that, being once a senator, and the title he had as a senator having been once established by recognition to the extent that the Senator says it was unnecessary to prove it, his right continued until there was a judgment of that body that there was a vacancy; and he states that that is based upon a proposition very clearly stated by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], whose judgment upon a point of law we all respect, in the words quoted by the Senator from Delaware in his remarks. Speaking of those who were received and recognized without special adjudication of their right to a seat, he said:

> Their title is not, as is sometimes carelessly said, a prima facie title. It is an absolute title, continuing until the house itself has adjudicated that some other person be admitted to their place.

The point that is made here, not to undertake to argue it, is that, being there rightfully, he remained a senator until that body had adjudicated a vacancy; and that, instead of adjudicating a vacancy as against him, they recognized him as being there still, as he had been during the portion of the session of the legislature previous to that time, except when temporarily absent.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, let us see to what conclusion this argument of the Senator from Wisconsin leads us. There is no force in the argument when it is admitted that Mr. Watson could not, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, be a senator or speaker of the senate. The claim concedes that; but then the claim is made that, it being conceded that the constitution of the State of Delaware says that being governor he could not be senator, yet that office remained open there for him until the senate of Delaware by solemn act declared that it was vacant, and that, although the constitution of the State of Delaware says that he could not come there and be a senator, yet he could come there and be a senator, because the senate of the State of Delaware had not declared the office vacant.

Was ever anything forced to a greater length to save a bad case? Just think of what this position is. Just imagine that the United States Senate is going to give a man a seat, or withhold it from him, upon this argument, this claim as now made. A man who could not vote under the constitution of the State of Delaware voted, and thus defeated the election of the claimant. He was governor of the State, and therefore he could not vote; but the Senate can not look into that at all! It can not inquire whether he could vote, because he came into the senate and assumed the office of speaker one, two, or three minutes before it started for the joint convention; and although there was the constitution plainly against his doing so, yet because senators sat still and did not protest, therefore the senate of the State of Delaware recognized his power and right to perform an unconstitutional act, and the Senate of the United States is bound by it! That is the contention, and I insist that I never knew a more remarkable one.

Upon the other branch of the case, if they say he was not governor, there they find standing ground, poor though it be; but if it is admitted that he was governor, then he could not be a senator, and it makes no difference, with our power and our right and our duty, whether the senate of the State of Delaware said he could be or not. But certainly no acquiescence, no failure to protest, no failure to declare the seat vacant, can bind the Senate of the United States and defeat the claim of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate.

Just look for one moment more at this claim. The Senator from Wisconsin says, in effect, if Mr. Watson was governor and could not vote, then he was a usurper, and asked, Would the senate have tolerated a usurper there? But if he was governor and could not vote, the senate did tolerate a usurper there, according to his doctrine, because the senate did not protest; did not then and there in a minute and a half pass a resolution that he could not sit and did not exercise the force of the sergeant-at-arms to tumble him out of his chair. If he had no right there he was a usurper; and yet the claim is put here gravely in the Senate of the United States as a proposition of law to decide this case, that because a usurper sat there and no protest was made and he was not tumbled by force out of the speaker's chair, therefore he had a right to be there, though a usurper.

Mr. VILAS. Suppose they recognized him?

Mr. PLATT. Suppose they did recognize a usurper, suppose there had been a contest going on as to the right of a senator to sit there, a senator who had been admitted, and there had been a case of contest all through that session which had not been decided, and suppose on this last day, as the senate started for the joint meeting, that the contestant came there and by force ousted the senator who had sat there all through from his position in the line, and took it and went into the joint convention and sat there and, as the Senator says, was recognized, would that have made his vote legal? Would it have concluded the senate from inquiring into it? I never heard of such a doctrine, Mr. President.

Mr. VILAS. Nobody claims any such doctrine as that.

Mr. PLATT. It is the same thing.

Mr. VILAS. No.

Mr. PLATT. They were to acquiesce when the man claimed a right to the seat?

Mr. VILAS. Acquiesced in superior force.

Mr. PLATT. But, Mr. President, as to this doctrine of estoppel—I should not call it that, because estoppel is based upon the conduct of the party estopped, and the Senate has done nothing by which it can be estopped from inquiring into the qualifications of the persons voting—but this doctrine that the Senate is precluded from inquiring into the right of persons in the legislature to vote has never until now, except in the single dictum in the Turpie case, been carried to an extent which makes the doctrine at all troublesome in this case. It has never been seriously claimed until now, I think, even if a person who was not entitled under the constitution of the State as a matter of law to cast his vote in the election of Senator, and was permitted in one branch of the legislature to cast that vote, that the Senate of the United States was precluded from inquiring whether he had a constitutional right to vote. I have never heard that doctrine in the Senate. It goes away beyond anything that the Senate has ever said or that any of its committees have ever declared, unless it be in the Turpie case, to which I shall refer.

It can not be in the nature of things, Mr. President, that the Senate may not inquire whether persons casting votes in the election of a Senator in a legislature had the constitutional right to cast those votes, when that question has not been positively determined and adjudicated by either branch of the legislature. That is what we are asked to do here.

The case all turns upon the question whether William T. Watson, governor of the State of Delaware, could, under the constitution of the State of Delaware, cast a vote when the election for United States Senator was taking place. It has never been decided by the senate of Delaware, nor by a joint meeting of the members of the two houses of the State of Delaware, that he could; and yet Senators on the other side say the Senate of the United States can not inquire into it; and if the vote changes the result, that we have got to submit to it. The doctrine never has been pushed to that extreme before, Mr. President. I think it has been pushed very far—very much further than I assent to.

I could safely leave this case, and I can leave it, and do leave it, so far as its merits are concerned, upon the right of the Senate to determine whether under the constitution of the State the vote of Mr. Watson was a legal vote, when neither branch of the legislature nor the joint meeting of the members of the legislature had decided otherwise. It is not necessary to say that we are not concluded by questions of fact or mixed questions of fact and law. Manifestly this Senate has power enough to determine this question for itself when it has not been definitely settled and determined by the legislature, or either house of the legislature; and that disposes of this case.

But, while I am upon it, I want to ask, before I leave this Senate, an opportunity to enter my protest against the doctrine that there is any limitation whatever upon the right and power of the Senate to determine the election of its own members, or persons claiming to be its members. The Constitution of the United States gives the Senate that power. In what I now have to say, I speak for myself; I do not know whether or not what I say represents the views of any other member of the Senate.

Section 5 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

> Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

Is there any limitation upon that power in the Constitution? We are to judge of the elections of our own members; and yet Senators say if a legislature in either house has determined that a man who, under the constitution of the State, had no right to vote, may vote, that we are bound by it, that we can not inquire, no matter how plain the proposition may be, no matter whether the action of the house has been ignorantly taken, or willfully taken, or taken for the purpose of defeating or producing an election, it is the act of the legislature, or one house of the legislature, recognizing the right of a man to vote, and, therefore, we must accept the man who comes to us elected by that vote or fail to seat the man who comes to us defeated by that vote. In other words, it is a proposition that though the vote was illegal, we are so limited in the exercise of our power to judge of the elections of our members that we are bound to accept an illegality, because, forsooth, that illegality has passed without contradiction, or has been accepted by one branch of the legislature of the State.

Is there a limitation upon the power of this Senate to determine the elections of its own members? Where is it to be found? Not in the Constitution of the United States, even by implication; yet we are gravely told that because a State constitution allows either branch of the legislature of that State to be the judge of the qualifications of its own members, we can not be the judge of the elections of our own members, so as to inquire whether the votes cast for them were under the constitution and laws of that State legal or illegal.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to state in this connection that so far as I am concerned, I agree that the Senator from Connecticut is entirely right in his construction of that clause of the Constitution. There certainly is no limitation or qualification in connection with it. The grant is broad, absolute, unconditional. The limitation, however, that has been placed upon it is simply one which has grown up in practice in the Senate; that is all.

Mr. PLATT. Not all under the Turpie case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not all under the Turpie case, but in other cases the practice has been different. I believe it is pernicious; I believe it is erroneous; but as one member of the Senate and as one member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I have been disposed to follow it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, what I am claiming now does not affect this case. I state it because there is an opportunity, and I think an occasion, for stating it. To go on. What is an election? We are the judges of the elections of our own members. What is necessary to constitute an election? To constitute an election it must be found: First, that the claimant received upon the deciding vote a majority of the persons present and entitled to vote. That is positive. Second—and this is negative—that the result was not changed or affected by the presence and voting of persons not entitled to vote by bribery, violence, or the prevention of voting by persons who were entitled to vote. That constitutes an election. There can be no election unless a person has received a majority of the votes of the persons present upon the deciding vote and entitled to vote. There can be no election if a person was present upon the deciding vote who was not entitled to vote and was suffered to vote, and his vote changed the result.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Or if his vote has been purchased.

Mr. PLATT. And the rule is just. There is no distinction to be made in a case where a person was present voting who had no right to vote, and the case of bribery and corruption, or of intimidation or violence to prevent a person from voting who was entitled to vote.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me a moment?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; I will.

Mr. HILL. I want to see if I can comprehend the argument of the Senator. In a State legislature, where there is one contested seat, the question arises whether a member of the legislature is elected or not. The constitution of the State gives the legislature the power to determine that question. The legislature proceeds and determines that question. It turns out one member of the legislature and admits another, and upon that question hangs the point as to whether a United States Senator was elected or not. Does the Senator mean to say that under the Constitution of the United States this Senate can review that question thus properly determined by the State legislature? Does the Senator go to that extent? There is no question of legality about it. It is a question of evidence. It is a question of evidence submitted to that legislature and determined by that legislature and which the legislature had the power to determine. Does the Senator say that we can review that question and overrule it? It is to that extent, involving the question of the determination of evidence, not a question of law. I want to see to what extent the Senator goes, so that we can understand his argument.

Mr. PLATT. I hold that there is no limitation whatever on the power of the United States to determine whether any and every vote cast for a Senator or against him was a legal vote under the laws and constitution of the State where the election took place. That is as far as I need to go.

Mr. HILL. How would the Senator answer the proposition that I made?

Mr. PLATT. I do not believe, if the Senator desires a categorical answer, that there is any limitation whatever on the power of the Senate in determining the question of the election of its members. As a question of power and right I hold that there is no limitation whatever; but I freely admit that it is a power which should be exercised with caution and discretion and not arbitrarily, and that upon disputed questions of fact arising in the question of the election of members of a legislature or in the conduct of a legislature in seating or unseating a man, showing a fair question of doubt, it would be impolitic and unwise on the part of the Senate to exercise the power which the Constitution commits to it.

Mr. HILL. And would the Senator go to the still further extent of determining the question as to the legality of the votes given for the member of the legislature originally?

Mr. PUGH. In each precinct.

Mr HILL. In each precinct?

Mr. PLATT. They do it in the House of Representatives, and by virtue of the same clause in the Constitution.

Mr. HILL. That is a different question. That does not involve this question at all.

Mr. PLATT. That is not an answer, does the Senator say?

Mr. HILL. No. There the people are electors and elect the Representatives; here the legislature elects.

Mr. PLATT. I will come to that argument in a moment. So far as the power is concerned, I say yes; so far as the propriety of it is concerned, I say that the Senate must be governed by the cases which arise.

Mr. HILL. Does not the Senator think that the precedents are all in favor of not exercising that power, if it exists?

Mr. PLATT. There is only one single precedent.

Mr. HILL. Is not that a good one?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. HILL. Does not that commend itself to your judgment?

Mr. PLATT. Not at all; and it will not to the Senator's judgment when I call his attention to that precedent.

Mr. HILL. Do you think it wiser to leave the whole question open and always to be exercised?

Mr. PLATT. I think the most dangerous thing that can be done for the existence of the integrity and purity of this body——

Mr. HILL. I have that confidence in the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary——

Mr. PLATT. Of the integrity and purity of this body is so to administer the constitutional provisions that we are the judges of our elections so that our hands are bound and that we can not look into anything which a legislature does with reference to the seating or unseating of its members. There can be no doctrine which is more dangerous than that; and the course of legislatures in these last years shows that we must call a halt in the direction which we have been going.

Now, the Senator from New York puts an extreme case where it would appear to be, and I admit would be, impolitic for the Senate of the United States to go into the question. I want to put the other extreme case. Suppose a legislature, being equally divided, or nearly so, one political party having a single majority in a joint meeting, one branch of the legislature, being in position to do it, on the morning of the last day when the members of the legislature must go into joint convention, arbitrarily unseats two of its members and thereby changes the result. They having decided on the right of the parties to vote, am I to be told that under those circumstances, because the legislature is the judge of the qualifications of its own members and has arbitrarily and for the purpose of affecting the result expelled two men, and therefore changed the result of that election, our hands are tied here by the provision in the State constitution? Am I to be told that there is a limitation upon our power, and that we can not investigate it? There is a whole line of occurrences which may take place in a legislature relating to the seating of members, to the admission of members, and the only ground upon which it is safe to stand is that there is no limitation upon our power to determine whether the votes cast in the election of Senators are legal or illegal, but that we should exercise a wise and a prudent discretion as to how far we should go.

Mr. HILL. The State legislature, then, if I may interrupt the Senator, has the unlimited power to determine the question of membership, subject, as far as the election of Senators is concerned, to be overruled by the Senate of the United States. That seems to be where the logic of the argument is.

Mr. PLATT. Why not? For what?

Mr. HILL. Because the State legislature, by virtue of its constitution, is given the sole power to determine the question. That is the reason.

Mr. PLATT. Is no power given to the Senate of the United States?

Mr. HILL. That is one of the rights and powers of the State reserved.

Mr. PLATT. Is no power given to the Senate of the United States by the Constitution of the United States——

Mr. HILL. Yes; to determine——

Mr. PLATT. When a legislature of a State has set up its arbitrary will as to who shall vote for its Senators in its State? Does the Senator go so far as that?

Mr. HILL. The States have that power.

Mr. PLATT. The Turpie case goes as far as that. I admit that case is against me. The Turpie case says, if I understand it, that where it was charged that a person usurped the position of a presiding officer, took away from the man entitled to occupy that position his seat and occupied it as a usurper, and by his vote and action changed the result, although if it were true that if it was done it was a crime the Senate could not inquire into it. I do not believe, Mr. President, that the Senate on reconsideration is going to push the doctrine to that extent. Bribery is a crime. It vitiates an election, or it ought to do so. But suppose the legislature allows the bribed man to vote, knowing of the bribery; or, as the Senator from Wisconsin would say, all the members knowing of the bribery, nobody stands up at the time of the vote to say that the man is bribed, and therefore his vote must be received, and the determination of the legislature as to the qualification and election of its members must determine that question.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me just one further question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Suppose the whole legislature has elected itself by bribery?

Mr. PLATT. There has never been a claim but that the Senate could investigate the question as to whether there was a legislature or whether there was such fraud as vitiated the entire composition of the legislature. It has never been denied that the Senate could then inquire, though the right of inquiry in such case has been predicated on the power and duty of the Senate to determine whether there was a legislature.

Mr. HILL. Is not that the legislature, the regular legal de facto legislature, for every purpose of enacting laws, for every purpose of electing a United States Senator, and could the laws be attacked or could the title of the Senators elected be attacked?

Mr. PLATT. For the purpose of enacting laws, yes; for the purpose of electing a United States Senator, no.

Mr. HILL. In other words, does the Senator mean to assert the doctrine that if the legislature had been entirely elected by more or less bribery, and the legislature proceeds to enact law, there is any proceeding known to the world by which those laws could be declared illegal and set aside and held for naught?

Mr. PLATT. I hope that I shall have an opportunity during this session in the Alabama case to argue the question which the Senator now presents.

Mr. HILL. I do not understand that it arises in the Alabama case.

Mr. PLATT. In that case it is claimed that the entire legislature was elected by fraud. There is no difference between bribery and fraud in that respect. While I would admit that that legislature was competent to enact laws for the State, I would deny that such a legislature was competent to elect a United States Senator.

Mr. HILL. And those laws would be conclusive upon everybody, would they not?

Mr. PLATT. In the State, undoubtedly.

Mr. HILL. Upon everyone?

Mr. PLATT. In the State, undoubtedly; but this is a question which reaches outside of the State.

Mr. HILL. And those laws would be binding upon the United States, so far as the State has a right to enact legislation?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this doctrine grew up out of the extreme contention of the State-rights men that a State was a sovereign power.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator does not wish to have the Senate understand that the honorable and learned chairman of our Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], is rather an extreme State-rights man. That would be certainly news to Massachusetts and news to us.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator scarcely allows me time to finish a sentence. If he has any criticisms to make on the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Massachusetts can answer them.

Mr. HILL. I have no criticism to make.

Mr. PLATT. As I was going on to say, this doctrine grew up out of the idea that the State was sovereign.

Mr. HILL. Is not that so?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. HILL. Is not the State sovereign?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. HILL. Within its sphere?

Mr. PLATT. Yes. But the old idea was that the State was sovereign in all things, and especially in the matter of electing United States Senators. I have stood here upon the floor of the Senate and heard Senators speak of Senators occupying seats here as ambassadors from the States. In this connection I will call attention to the argument of a distinguished son of New York who was a Senator before the present Senator from New York, a name that I think he will recognize as that of one of the ablest lawyers of the State of New York, Silas Wright. When this doctrine was first broached in the Senate of the United States, I think he made the complete argument in answer to it, and the Senate would have done well if it had held to the doctrine which, although he was in the minority in the case of Potter vs. Robbins, he laid down so well as the rule which should govern the Senate in relation to the matter of judging of the election of its own members.

Mr. HILL. The Senate decided otherwise, did it not?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes. I heard the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] take a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes in commenting upon the great abilities of the men who composed that committee, and he did not omit to speak, though he did not dwell upon it to the same extent, of the great ability of Senator Wright. As often happens in a case, the dissenting opinion in that report, looked at in the light of the lapse of years, is by far the better opinion. The case did not necessarily turn on that question. I do not think the case turned at all on that question. It seems to me to have turned on the question whether an act passed by the legislature of the State of Rhode Island was to prevail against its charter. The claim was set up that the charter of the State was to determine the question, although an act had been passed which extended the period of the time of the session of the legislature. I have no doubt that the question turned upon that feature of the case.

Now I wish to call attention to what Mr. Wright said. I may have to read a little more than I had intended to read. This is from the views of the minority as expressed by Silas Wright, jr.:

> The Senate, by the Constitution, is made "the judge of the elections—> returns, and qualifications of its own members," and can it, under this power, look into these facts to determine which of the persons claiming the seat as a Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to represent that State in this body?

Emphasizing the word "elections"—

> No question appears to the undersigned to be raised as to the "returns" or "qualifications" of either of the claimants, and he therefore considers that the question of "election" is the only one presented for decision. This question the Senate has the power to determine, because it is made "the judge of the elections" of its own members. The facts in this case show that the legislature of the State of Rhode Island declare, in the solemn form of a law of the State, that Mr. Robbins has not been elected to the Senate; that the proceedings from which his commission proceeded were "null and void, and of no effect," because the body taking them were not authorized to elect a Senator, and that the place was "vacant" at the time when this declaration was made. Still, notwithstanding this solemn declaration by a body conceded to be the legislature of the State, Mr. Robbins produces to the Senate, and there is referred to the committee, a commission in due form, according to the laws and the practice of the government of Rhode Island, to show that Mr. Robbins had been duly elected a Senator to represent that State in the Senate of the United States. Will the Senate look behind this commission to determine whether or not it was properly granted? The undersigned believes that it is not only the right but the duty of the Senate to do so. The commission is only the evidence of the election of a Senator, and if the Senate were to limit its inquiries to the proper form and authentication of the commission it would only make itself the judge of the evidence of an election, not the judge of the election itself. The undersigned supposes that the evidence of an election to an office is, in all cases, prima facie only, and is susceptible of being controverted and contradicted before a tribunal competent to judge of the election—

I want to repeat that sentence—

> The undersigned supposes that the evidence of an election to an office is, in all cases, prima facie only, and is susceptible of being controverted and contradicted before a tribunal competent to judge of the election; he therefore supposes that the regularity of the evidence of an election may be one thing and that the election may be a very different thing; and he concludes that, as the senate is constituted not the judge of the evidence of the elections of its members only, but "the judge of the elections" of its members, it may and, in all cases of a contested election where the contest does not arise as to the regularity of the evidence simply, should look behind the evidence and into the election itself, that it may determine what it is constituted the judge to determine, the fact of election, or, in other words, that it may determine whether the prima facie evidence laid before it is the real evidence of facts or is subject to contradiction by the facts.
> The terms of the Constitution would seem to confirm this construction of the powers of the Senate. It is "the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." The "returns" must refer to the commissions or other evidences of election of the members of this body as separate from the "elections" or "qualifications," and of the "returns" the Senate is the judge. Again, the "qualifications" must relate to the age, citizenship, residence, and other personal qualifications of the person elected, and of these "qualifications" the Senate is also the judge; and these are matters to be determined separate from the "elections" and "returns." So also the Senate is the judge of the "elections" of its members as separate from the "returns and qualifications." The three enumerations would seem to be separate subjects, upon each of which the Senate is to judge in the performance of its constitutional duty; and as a judgment upon the returns is made a separate matter from a judgment upon the election, the inference would seem to be irresistible that an examination behind the returns was contemplated, that a judgment upon the election, independent of the return, might be formed.
> Against this construction of the constitutional powers and duties of the Senate the majority of the committee interpose objections which are of a consequential character mostly, but which will be considered. The committee say—

What? Not that we could not inquire, not that the Senate had no power to inquire, but—

> "it would be a dangerous exertion of power to look behind the commission for defects in the component parts of the legislature, or into the peculiar organization of the body for reasons to justify the Senate in declaring its acts absolutely null and void. Such a power, if carried to its legitimate extent, would subject the entire scope of State legislation to be overruled by our decision, and even the right of suffrage of individual members of the legislature whose elections were contested might be set aside. It would also lead to investigation into the motives of members in casting their votes, for the purpose of establishing a charge of bribery or corruption in particular cases."

Mind, the majority of the committee do not deny the power. They say the exercise of it would be dangerous.

> Reserving for the present the consideration of the extent to which the consequences of adjudging any act unconstitutional, or illegal, or invalid may be properly used as an argument against such an adjudication, the undersigned respectfully suggests that, in his judgment, the consequences here mentioned do not necessarily follow the decision apprehended. He understands it to be a necessary rule of all legislative bodies empowered to judge of the "elections, returns, and qualifications" of their own members that the person presenting the prima facie evidence of membership is allowed to take his seat, and is fully authorized to act until such prima facie evidence of right is overruled by the judgment of the body; and he never heard it doubted or questioned that the votes of a member so sitting were as valid for all purposes as the votes of a member whose seat was not contested and whose right to a seat was not questioned. Indeed, if it were not so, the admission of a member to a seat in a legislative body until his election, return, and qualifications had been definitely adjudged would be an absurdity. It would be the admission into the body of a voter who might, by the adjudication of the body itself, vitiate its whole proceedings.
> So also in the case supposed by the majority of the committee of alleged bribery and corruption. The undersigned has always supposed that a member of a legislative body who should accept a bribe was punishable for the crime, but he has never understood, nor does he now understand, that the vote of the member given under the corrupt influence vitiated the proceeding voted upon or rendered either void or voidable by legal adjudication such proceeding. The member bribed is still constitutionally and legally a member of the body notwithstanding his corruption, and retains all his rights and all his powers as a member until conviction for the crime ousts him from his seat.

> Again, the majority of the committee say "such a power does not belong to the Federal Government, and would, if claimed and carried out to its full extent, annihilate all the reserved rights of the States. It is a general principle of national law applicable to all distinct and independent governments, that if there arise any disputes in a State on the fundamental laws and administration, or on the prerogatives of the different powers of which it is composed, it is the business of the State alone to judge and determine them in conformity to its political constitution. No government has a right to intrude into the domestic affairs of another State, and attempt to influence its deliberations, or to control its action.

The paragraph just read is from the majority of the committee. Now, Senator Wright proceeds:

> These principles may be perfectly sound when applied to nations wholly disconnected with and independent of each other; but the undersigned respectfully submits that they can not be applicable to governments related to and connected with each other, as are the governments of the States of this Confederacy and the Federal Government, of which the States are component parts.

Senator Wright had not yet come to regard our country as anything more than a confederacy and a Federal Government, and yet he had got far enough to deny the doctrine that because a State undertakes to determine the question as to who shall vote for United States Senator the United States Senate can not look into it.

> And especially when the question is the proper representation of the State in that branch of the Federal Legislature where its sovereignty is represented in the particular manner pointed out by the Federal Constitution. Upon such a question that instrument, and not the general principles of international law, must govern the decision. We have already seen that the Constitution makes it the duty of the Senate to judge of the "elections" of its members.

What follows refers to the legality of the legislature.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is pretty warm, and I ask whether it will be convenient to the Senator from Connecticut to finish his argument in the morning?

Mr. PLATT. It will be.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I ask that the Du Pont case may be laid aside until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHANNON, Mr. BABCOCK, and Mr. COBB managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate authorizing the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses to correct an error in the enrolled bill (S. 2488) to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

JOHN BREITLING.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2119) for the relief of John Breitling.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John Breitling, of Nebraska, $738.25 for commissary stores furnished to United States troops.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall devote thirty minutes to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not desire to object, but I wish to have it understood that no other business than pension bills shall be transacted during the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. PASCO. I have a bill which I desire to call up.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it come in before the pension bills are considered. Let it be understood that after the pension bills are disposed of no other business is to be transacted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]? The Chair hears none.

ARREDONDO GRANT, FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4255) to provide for settlement of titles and disposition of public lands in the Arredondo grant, in Columbia County, Fla., to report it favorably. It is a matter that relates to our State, and I ask that it may receive immediate consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it does not lead to any debate I have no objection.

Mr. PASCO. I will withdraw it if it leads to debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEFFERSON FUESTON.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to allow me to call up a pension bill, but not in the regular order, as I can not remain. It is only four lines long.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3689) increasing the pension of Jefferson Fueston, of Company M, Tenth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay Jefferson Fueston, late of Company M, Tenth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENTS TO GENERALS NASH AND DAVIDSON.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, to call up joint resolution (S. R. 141) to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Davidson, of North Carolina.

Mr. VILAS. Is there not a unanimous-consent agreement that the pension cases shall be taken up in their order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the agreement of the Senate. The Chair recognized the Senator from North Carolina to make the request.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask permission of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to have the joint resolution taken up.

Mr. VILAS. Are we executing the unanimous-consent agreement, or what is the arrangement? I understood pension bills were to be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not quite sure that under the agreement I can yield for other business. I should like very much to accommodate all Senators, I will say.

Mr. BUTLER. This a very short measure. If it leads to any discussion I will withdraw it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If there is no objection I will yield for the consideration of the joint resolution, but after that I shall insist upon the regular order, although several other Senators wish me to yield to them.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to appropriate $5,000 for the erection of a monument in honor of the memory of Brig. Gen. Francis Nash, of North Carolina, and the further sum of $5,000 for the erection of a monument in honor of the memory of Brig. Gen. William Davidson, of North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. At the request of a member of his family, I wish to move to amend the name of Brig. Gen. William Davidson by inserting after "William" the name "Lee"; so as to read "Brig. Gen. William Lee Davidson."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, the title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to carry into effect two resolutions of the Continental Congress directing monuments to be erected to the memory of Gens. Francis Nash and William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina."

SARAH COMLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 937) granting a pension to Sarah Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly, was announced as first in order on the Calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill has been read at length, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] offered an amendment which I trust he will withdraw.

Mr. ALLEN. I think I will withdraw the amendment at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the committee amendments be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Pensions reported, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five"; and in the same line, after the word "month," to insert "the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly, and pay her a pension of $35 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments were agreed to when the bill was formerly under consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly."

SILAS M. STEVENS.

The bill (S. 2931) granting an increase of pension to Silas M. Stevens was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Silas M. Stevens, late of the U. S. S. Lackawanna, and to grant him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

MARGARET A. LUTHY.

The bill (H. R. 4712) granting a pension to Margaret A. Luthy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll at $8 per month the name of Margaret A. Luthy, widow of Franklin Luthy, late of Lieutenant Allen's detachment of recruits, Missouri Mexican Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS HOLADAY.

The bill (H. R. 2326) granting a pension to Thomas Holaday was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the invalid pension roll the name of Thomas Holaday, late a private in Company C, Kimball's regiment Missouri Volunteer State Militia, at $24 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIANNA C. HALL.

The bill (H. R. 4189) granting increase of pension to Georgianna C. Hall, dependent mother of Maj. John W. Williams, deceased, late surgeon, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension allowed under the act of January 29, 1887, to Georgianna C. Hall, as the widow of William Hall, of Company B, Third Louisiana Volunteers, in the Mexican war, to $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE A. HOUGH.

The bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Caroline A. Hough, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John Hough, upon the pension roll, and to grant her a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension of $17 per month which she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM subsequently said: I understand that the rate fixed by House bill 2604 is $30. The rule has been to give widows of generals of General Hough's rank $50. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to amend the bill by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty" before the word "dollars," in line 7.

Mr. HAWLEY. The proposition is to make it $50?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to know something about that, because we are striving to get what we can for some of these poor people.

Mr. CULLOM. General Hough was a general in the Army, a splendid soldier, and he happened to live in Illinois, and that is the only reason why the rate should not be $50 that I have ever heard of. I want his widow to fare as well as the widows of other men of the same rank and service in the Army.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

KATE GRANT.

The bill (H. R. 3607) to increase the pension of Kate Grant was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Kate Grant, widow of the late Capt. Charles E. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 14, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on approving the Journal.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I find on page 5207 among other names read by the Clerk as present the name of "Mr. PRINCE." I desire to say to the House that I was not in the building at that time.

The SPEAKER. At what time?

Mr. PRINCE. At the time of the taking of the last vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed at the Clerk's desk that the gentleman went out after the question was put.

Mr. PRINCE. If the Chair was so informed I desire to say he was misinformed; for this reason, that after the vote was taken on the resolution I supposed that was the end of the matter, and I left; and in company with me was my colleague, Mr. GRAFF. I see we are both recorded as being "present and not voting." I left, believing that was an end of the entire matter. When I saw the RECORD I found that there was a further roll call, upon the amended resolution, at which, neither at the time of putting the question, during the vote, nor at the end of it was I in this building.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be considered as approved. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS OF MAIMED UNION SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 8354) to adjust the pensions of maimed Union soldiers and sailors of the late war of the rebellion, and ask that the bill be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska submits a privileged report on a bill the title of which will be read.

The title was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the bill be printed and be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which I send to the desk. It will not take two minutes to pass it.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7771) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to J. H. Crenshaw Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Carterville, Mo., 1 condemned cannon and 15 cannon balls, and also to the General Joe Bailey Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Nevada, Mo., 1 condemned cannon and 15 cannon balls.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy such articles can be spared without detriment to the public interests: And provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense on account of such donation.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTON of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment until the Chair gets through the necessary business?

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 708) to increase the pension of Albert Ellis;

A bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton;

A bill (H. R. 3189) to increase the pension of John S. Cochenour;

A bill (H. R. 3448) authorizing the county of Navajo, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house and jail at the county seat thereof;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 180) for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker; and

A bill (H. R. 5105) to abolish days of grace on promissory notes, drafts, etc., in the District of Columbia.

CORRECTION OF ENROLLED BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 2488) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,'" by striking out the word "nine," in line 2 of said enrolled bill, and inserting "eight."

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under the special order.

CONTESTED ELECTION—CHEATHAM VS. WOODARD.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report that I would like to make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs pardon. The Chair thought the gentleman rose to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. PRINCE. It is a report with reference to the contested-election case of Henry P. Cheatham against Frederick A. Woodard. I would like to have the resolutions read to the House, and then I will ask for their adoption.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Under the special order there is nothing to displace this special order except appropriation bills. Is it in order to bring up a contested-election case?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a privileged matter. The question of the right of a member to his seat has precedence over even a special order of the House. The Chair was not aware that the gentleman from Illinois had a privileged report, but thought he was asking for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Henry P. Cheatham was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Second Congressional district of North Carolina, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Frederick A. Woodard was elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Second Congressional district of North Carolina, and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. PRINCE. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. PRINCE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

The report of the committee is as follows:

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Elections No. 2, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Elections No. 2, to whom was referred the contested election case of Henry P. Cheatham, contestant, against Frederick A. Woodard, contestee, from the Second Congressional district of North Carolina, respectfully report that, after a careful consideration of the printed evidence and briefs filed in said cause and having heard the oral arguments of counsel for said parties in support of their respective claims, the committee find the following facts, viz: The said district is composed of nine counties, to wit, Bertie, Edgecombe, Greene, Halifax, Lenoir, Northhampton, Warren, Wayne, and Wilson.

Frederick A. Woodard, Democrat, received 14,721 votes, H. P. Cheatham, Republican, received 9,413 votes, and H. F. Freeman, Populist, received 5,314 votes, at the general election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894. Contestee received the certificate of election, was sworn in, and is now the sitting member of the House from that district. Contestant, within the time required by law, served upon contestee his notice of contest, alleging various matters as reasons why contestee was not legally elected and claiming that he (contestant) was duly and legally elected.

To this notice contestee served on contestant his answer, specifically denying all of the material allegations in said notice.

From the evidence it appears that contestant and his brother-in-law, George H. White, were rival candidates for the nomination for Congress before the convention of the Republican party, which met in said district in Weldon, on June 27, 1894.

The contest preceding the convention between contestant and George H. White was active, earnest, and bitter. At said nominating convention, owing to contesting delegations, the bitterness between said parties was increased and each insisted that he was the regular nominee of the convention for Congress. Both remained in the field, each declaring himself to be the regular nominee of the party, until September 24, 1894, when the Republican national Congressional committee declared that Mr. Cheatham was the regular nominee of his party in said district. Owing to this unfortunate trouble between contestant and George H. White, as appears from the evidence, a very great many of the colored Republican voters refused to vote for Mr. Cheatham, a few of them even preferred to vote for Mr. Woodard, Democratic candidate, and a great many of them voted for H. F. Freeman, the Populist candidate. Contestant contends that the colored voters are in a majority in the district and that the colored vote was solid for him. The evidence in the case failed to sustain either of these allegations. It is further alleged by contestant that the election was not conducted fairly and that poll holders were ignorant and corrupt and defrauded him. This allegation is not maintained, except in a few instances, where the poll holders were shown to be ignorant. From the evidence it appears that this is the first contest that has occurred in this district, and it would seem that if the Republican party was united on their candidate the district would be represented in Congress by a Republican. Conceding to contestant the benefit of every reasonable doubt and all legitimate presumptions in the irregularity in the conduct of said election, your committee do not feel warranted upon the facts proved in holding that contestant was elected, because he falls far short of a sufficient number of votes to legally elect him as a Representative in Congress from said district.

The committee therefore recommend the adoption by the House of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That Henry P. Cheatham was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Second Congressional district of North Carolina and is not entitled to a seat therein.

"Resolved, That Frederick A. Woodard was elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Second Congressional district of North Carolina and is entitled to retain his seat therein."

SPECIAL ORDER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

DELEGATE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, it was the intent to call up to-day the motion to reconsider the motion by which the bill H. R. 3826, the Alaska Delegate bill, was denied a third reading, but I do not desire to interfere with pension matters, and therefore I give notice that I will ask a vote upon the motion to-morrow morning.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar under the special order, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order, which the Clerk will report.

The special order was read.

EMILY A. MANN.

The first pension business was the bill (H. R. 3480) for the relief of Emily A. Mann, which the Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Chairman, that is not the first bill in order. There were several bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs which were passed over the other night and ought to be taken up before this bill is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this bill was pending when the committee rose at the last session for the consideration of pension bills under the special order. The Clerk will complete the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Emily A. Mann, widow of William R. Rogers, late of First Illinois Light Artillery.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, at the close of the session on last Friday evening I had risen to oppose this bill, but gave way for a motion that the committee rise. I do not propose at this time to discuss the bill at any length. I wish merely to state what it is, and then leave it to the members of the Committee of the Whole to decide as they see fit, as they undoubtedly will. This is a case of a soldier's widow who remarried, and is now the widow of a civilian, not of a soldier. This bill proposes to pension her under a name which has not its counterpart upon the rolls of the Army. The soldier served a little less than two months, when he died. His widow was pensioned, but subsequently remarried, and now, after she has voluntarily retired herself from the pension roll, this bill proposes to reinstate her upon that roll. The principal objection to bills of this character lies in the fact, as I have already suggested, that there is no counterpart of service upon which to base the pension. Again, this is the third bill of this kind which has been before this House, and if we pass this bill we shall establish a precedent which will come up here every Friday evening, and probably at every session in the future, to occupy the time of the House and to expend the money of the United States for the benefit of persons who have voluntarily relinquished their claim to pension by their own free act. That is the character and condition of this case, and with these remarks I leave the bill to the judgment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, after the statement which has just been made that this lady is not the widow of a soldier, as she is described in the bill, I shall move to amend so as to make the bill conform to the fact. It ought to be amended by inserting in line 6, after the word "of," the words "S. K. Mann, and previously widow of." I offer that amendment in order that the fact may appear that this lady was formerly the widow of a soldier. I think we ought not to state in a bill anything that is contrary to the fact.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "of," in line 6, insert "S. K. Mann, and previously widow of"; so that it will read "widow of S. K. Mann, and previously widow of William R. Rogers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. This is a bill to pension a remarried widow, and as that is not conformable to the general law, there ought to be some specific reason for making an exception in this particular case, because we have in the country more than 10,000 widows who are exactly in the same position as this one, soldiers' widows who have remarried and who therefore do not come within the general law. I think there ought to be an exceptional reason for passing a bill like this.

Mr. PICKLER. I will yield to my colleague on the committee to reply to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. KERR. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, that it is rather late to raise the particular question that is now raised by him, inasmuch as it has been the policy of this House to pass every bill recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions where the beneficiary was the war widow of a soldier. That I state as the first particular circumstance that ought to recommend this bill to favorable consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. If that is the policy to be followed, why is it not better for the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report a general bill covering all these cases?

Mr. KERR. I will say to the gentleman from Maine, who knows everything that goes on in this House except the particular thing which he does not appear to know in this instance, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has recommended the passage of such a bill, and I have had in charge for two or three weeks a bill that does render eligible to pension all widows who were the wives of soldiers for any period during the war.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then the point is this: Would it not be better, if we are to adopt that policy, to take up and pass the general bill rather than to pension a particular widow, unless there are some special or exceptional circumstances?

Mr. KERR. There is no reason why in the case of this poor widow justice should be delayed by waiting for this House to pass a general bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there anything that distinguishes the case of this widow from the case of 10,000 other widows?

Mr. KERR. There is. Although the gentleman is much better able to make an estimate than I am, I will say there are not 10,000 widows or the half of 10,000 widows in a similar situation to this lady. Let me state the particular circumstances; and I do not wish to encroach upon the time of the House by any prolonged discussion of a particular bill.

This widow was remarried in 1865, and thereby forfeited the pension she had been drawing as the widow of William R. Rogers. Rogers died in the service. He was with Grant in front of Donelson and he gave his life for the Union, although he did not die in battle, but from disease contracted in the service. A pension was granted to her. She was a war widow; she was this man's wife long before the war. In 1865, as I have said, she forfeited her pension by remarriage; and, although her second husband died in 1871, she did not for years apply to be reinstated. But in 1887, as the evidence shows, she suffered a fall which injured her spine, and ever since that time she has been confined to her house and for a great part of the time to her bed. She is now entirely penniless. She has no children, and depends upon the charity of friends.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think that the facts the gentleman states are sufficient to justify the passage of this bill; but I want the real reason for granting the pension to appear in the bill. If the gentleman will yield for the purpose, I will move to add as an amendment these words:

This pension being granted, notwithstanding remarriage, for the exceptional reason that said widow is totally disabled and without any means of support.

Mr. KERR. I have no objection to that amendment, except that this bill is now in the exact form of all the bills of this kind coming from the Invalid Pensions Committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. The passage of the bill is entirely proper if that explanation appears.

Mr. KERR. I have no objection to the amendment if——

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. PICKLER. We do not want that amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want it to appear distinctly why this widow is picked out from among thousands of others.

Mr. PICKLER. She is a war widow.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it seems to me if we are to pick out one case from among thousands there ought to appear some special reason for it. If this is simply the case of a remarried widow, there are tens of thousands of others in the same situation. But if we state in the bill that this widow is pensioned as being totally disabled and without means of support, that will show the reason why this case has been made an exception.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Insert at the end of line 7 the following:
"This pension being granted, notwithstanding remarriage, for the exceptional reason that said widow is totally disabled and without any means of support."

Mr. PICKLER. I think this amendment is wholly unnecessary. The report shows that this is a war widow; that she was the wife of a soldier who contracted at Donelson the disease from which he died. The gentleman from Maine, by his amendment, proposes to get up a new form for our pension bills; he seeks to inject into this bill a new and particular reason for granting the pension.

A MEMBER. An apology.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; an apology. The amendment proposes to put an argument in the bill; and arguments ought not to be inserted in a bill. The argument of the case is in the report. I know that when the gentleman fully understands the case he will not insist upon the amendment. It is stated in the report that in addition to being a war widow she "is now over 60 years of age, in destitute circumstances, and has no means of support except contributions from friends, and no property."

Mr. DINGLEY. I say that it is proper to pension a remarried widow when those facts appear. But let us not establish a precedent for applications in 10,000 cases where there are not just such circumstances.

Mr. PICKLER. The statement which the gentleman proposes as an amendment ought not to go into the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it ought. Without some such explanatory statement the bill will be constantly pointed to hereafter as a precedent for pensions in cases not having the same peculiar merit as this.

Mr. BRUMM. I should like to know whether there are any children.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope this amendment will not prevail. I am astonished to see such a discussion as this arise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate on this bill has expired.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope the bill will pass without the amendment. I am astonished at gentlemen raising such a question on a meritorious bill of this kind.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DINGLEY,

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 45, noes 74.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, there being less than one-fifth of the members rising to support the demand.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

NICHOLAS SWINGLE.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, at the last Friday night session House bill No. 1175, to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Nicholas Swingle, was the first bill on the Calendar to be considered——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar, which is the bill to which the gentleman refers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorised and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Nicholas Swingle, late of Company E, Seventy-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and that an honorable discharge be issued in lieu thereof, to date September 15, 1864.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, how that bill comes up now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have some light on this question. I do not think that this bill ought to be rushed through without discussion like the other was. This bill has no merit whatever, while the other was a meritorious bill. I would like to have the report read or some light thrown upon it some way or other.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1175) entitled "A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Nicholas Swingle," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

A similar bill to the one under consideration was introduced in the Fifty third Congress and favorably reported by your committee, which report your committee hereby affirms and adopts.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1671, Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8017) entitled "A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Nicholas Swingle," having had the same under consideration, report it back favorably, and recommend its passage.

Nicholas Swingle, private, Company E, Seventy-eighth Ohio Volunteers, was enrolled at Zanesville, Ohio, March 18, 1864, to serve three years. On the muster roll of company for March and April, 1864, his presence or absence is not stated; May and June, 1864, "absent at hospital since June 12, 1864"; July and August, 1864, "absent, sick since June 12." His name is dropped from all subsequent rolls until the muster out of company, dated July 11, 1865, which reports him "deserted from hospital at Big Shanty, Ga., on or about June 15, 1864."

It will be noted that in the above statement of Swingle's military record, furnished by the War Department, it appears that the charge of desertion was not entered against his name until the muster out of his company, July 11, 1865, and then by direction of the chief mustering officer of the Seventeenth Army Corps, and against the judgment of the second lieutenant of his company, who was the acting muster officer of the company.

It appears from affidavits on file in connection with this case that Swingle was wounded in the right knee while on the skirmish line near Big Shanty, Ga., June 11, 1864; was sent to a field hospital, where he remained for some days, and when able to perform duty was discharged and ordered to rejoin his command. Swingle did not reach his company, and from the time of leaving the hospital all trace of him was lost until he appeared at his home in Muskingum County, Ohio, in June, 1865, completely broken in health, unable to speak above a whisper, and so badly shattered mentally as to be unable to give any intelligible account of his wanderings.

The story gathered from him was that after his discharge from the field hospital, and while on his way to his command, he was overtaken by Confederate cavalry, captured, and sent to a military prison, where he was detained until his parole, when he was sent to Annapolis, Md. After remaining there for some time he came home, understanding that the war was over.

It appears that when Swingle entered the service he was a strong, able-bodied man, whose good character and faithfulness as a soldier are testified to by the affidavits of his captain and second lieutenant, both of whom state that, although absent from military control without authority, they did not believe him to be a deserter. In less than a year after his disappearance he returned home shattered in mind and body, and unable to give any consecutive or lucid story that would enable his friends to explain his absence to the authorities.

Under all the circumstances your committee is of the opinion that the relief prayed for in this bill should be granted, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I just desire to make this statement—I do not wish to detain the committee—but on last Friday evening, when a motion was made to go into Committee of the Whole, on a division it was found that there were but 50 members present. I made the point of no quorum, with the understanding, as stated at the time, that if I could secure unanimous consent that these bills for the removal of charges of desertion and for the correction of military records should be passed over and not brought forward for consideration, but let the committee go on and reach claims upon the Calendar that had some merit in them, I would withdraw the point of order. That agreement was made, and several meritorious bills were passed.

That agreement was made, I thought, in perfect good faith. Certainly it was on my part; and that evening some seven or eight of these desertion bills were passed over and other bills taken up, as I have said, and passed. I believed then that under that agreement these bills would still remain in obscurity, and that we would take up the Calendar to-day, commencing with the meritorious claims, and consider them, or, at least, that we would certainly not go back and take up these bills which were laid aside under that agreement on last Friday night. Now, I hope the House will keep faith with the agreement and not go back.

I make the point that this is not in order, and that the House can not go back and take up these bills out of order in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ERDMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has evidently jumped from the frying pan into the fire. On Friday night we could take up and discuss these bills without limit, whereas now we are limited to ten minutes on each bill.

But as to the point of order suggested by the gentleman, if this is the same Committee of the Whole as the committee which acted on these bills on Friday night last—and it seems to have been so determined by the ruling of the Chair on last Friday night—then clearly that faith ought to be kept to which the gentleman refers, and the agreement fixed in the Committee of the Whole ought to be adhered to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 107, noes 3.

So the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM F. SONGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4193) to correct the military record of William F. Songer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this bill is now brought forward because it was passed over by a mistake.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against William F. Souger, late a private of Company B, Forty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the records of the War Department, and to issue to said Souger a certificate of honorable discharge.

Mr. HARDY. I want to offer an amendment to this bill. The name in the bill is wrong. The name is printed "Souger." I move to strike out the letter "u" where it occurs in the bill and insert the letter "n"; so as to read "Songer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I would like to have the report read which accompanies this bill.

The report (by Mr. WOOMER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4193) entitled "A bill to correct the military record of William F. Souger," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass:

This is a bill enacting that William F. Souger, private Company B, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, be relieved of the charge of desertion.

The evidence shows that he served faithfully during his first enlistment; that in October, 1864, nine months after his second enlistment, he deserted, returning to his home to visit his wife, who was sick, and she remained sick a long time thereafter.

In consideration of his faithful service for three years, the committee are of opinion that this bill should pass.

The question being taken on laying aside the bill, the committee divided, on demand of Mr. TALBERT; and there were—ayes 94, noes 5.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

HOMER C. M'CUSKEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4872) to correct the military record of Homer C. McCuskey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion now standing against Homer C. McCuskey, second lieutenant of the Seventh Regiment of United States Colored Troops, on the records of the War Department, be, and the same is, removed, and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue to said Homer C. McCuskey an honorable discharge, the same to date from the muster out of said Seventh Regiment of United States Colored Troops.

Mr. HAGER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GRIFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4872) to correct the military record of Homer C. McCuskey, having had the same under consideration, would report thereon as follows:

The object of the bill is to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Homer C. McCuskey, second lieutenant of the Seventh Regiment, United States Colored Troops, and that the Secretary of War be directed to issue to him an honorable discharge, to date from the muster out of such regiment. The records of the War Department show the service of the soldier to be as follows:

That Homer C. McCuskey was enrolled as a private in Company G, Thirty-first Ohio Infantry, to serve three years, and that he was discharged October 29, 1861, because of "chronic enlargement of the liver."

As Homer C. McCuskey he again enlisted as a private in Company D, Sixty-second Ohio Infantry, February 18, 1864, and was discharged by reason of promotion to second lieutenant, Seventh Regiment United States Colored Troops, November 28, 1864.

It is also shown by the records that Homer C. McCuskey, aged 21 years, was enrolled November 30, 1864, and was mustered into service as second lieutenant Company B, Seventh United States Colored Infantry, December 19, 1864, to date November 30, 1864, to serve three years.

He was transferred to Company K, same regiment, December 31, 1865. The muster rolls report him as follows: From enrollment to June 30, 1865, "present"; August 31 and to December 31, 1865, "absent sick in hospital"; February 28 and to June 30, 1866, "absent without authority."

On March 24, 1866, Lieut. Col. O. E. Pratt, commanding the regiment, reported that Mr. McCuskey had been sent to hospital at New Orleans by the surgeon in charge of the post hospital at Indianola, Tex., in September, 1865; that he (Colonel Pratt) had since ascertained from a reliable source that Mr. McCuskey had not entered hospital at New Orleans, but had proceeded to his home in Ohio and thence to Minnesota, where he was engaged in farming; and that he had been reported absent without leave since February 20, 1866. That report having been duly forwarded to the War Department, and Mr. McCuskey's address not being known, he was notified by newspaper publication to make defense to the charge of desertion within thirty days or be subject to recommendation for dismissal. No response or defense having been received, Mr. McCuskey was "dropped from the rolls of the Army for desertion," he "having absented himself from his command since September 1, 1865, without authority," by order of the Secretary of War, in paragraph 1, Special Orders No. 390, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, August 9, 1866. No medical record of him has been found.

The affidavit of the beneficiary, made on the 4th day of January, 1886, shows that he remained at the hospital at Indianola until September, 1865; that his health continuously grew worse, and that he was informed by the post surgeon that if he recovered he would have to go North, and that such surgeon gave him written permission to go for his health, which written permit both McCuskey and his wife, Emily J. McCuskey, in their affidavits, stated was lost with other of McCuskey's army papers about the time they moved to Iowa; that he went to his home at Somerset, Ohio, and that at the time of leaving the hospital he was unable to get to the boat alone and was assisted thereto; that he continued sick and unable for active duty after his return home, and that he sent in his resignation on account of sickness, and, on the assurance that it would be accepted, supposed it had been until long thereafter; that being in poor health and only a boy in years and experience, he did not give the matter the concern that he should have done or find out just what action was taken as to his resignation or whether it was received.

Accompanying the papers is an affidavit made by John L. Sheridan on the 9th day of October, 1890, stating that he was well acquainted with McCuskey, late a lieutenant in the Seventh United States Colored Infantry, and that McCuskey applied to him in the autumn of 1865 for information as to the method to be pursued to resign from the service of the United States; that, at said McCuskey's suggestion, the said John L. Sheridan wrote to the late General Sheridan, then commanding Department of the Gulf, and was by him informed that the resignation would be accepted for cause, provided such resignation was forwarded through regular channels; that said McCuskey in his affidavit states that said John L. Sheridan was a brother of Gen. P. H. Sheridan, commanding the department in which McCuskey's regiment was then serving, and that said McCuskey, upon forwarding his resignation, relied upon the assurance that it would be accepted. He further states in his affidavit that he did not learn that his resignation had not been accepted or that he was borne on the records of the Army as a deserter until long after his regiment had been mustered out. The affidavit of Mrs. McCuskey, made on the 13th day of August, 1891, corroborates her husband's statement as to his reaching home sick, and also as to seeing the written permission given by the surgeon for him to go to his home.

Your committee, from an examination of the records and papers in the case, are therefore of the opinion that the soldier in this case never intended to desert or believed that he had deserted, but that his absence from his command at the time it was mustered out was due to his ill condition of health, the admonition of the surgeon that if he expected to recover he must go North, the written permission of the surgeon so to do, the subsequent tender of his resignation upon arrival at home after he discovered that he was not recovering his health, and the assurance received by him that such resignation would be accepted for cause such as prompted him to tender the same, which was his illness, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

JOHN J. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3514) granting an honorable discharge to John J. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge to John J. Johnson, late a private in Company D in the Second Regiment of Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers, as of date June 14, 1864.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3514) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John J. Johnson, late a private in Company D of the Second Regiment of Arkansas Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge, beg leave to report:

John J. Johnson enlisted as a private in Company D of the Second Regiment of Arkansas Cavalry on the 10th day of February, 1864. Lemuel R. Jones, who was second lieutenant of the same company, testifies to the good character and faithful service as a soldier of Johnson until reports came to the company, in April, then serving at Springfield, Mo., and in the country surrounding Springfield, that the guerrillas were raiding the Union families in Newton County, Ark., where the family of Johnson and of most of his comrades in the company lived. These reports so worked upon the members of the company that they asked permission of the colonel of the regiment to go to the assistance of their families. Permission was refused by the colonel on the ground of the extreme danger of a small party going to such a distance from the command.

During the summer and fall of 1864 about 60 men of said company left the command and went to Newton County to defend and care for their families, and Johnson was among them, and was at the time a sergeant in the company. At the time of leaving he wrote a letter to the colonel of the regiment stating that himself and the men had no intention of deserting, but were going to the assistance of their imperiled families. This letter was given to the colonel with the morning report and the colonel stated that he had promised the men furloughs, but the great danger from the enemy had deterred him from granting them.

In December, 1864, Lieutenant Jones resigned to return home to Newton County, Ark., and was told by the colonel to inform the men that if they would return to the command they should not be molested or punished. When Jones returned to Newton County he found his men scouting the country and doing thoroughly what they had gone home to do. In May, 1865, Lieutenant Jones returned to Springfield and reported to Gen. J. B. Sanborn, commanding the Southwest Military District, and requested that the members of his company then in Newton County should be placed on detached service and allowed to remain there to protect the Union families of the county. The request of Lieutenant Jones was granted, and a general order issued placing said soldiers on detached service and ordering them to remain in Newton County until further orders.

Sergeant Dickey was ordered to take command of the men, which he did, and they performed effective and faithful service. In August, 1865, Sergeant Dickey was ordered to return to his command, which was then at Memphis, Tenn. He did so return with most of the men, but Johnson and some others failed to get the notice of the order, and did not report in consequence, and was not mustered out as were his comrades who received notice of the order to return to the command.

In view of all these facts your committee are of opinion that Johnson did not intend to desert, and did not desert his command, and was only prevented from being mustered out with his command by a failure to receive notice of the order to report at Memphis.

The bill is therefore reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EZRA ABBOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3565) to grant an honorable discharge to Ezra Abbott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge to Ezra Abbott, late of Company I of the Twenty-first Michigan Volunteer Infantry, to date from the 10th day of September, 1863.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report (by Mr. BISHOP), as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 365) to grant an honorable discharge to Ezra Abbott, having considered the same, would respectfully report the same back to the House and recommend that the bill do pass.

The facts relied upon for such recommendation are fully set forth in a report of your committee made in the Fifty-first Congress, hereto attached and adopted as a part of this report. A bill for the relief of such soldiers passed both Houses of the Fifty-first Congress, but because of an error in such bill the act was inoperative for the relief intended. The report of the Adjutant-General on such bill is also hereto attached.

[House Report No. 2656, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10526) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Ezra Abbott, late of Company I, Twenty-first Michigan Volunteer Infantry, having considered the same, respectfully report:

That Ezra Abbott, the claimant, enlisted in August, 1862, and served faithfully to July 25, 1865, excepting for a period of four months and eight days, during which time he was in desertion. Had he returned to the service eight days sooner he could have been relieved under the general law.

The report of the Secretary of War, herewith submitted, shows that the claimant deserted from the hospital, where he had been confined for quite a long period with chronic diarrhea. He went home just long enough to recover his health sufficiently to pass medical examination, when he reenlisted in another organization than the one in which he had first served, but without bounty.

Your committee believe the relief asked for should be granted, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied with that report.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PATRICK RAINEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2338) for the relief of Patrick Rainey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Patrick Rainey, late of Company K, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and issue to said Rainey an honorable discharge.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. Let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2338) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Patrick Rainey, late of Company K, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, have carefully considered the same and beg leave to report:

Patrick Rainey enlisted in the Fifty-second Ohio Infantry as a private on the 15th day of August, 1862, to serve three years. He was born in Ireland in the year 1843, and hence was but 14 years old at the time of his enlistment. Like many other boys, he ran away from home to enlist. His mother, his father being dead, went with one John Cunningham to Camp Dennison to bring him home. All their arguments failed and the lad remained. Subsequently his older brother, James Rainey, went to Nashville, Tenn., and partly by persuasion, partly by coercion, succeeded in getting Patrick to leave the regiment and go with him to town, where he bought him a suit of citizen's clothes and refused to allow him to return to the regiment.

After getting him back home with difficulty a close guard was kept over him to prevent his return to the regiment until after it was mustered out.

Your committee believe, in view of the facts and the almost extreme youth of the boy, that there is nothing in his conduct to warrant the charge of desertion, and the bill is therefore reported favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken on laying aside the bill to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEELE. That man is admittedly a deserter. Let us have a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 5.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS S. DAUGHERTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3333) granting a pension to Thomas S. Daugherty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be placed upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas S. Daugherty, late a private in Company A, in the First Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

Mr. PICKLER. Who wants the report read, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MILNES. I should like to hear the report.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3333) granting a pension to Thomas S. Daugherty, submit the following report:

Your committee find that Thomas S. Daugherty enlisted as a private in Company A, First Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry, in the fall of 1864, and was discharged from the service on the 9th day of August, 1865, having been enlisted to serve one year or during the war. In June, 1865, the telegraph wires being down, he was sent with a special message to be delivered to the commanding officer at Midway, Ky., his command being at the time stationed at Bagdad. Upon arriving at Midway the conductor of the train, upon which Daugherty was in the discharge of the duty upon which he had been sent, refused to check the speed of the train to allow him to get off with the message, and, determined to perform the duty upon which he had been sent at all hazards, he jumped off of the train, and in doing so his left foot slipped under a cross-tie, throwing him backward, dislocating his left ankle and knee, striking the extreme lower part of his spinal column, also the back of his head, rupturing the drum membrane of the right ear.

From these injuries he never recovered. His knee was set, but his ankle was not, and a running sore resulted that has never healed. His right ear is totally deaf, and he has suffered much from the shock to his spine. His disabilities have increased with advancing years, and the only reason given by the Pension Bureau for the rejection of his claim for pension is that the First Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry, to which he belonged, was a State organization. There is no dispute as to the facts nor as to the additional fact that he is now totally disabled from the performance of manual labor of any kind. He is an educated physician, but for some years has been wholly unable to practice his profession.

In view of the fact that the injuries from which the claimant suffers were incurred in the service, and in the discharge of an important duty devolved upon him, your committee believe he is entitled to a pension, notwithstanding he belonged to a State military organization, and the bill is therefore reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MINNIE PARKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6113) granting a pension to Minnie Parker, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Ely S. Parker, late of the United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Minnie Parker, widow of Brt. Brig. Gen. Ely S. Parker, late of the United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $50 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 6, between the words "of" and "Brevet," insert the words "Colonel and."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JERUSHA H. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5279) granting a pension to Jerusha H. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, Jerusha H. Brown, of St. Paul, Minn., daughter of Samuel Hayward, a soldier in the American Revolution.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5279) granting a pension to Jerusha H. Brown, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

A similar bill was before your committee at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress and was reported favorably. The report of the committee (House Report No. 1458, Fifty-third Congress), fully setting forth the facts, is adopted by your committee as their report, and the bill is returned with a favorable recommendation.

[House Report No. 1458, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7307) granting a pension to Jerusha H. Brown, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant is the daughter of Samuel Hayward, who served for a year and four months in Captains Bliss and Dana's companies in the Connecticut Line, war of the Revolution. The service is a matter of record, and the soldier and his widow, Sarah Hayward, were pensioners during their lifetime.

The testimony of Samuel Pennock, Mary J. Patterson, Nathan S. Young, and F. L. Young establishes the identity of the claimant as the only surviving child of the soldier. These witnesses knew Samuel Hayward in his lifetime and were acquainted with the members of his family. Jerusha H. Brown, the beneficiary, is a member of the "Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution," and a copy of a certificate of her membership in that organization is on file with the papers.

The testimony further shows that the claimant is 71 years old, without property or income, and a sufferer from rheumatism to such an extent that she can do no manual labor, and that she is dependent on others for a livelihood.

There are several precedents for the allowance of pensions to the aged and dependent daughters of Revolutionary soldiers—one of them (the case of Hannah Lyons) having become a law at this session of Congress—and in the light of the facts set forth above your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, it appears from the reading of this report that this is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier; that the father and mother of this claimant were borne upon the pension rolls for something like seventy years. Now, I should like to know what is going to be the policy and how long we are to continue pensions. Is there to be no end to them? It seems to me that we ought not to adopt this policy of pensioning daughters of soldiers who fought in a war more than one hundred years ago. It seems to me like a very bad policy. I am certainly opposed to it.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Michigan that this is in the line of precedents established not only by this Congress but by former Congresses. In fact, no bill of this kind has been presented to either the Fifty-third or Fifty-fourth Congresses and been defeated. They have all been acted upon favorably. So that this is not the first precedent established in this line. It is only one of a series.

Mr. MILNES. It is a bad precedent.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The evidence is clear as to the relationship of this claimant to the Revolutionary soldier and as to her entire dependence.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELEANOR CARROLL POE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $100 per month, the name of Eleanor Carroll Poe, widow of the late Col. Orlando M. Poe, of the United States Army.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, striking out the words "one hundred," in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe, having considered the matters in evidence, adopt as their own Senate Report No. 136, and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, striking out, in line 5, the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The Senate report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 136, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe, after full consideration, make a favorable report thereon.

The bill proposes to pension, at the rate of $100 a month, the widow of an officer who rendered distinguished service both in war and in peace.

For twenty years General Poe was a member of General Sherman's staff. The relations that these two men sustained to each other are set forth by General Sherman with peculiar directness and with much feeling in the following letter:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
"Washington, D. C., October 30, 1883.

"MY DEAR FRIEND: By reason of circumstances long since revealed, the little group of officers which has daily gathered at these headquarters will soon give place to others, and we will scatter—you to your post of duty at Detroit and I to my home at St. Louis.

"The relation between a general and his personal staff is too intimate, too sacred, to be treated in General Orders. So, according to a habit long since formed, I will address you thus rather than pay a fulsome compliment for publication.

"I construe your personal and official service near my person to have begun in the spring of 1864 at Nashville, and that it will not cease till February 3, 1884, so that you will have been with me twenty years—and twenty most eventful years. In the beginning we were in the throes of a great civil war, with vast armies in motion needing guidance and maintenance, wherein your well-stored mind and sound judgment aided me more than you ever can know.

"We gradually but surely swept our enemies out of existence, and in 1865 rode into this capital of Washington to celebrate a grand victory, and, what was better, a peace founded on principles of truth as lasting as time.

"Most of our comrades went to their homes, but our work was not yet done. Out of the wrecks of the vast armies had to be created smaller ones adapted to the new condition of facts, and these had to be guided and directed so as to prepare the way for the inevitable result—subduing the Indian and making possible the settlement of the vast region west of the Missouri; to cover and protect the great railways which now connect the Atlantic with the Pacific, and bring those most valuable communities into more intimate relations with the remainder of our country. This, too, has been done in our day, and for your most valuable assistance in this connection I am greatly indebted to you. To deal in more particulars would swell this letter to an uncomfortable length, and I will only add that throughout our relations have been so confident that either could anticipate the action of the other without waiting for the conclusion.

"My career is now at an end, but there is no reason why you should not go on to the highest round of the ladder in our profession. I know your partiality to your own special branch; but you have had experience in all, and as to command men in battle is regarded by the world as the highest branch of the military art I would have you bear that in mind should the occasion arise in your life.

"Wishing you and yours all possible honor and happiness,

"I am, truly and sincerely, your friend,

"W. T. SHERMAN, General.

"Col. O. M. POE, A. D. C.,
"Brevet Brigadier-General, United States Army."

Mr. PICKLER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I think that is sufficient.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether this rate of $50 per month is not higher than the amount usually given to the widows of officers of this rank?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; it is higher than is usually given.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any exceptional reason for raising the amount in this case? It seems to me there ought to be some uniform rule in reference to these cases.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman who reported the bill [Mr. THOMAS] does not seem to be present. I was not in the committee when this bill was agreed to. I have to say, however, Mr. Chairman, that this officer rendered very distinguished services. This letter of General Sherman read by the Clerk shows that. I presume the distinguished services rendered by this officer constitute one reason why the bill was reported at this rate. In the cases of some brevet brigadier-generals who commanded a brigade under extraordinary circumstances pensions have been allowed at $50 a month. I will say that this is above the ordinary amount that the committee recommend for officers of this rank.

Mr. HULICK. What would this lady be entitled to under the law?

Mr. PICKLER. Thirty dollars a month.

Mr. LOUD. She is getting $30 a month now, is she not?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know as to that.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. General Poe was one of the most distinguished engineer officers of the Western army.

Mr. CORLISS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MILNES. But his widow is no more distinguished than the widow of many other officers.

Mr. DINGLEY. I notice that in the case of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Ely S. Parker, which just passed the committee, we allowed $30 per month, and that officer was of the same rank.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. But there was this difference: General Poe commanded troops. He was a staff officer, but he was in command of troops.

Mr. DINGLEY. There ought to be a general rule in respect to these pensions.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. General Parker's widow ought to have had $50 a month instead of $30; and the misfortune attached to that case ought not to be visited on this.

Mr. PICKLER. Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. GROUT assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COX, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. VEST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county; asked a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. JONES of Nevada as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had further insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, had asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 4787) to establish the port of Conneaut, in the State of Ohio, as a subport of entry in the district of Cuyahoga, in said State of Ohio;

A bill (H. R. 6172) authorizing the sale of the title of the United States in lot 5, square 1113, in the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. 6195) amending the statutes relating to the sale of printed copies of patents;

A bill (H. R. 6663) relating to the sale of unclaimed baggage and other property in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 3596) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael McKenna;

A bill (H. R. 2451) to correct the records of the War Department in the case of Capt. Henry S. Pratt;

A bill (H. R. 7264) to provide for the drainage of lots in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 227) requiring bills of sale, conditional sales, mortgages, or deeds of trust of chattels in the District of Columbia to be recorded;

A bill (H. R. 5790) to permit the Pintsch Compressing Company to lay pipes in certain streets in the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. 8077) granting to Budlong Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Westerly, R. I., two condemned mounted brass cannon;

A bill (H. R. 2740) to carry into effect a finding of the Court of Claims in favor of the estate of George Case, late of Independence County, Ark.;

A bill (H. R. 7100) to donate 8 condemned cannon and 100 cannon shot to the Grand Army of the Republic Cemetery Association of Colorado;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 122) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver condemned cannon to Chamberlain Post, Grand Army of the Republic, to be posted by the soldiers' monument at St. Johnsbury, Vt.;

A bill (H. R. 7140) granting to A. L. Robeson Post, No. 42, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bridgeton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls;

A bill (H. R. 8013) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Grand Army of the Republic, L. W. Cooper Post, Department of Missouri, No. 81, of Lathrop, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 7172) donating four condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Allegan, Mich.;

A bill (H. R. 7973) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Grafton, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 8532) to establish certain harbor regulations for the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7143) granting to the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association, of the county of Middlesex, in the State of New Jersey, 4 condemned cannon and 30 cannon balls;

A bill (H. R. 7216) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Grand Army of the Republic post No. 573, of Evans City, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 8266) donating two condemned cannon to Custer Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, of Etna, Pa., and two condemned cannon to James G. Clark Post, No. 162, Grand Army of the Republic, of Allegheny, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of Henry H. Schrawder;

A bill (H. R. 5388) for the relief of F. Alberts & Co., Muskegon, Mich.; and

A bill (H. R. 6666) granting to Maj. C. A. Angel Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lambertville, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the river and harbor appropriation bill, and that the request of the Senate for a conference be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the river and harbor bill be nonconcurred in by the House, and that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

MRS. ELEANOR CARROLL POE.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TALBERT. I just desire to call the attention of the House to this inconsistency in its proceedings. Just a moment ago we passed a bill granting a pension of $30 a month to the widow of a distinguished officer, Mrs. Parker. Now, you propose to give to the widow of another distinguished officer, Mrs. Poe, the sum of $50 a month, $20 more. I have endeavored in my weak way to try to come to some understanding and some common level in the granting of pensions to widows of distinguished officers. It seems to me now, sir, that you ought either to raise the one to $50 or to reduce the other to $30, or to reduce the one to $40 and raise the other to $40, and establish some precedent which will prevent this everlasting harangue about inconsistencies and discriminations.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The gentleman will remember that Colonel Parker was a lieutenant-colonel and General Poe a brigadier-general.

Mr. TALBERT. He was brevetted; they are all brevetted. Whether they ever served in that capacity under such a title or not we do not know. I submit, sir, that we ought to try to arrive at some common level, so as to stop this continual harangue about discriminations. I only desire to say this much. I do not propose to oppose $50 if you agree upon that; but I submit that you ought to reduce this to $30 or to raise the other to $50, so as not to discriminate.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this bill is exhausted.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I will only state that the Senate passed this bill at $100, and we have cut it in half.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANDREW R. LADD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6468) to increase the pension of Andrew R. Ladd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension now allowed and paid to Andrew R. Ladd so that he shall be allowed and paid the sum of $16 a month. The said Andrew R. Ladd was a private in Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "to," in line 4, and insert the following: "Place on the pension roll the name of Andrew R. Ladd, late a private in Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. I want to say for the information of the committee that the bill and amendment both have the letter of his company wrong. It is in the bill and the amendment "C." It should be "E." The purpose of my amendment is simply to make this correction.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the letter "C," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the letter "E."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having carefully considered the evidence relating to the bill (H. R. 6468) to increase the pension of Andrew R. Ladd, report as follows:

This soldier served from September 16, 1863, to September 25, 1865. He filed a claim for pension under the general law January 26, 1889, and was pensioned from that date at $4 per month for malarial poisoning. His claim for additional pension on account of injury of right shoulder was rejected August 30, 1894, on the ground of no record and claimant's alleged inability to show same incurred in line of duty by competent testimony.

Medical examination in 1893 rated him eight-eighteenths for piles, eight-eighteenths for injury of right shoulder and resulting rheumatism, and six-eighteenths for malarial poisoning, for which he is pensioned under the general law.

Your committee are of the opinion that this shows a degree of disability entitling the soldier to the rate of $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, and they therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "to," in line 5, and adding the words "place on the pension roll the name of Andrew R. Ladd, late a private in Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890," and that as amended the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see in the latter part of the report it says "pay him a pension at $12 a month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890." Why should you put that provision in? If he is to be subject to that law, does not the law itself say how much he shall get? I only ask for information.

Mr. PICKLER. He may not have served 90 days. He must show that to come under that law; and that the disease is not the result of his own vicious habits.

Mr. HENDERSON. The report shows that he served over two years.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me unnecessary to put in the amount if you make his pension subject to the provisions and limitations of that law.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the usual form.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions if this would not give this soldier $18 a month pension? Would not the effect of this bill be to direct the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior to place him on the pension rolls at $12 a month. He is now on the pension rolls with some other rating, probably from $4 to $6 a month. Would not this give him a pension in addition to the amount that he now has?

Mr. PICKLER. That is not the intention of the committee. The law provides that a man can not receive more than one pension. If there is any ambiguity about it the gentleman can offer an amendment.

Mr. LOUD. I will offer as an amendment the words "in lieu of the pension that he is now receiving."

Mr. HENDERSON. I will agree to that.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of line 13: "Provided, That this shall be in lieu of any pension he is now receiving."

The amendment was adopted.

The amendment recommended by the committee as amended was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY C. THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3755) to increase the pension of Mary C. Thompson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Mary C. Thompson, widow of Dr. Fillmore Thompson, deceased, be increased from the sum of $12 per month to $20 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place her on the roll at the increased rate of $20 per month, in lieu of the rate of $12.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3755) granting an increase of pension of $20 per month to Mary C. Thompson, widow of Dr. Fillmore Thompson, having carefully examined and considered all the facts and circumstances, respectfully report:

That at the breaking out of the rebellion Dr. Thompson resided at Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, and was a thorough and intense Unionist; that as such he secreted and assisted many persecuted and fleeing Union people, white and black; that owing to his loyalty he was obliged to seek refuge and protection within the Union lines at Little Rock, then occupied by Gen. Fred. Steele; that he was employed by General Steele as chief guide to his expedition to Camden, in the spring of 1864, for the purpose of cooperating with General Banks in his Louisiana campaign, and acted as such until the final return to Little Rock of said army upon its retreat.

The character and services of Dr. Thompson are clearly set forth in the following affidavit of Prof. J. B. Wheeler:

"Prof. J. B. Wheeler, of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., being duly sworn, deposes that he is a resident of West Point, N. Y., and is at the present time the professor of civil and military engineering in the United States Military Academy at that place.

"That during portions of the years 1863 and 1865 and the whole of the year 1864 he held the rank of captain in the Corps of Engineers in the United States Army, and during that time served as the chief military engineer of the United States troops serving in the State and Department of Arkansas.

"That as the chief engineer officer he accompanied the march of the expedition under Maj. Gen. Fred. Steele, which moved south in March, 1864, to cooperate with, and, if possible, to effect a junction with the United States forces under command of Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, then moving toward Shreveport, on the Red River, in Louisiana.

"That during this march and the return he was daily thrown in contact with the principal guide, one Dr. F. Thompson, a former resident of Hot Springs, Ark., who had sought protection within the United States lines against violence from the inhabitants of that part of the State, with which he was threatened by reason of his well-known Union feelings.

"That from his personal knowledge he knows of the peculiar fitness of the said Thompson for the place of principal guide, and attributes largely the successful progress of the expedition, as far south as it proceeded, to said Thompson's thorough knowledge of the roads, the crossing of streams, and the sentiments and opinions of the inhabitants of that part of the country.

"That the return march of the expedition, followed as it was by a victorious enemy, who received a severe check at Jenkins Ferry, was greatly aided by the said Thompson's intimate acquaintance with the roads and character of the country used and crossed by the army in its retreat.

"That during this retreat all the members were more or less sufferers from fatigue and exposure.

"That shortly after the return of the expedition Dr. Thompson was taken sick and very soon thereafter died.

"That the deponent understood at the time of said Thompson's death that it, as well as the sickness, were largely, if not entirely, caused by the fatigues and exposures that said Thompson had undergone during the time he accompanied the expedition as its principal guide.

"J. B. WHEELER.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 15th day of September, A. D. 1874.
"[SEAL.] WM. WARD,
"Notary Public, New York."

Dr. Thompson, upon his return to Little Rock, was quite exhausted and prostrated, and appeared to be in a partially delirious condition, and shortly after his return was attacked by erysipelas, which caused his death. He was attended by several physicians, all of whom certify that the disease of which he died was, in their opinion, superinduced by the fatigue, exposure, and injuries incident to his service upon such expedition. The precise nature of the contract under which he acted as guide does not appear in evidence, though his widow—the petitioner—says that his services were paid to the time of his decease. Dr. Thompson left seven children, who, the petitioner says, were dependent upon her for support, their property being taken or destroyed.

Dr. Thompson participated in the battles of Prairie de Ann and Jenkins Ferry, and in many of the skirmishes in which the forces of General Steele were engaged on the expedition to Camden and return, and was wounded at the battle of Jenkins Ferry by the explosion of a shell, making a scalp wound on his face and head. According to the testimony of physicians who attended him, his death in June, 1864, shortly after the return of the expedition to Little Rock, Ark., was due to erysipelas and pneumonia, which resulted from the wound, hardships, and exposure endured in that campaign.

Had the claimant applied in time and made the proof which has been presented to the Pension Bureau, prior to 1874, she could have been pensioned under section 4693 of the Revised Statutes, but knowing her husband was not an enlisted soldier she did not apply.

Dr. Thompson was offered and declined a commission as brigadier-general in the Confederate Army, and was afterwards conscripted, but escaped service by a plea of "over age."

The applicant was married to Dr. Thompson April 26, 1849, and is now in advanced years, and her pension of $12 per month is too meager to give her a decent support, she being too infirm to earn her living by labor and having no other adequate means of maintenance.

Your committee therefore earnestly recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions what rule of equity has been followed in this case. If this lady were allowed a pension as the widow of an assistant surgeon, she would be entitled, I think, to $17 a month. If she were given a pension as the widow of a full surgeon, she would be entitled to $25. Now, upon what basis of equity does the committee act in recommending a pension of $20?

Mr. CROWTHER. It seems that this man was serving in the capacity of captain of scouts, or chief of guides, for the Army of the Southwest at the time this expedition took place, and he received wounds while so engaged.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL HOLLIDAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6546) granting a pension to Samuel Holliday.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Samuel Holliday, late of Company I, Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6546) granting a pension to Samuel Holliday, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

Samuel Holliday enlisted August 2, 1862, in Company I, Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry, and was honorably discharged June 5, 1865.

On August 2, 1888, he applied for pension under the old law, alleging disabilities contracted in the line of duty. He sustained his declaration by the affidavits of three physicians to the effect that he was totally incapacitated, and that the disabilities were of service origin. Two examining boards found him entitled to a rating of fourteen-eighteenths. He was allowed a pension of but $2, however, to date from the time of filing.

Thereafter he applied under the act of June 27, 1890, and his claim was approved for admission on May 4, 1894, but the medical referee rejected the same on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability. The last examining board reports him "unfit for any manual labor."

It appears from the evidence that in December, 1862, while on the march, the soldier was taken very sick, and that he was left behind and was captured by the enemy. After being held a prisoner for eight or nine months, suffering from scurvy and parotitis and exposed to the elements, with such care and attention as might be expected of a foe, he managed to rejoin his regiment, and then served out the balance of his time. It further appears, as a result of these diseases and hardships, that he has been unable to perform any labor for the past twelve or fifteen years.

In the opinion of your committee the claim is a very meritorious one, and we respectfully recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendments:

In line 5, after the word "late," insert "sergeant."

In line 6 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-four."

The amendments recommended in the report were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILBUR F. COGSWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2042) to increase the pension of Wilbur F. Cogswell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Wilbur F. Cogswell late an assistant engineer in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month, to commence February 4, 1892, deducting the amount paid him since that date.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2042) to increase the pension of Wilbur F. Cogswell, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

Wilbur F. Cogswell served in the United States Navy from January 23, 1863, to September 13, 1863, when he was discharged for disability. His disability consisted of fracture of the skull incurred in line of duty, for which he was pensioned at $8 per month from date of incurrence. This rate was increased from time to time until February 23, 1887, when he was allowed $50 per month for dementia, and because he required the frequent aid and attendance of another person. His pension, however, was afterwards reduced to $30, to take effect February 4, 1892, on the ground that he could take care of himself. Thereafter the pensioner filed claim for dementia, fistula, piles, and rheumatism. On this claim the Pension Office, January 17, 1896, reports:

"The pensioner has been informed that his pension of $30, for dementia, is fully commensurate with the degree of disability arising from said cause, and that his claim on account of rheumatism and disease of rectum requires testimony showing origin in the service at date of discharge and since, but that if said disabilities were established it would not increase his rate of pension to more than $30, the amount he now receives."

Many affidavits are on file showing that this man does in fact require the frequent aid and attendance of another person, and on the case made he would be clearly entitled to $50 per month under the law.

Your committee therefore respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out all after the word "month."

The amendment recommended in the report was agreed to.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is something lacking in this report which I think ought to be supplied by a little statement. There ought to be some severe language used against Mr. Bussey and Mr. Raum for reducing this man's pension from $50 to $30 a month. It does not look well to omit that, but our reports are cut down at the instance of the chairman of the committee, so that these important elements are frequently left out. I must express my sympathy with this poor soldier who had his pension reduced from $50 to $30 a month, and why the report does not blame Mr. Bussey and Mr. Raum for it I fail to understand. Something ought to be put into the RECORD to show that they are responsible for this. [Laughter.]

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALFRED P. BUSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2941) granting increase of pension to Alfred P. Buss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alfred P. Buss, of Springfield, Mass., and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives. Alfred P. Buss served in the Army of the United States during the late war, in Company D, Fourth Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, and this increase of pension is asked on account of total disability to perform manual labor.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

Strike out, beginning with the words "of Springfield," in line 6, down to and including "manual labor," in line 12, and insert "late private, Company D, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, at the rate of $30 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALBERT BUCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3389) increasing pension of Albert Buck from $12 to $30 per month.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to place on the pension roll the name of Albert Buck, late a private in Company K, One hundred and first Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month instead of $12 per month, which he is now drawing under act of Congress of June 27, A. D. 1890.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3389) increasing pension of Albert Buck from $12 to $30 per month, submit the following report:

The committee have examined the evidence in this case, as well as a report from the Pension Office, and find the following facts to exist, without dispute or controversy:

This soldier enlisted in Company K, One hundred and first Illinois Volunteers, August 22, 1862, and was mustered out at the end of the war, June 7, 1865. He was in good health when he entered the service, and, so far as the evidence shows, in good health when mustered out. He never lost a day during his entire service; he never missed a skirmish or battle in which his regiment was engaged; he never was in a hospital except to go occasionally to see a sick or wounded comrade.

Some years since, in a runaway accident, his right knee was crushed. His leg is entirely disabled, and therefrom he is totally incapacitated for manual labor. He is poor, and the pension of $12 he is now drawing under act of June 27, 1890, is insufficient for his support.

In view of the faithful services of this private and his need, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the gentleman who asked for the reading of this report does not say something about it after having it read. Here is a soldier who is drawing a pension of $12 a month, granted to him under the law, and no doubt rightly and properly granted. Nobody objects to that, The latter part of this report, however, says that—

Some years since, in a runaway accident, his right knee was crushed. His leg is entirely disabled, and therefrom he is totally incapacitated for manual labor. He is poor, and the pension of $12 he is now drawing under act of June 27, 1890, is insufficient for his support.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is not right or proper that this soldier should receive an increase of pension on account of the fact that he happened to get into a runaway scrape and got his leg hurt. That was his misfortune, for which we are all very sorry, but the report puts this proposed increase of pension on the ground of charity. Now, gentlemen, if you desire to increase this man's pension from $12 to $30 a month, do so, but do not do it under the pretended head of "pension legislation," because it is not that; it is simply a piece of charity.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to this very remarkable case. This soldier was in good health at the time he enlisted; he was in good health at the time he was discharged. There is no pretense to the contrary. During all the time of his service he never missed a roll call, he never missed a skirmish or an engagement in which his regiment participated. He never was in the hospital a single minute except to go to see some sick comrade who was there.

We have been engaged——

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; if the gentleman will not take much time.

Mr. TALBERT. If we establish this precedent, is every old soldier now drawing a pension to have his pension increased if he accidentally gets hurt? What will such a precedent cost us? What will it lead to?

Mr. WOOD. I was approaching the point which the gentleman's question involves. We have been pensioning in this House officers for distinguished services. I ask now whether we can not pension a private soldier for the most distinguished service that any man can render to his country—the distinction of having been always present, always on duty, always ready to discharge his duty. Now, when this faithful soldier is absolutely disabled, I ask whether his meritorious services shall not have some weight with the Representatives in Congress in favor of a bill providing this man some means for taking care of himself in his old age?

Thirty dollars a month is the amount which this man would receive under the regular law for total incapacity; and that is the sum fixed in this bill. I have no special knowledge about the circumstances of the case. The bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. DOWNING]. But while examining the records in the Pension Office my attention was attracted by the very meritorious and distinguished service which this soldier had rendered. If we vote down his bill, we apply to a private soldier a different principle from that which we apply to an officer of high rank.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this report aright, it is proposed to pension this soldier, not on account of any disability incurred by him by reason of his service in the Army, but because of a runaway accident that happened to him a few years ago. Now, if you pension him on such a ground, and I should break my leg in a runaway accident, would I have the same claim to a pension that this man has?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly, if you could get it.

Mr. PICKLER. In reply to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] allow me to say that, not only in this Congress, but in other Congresses in years past, where a particularly deserving case has been presented, where it has appeared that a man who has served as a soldier was helpless and wholly incapacitated for manual labor, we have made exceptions. Gentlemen will observe that this is the case of a private soldier; and $30 a month is the amount which would be allowed under the law for total incapacity. Now, neither this Congress nor any other Congress has ever held any such destitute soldier down to the strict letter of the law and required that the disabling injury must have been incurred in the service. In these cases, where the applicant is particularly destitute, not only this committee, but other committees have gone to the extent of placing the applicant upon the same footing which he would occupy if he could prove up his case in the Pension Office. We believe this is one of those deserving cases.

Mr. WOOD. If this man had been a brigadier-general we would pension him at $75 or $100 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be favorably reported to the House.

The question being taken; there were on a division (called for by Mr. TALBERT)—ayes 59, noes 10.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the committee). There are 120 members present; the ayes have it; and the bill is ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably.

LEMUEL J. ESSEX.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2985) granting an increase of pension to Lemuel J. Essex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls the name of Lemuel J. Essex, late of Company B, Eighty-seventh Indiana Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension that he is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four"; so as to make the amount of pension $24 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2985) granting an increase of pension to Lemuel J. Essex, having examined the evidence submitted in this case, as also the files in the Pension Office, find—

This soldier enlisted in Company B, Eighty-seventh Indiana, August 4, 1862, for three years; was discharged March 3, 1863, for disability. He was subjected to a rigid medical examination on muster. He appears to have done regular duty as a soldier until October 20, 1862. About October 1, 1862, he contracted disease—diarrhea—which became chronic, and followed by imperfect vision, disease of rectum, and piles. For these diseases he was pensioned at $2 from March 4, 1863, and $4 from November 2, 1887, and $6 from June 15, 1888, and $10 from May 21, 1890, and $12 from July 16, 1890, which he is now drawing. He subsequently, on September 10, 1864, enlisted for one year in Company I, One hundred and seventy-fourth Ohio Volunteers, and was discharged by end of war June 28, 1865. He is now, and has been for some years, suffering from paralysis, or locomotor ataxia, and from disease of back and spine. He is very poor and is totally disabled from manual labor, and his last medical examination, September 13, 1893, shows his disabilities fully equal to the loss of hand or foot. He has made application for increase, but has been rejected. The Pension Bureau decline to accept the disease of back and spine as incident to the service, claiming it was the result of sickness at the age of 5 years.

The only basis for the contention of disease prior to enlistment rests on the soldier's discharge. It was made out by his captain, who at the time was temporarily sick, the company being in command of the first lieutenant. The soldier was then with his regiment. The discharge states "he is defective in his back and hips, which causes him to stagger and reel as he walks; the soldier was in this condition at the time of his enlistment." The second assistant surgeon certifies that the soldier was incapable of performing service "because of an injury to the spine received in early childhood."

The committee have searched in vain for any evidence that soldier ever received an injury to spine in early childhood. On the contrary, five witnesses who knew him prior to the war, two of whom knew him from childhood and two who lived with him in same house from 1858 to his enlistment, testify to his sound health prior to enlistment. All the evidence of sickness from childhood is from claimant himself, who says all he knows of it is that his mother told him he was very sick at the age of five years; that he was a puny child until about eight years of age, when he became as strong as other children.

The surgeon who certified to an injury to back and spine evidently knew nothing about it, for he has since made affidavit that soldier became sick from diarrhea in November and December, 1862, which became chronic; that he was reduced in flesh and a walking skeleton, and was discharged for that reason. The lieutenant in command when he was discharged swears to the soldier's being sick with some disease unknown to him, his symptoms being diarrhea, staggering gait, and imperfect vision, and that he procured his discharge, during the captain's short illness, to save soldier's life.

The evidence of claimant shows that the diseases, imperfect vision and locomotor ataxia, came upon soldier very suddenly, and have since been steadily growing. The only witness was a comrade who helped soldier to his tent. This soldier was afterwards killed in the battle of Chickamauga.

The committee, in view of the evidence, believe that the disease from which claimant is now suffering is of service origin, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out of line 6 the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The committee rose informally, when

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. LOW of New York, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana as visitors to the Naval Academy.

CARRIE H. GREENE.

The Committee of the Whole House resumed its session.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3395) granting a pension to Carrie H. Greene.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Carrie H. Greene, of Lee County, Ala., widow of John W. Greene, late member of Captain Jones's company of Georgia Volunteers, Indian war of 1836, subject to all of the conditions of the act of July 27, 1892.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, this is a meritorious bill. A bill in similar terms passed this House in the Fifty-third Congress, was favorably reported by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, and failed to become a law simply for want of time. The facts of the case are clearly and briefly set forth in the report of the committee, which I ask may be read.

The report (by Mr. STALLINGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3395) granting a pension to Carrie H. Greene, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of John W. Greene, late a private in Capt. S. A. H. Jones's company of Georgia Volunteers in the Creek Indian war of 1836.

The soldier in his lifetime made application for a pension under the Indian war act of July 27, 1892, and the records showing that, including fifteen days' travel, he served forty-two days in said war, his claim was allowed, and he remained on the roll until his death on October 29, 1893.

This widow, the beneficiary, then made application under the act referred to, but the fifteen days' travel included in the soldier's case was not allowed in her claim by the Department, and her application was rejected on the ground of insufficient service. The reason for this was that, subsequent to the allowance of the soldier's claim, departmental decisions in what is known as the "Blaser and Bailey" cases declined to accept time consumed in travel to and from the rendezvous of the organization at the time of enlistment and discharge.

As stated above, it is conceded in the soldier's case by the Department that, including the fifteen days' travel referred to above, the period of his service was twelve days more than is required to give title under the general act granting pensions to Indian war veterans and their widows.

Mrs. Greene was married to the soldier in 1856. She is now well advanced in years, an invalid, and wholly unable to do anything toward earning a support; and the pension carried by the bill is greatly needed to provide her a comfortable maintenance.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the facts in this case. If I understand them correctly from the report, this soldier served but forty-two days, all told. The entire term of service claimed for him, including everything, is forty-two days. It appears that the woman whom we are now asked to pension as his widow married him twenty years after the close of that war.

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; I do not so understand.

Mr. MILNES. As I understand the report, she married him in 1856, and the war in which he served was fought in 1836.

A MEMBER. What war?

Mr. MILNES. Some Indian war. And now, sixty years after the close of that war, this woman, who married the soldier twenty years after the military service was rendered, comes before this Congress and asks to be pensioned.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Do I understand the gentleman to complain because she has waited for sixty years before applying for a pension?

Mr. MILNES. I do not think that the widow of a soldier who married him twenty years after he performed the military service is as deserving of a pension as a widow who was the wife of the soldier during his term of service. I think there is a clear distinction in that respect. It seems to me that we ought not to pass this class of bills, and that the country is not calling for them and will not support this Congress in passing them. For one, I desire to enter my protest against it.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH J. COOK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4755) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert Cook.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to consider Senate bill 125 instead of the House bill. It is identical with the House bill which has been reached on the Calendar.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will allow the House bill to be read first, to see if it has got any merits.

Mr. McRAE. Of course I have no objection to its being read; but it is unnecessary, as the two bills are identical and the reading of the Senate bill will accomplish the object the gentleman has in view.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill?

Mr. LOUD. I will object until the House bill is read; not afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the House bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. LOUD. Now, let me ask the gentleman why is the beneficiary in this bill not entitled to a pension under the general law?

Mr. McRAE. For the reason that the records of the War Department do not show the service of the soldier. That service, however, has been clearly proven by an officer of the company in which he served. The committee find that the proof is convincing that the soldier served as alleged.

Mr. LOUD. He did not serve the requisite number of days. Is that the trouble?

Mr. McRAE. No; he served six or seven months. There is no question as to the length of the service.

Mr. LOUD. But there is no record of service?

Mr. McRAE. Not in the Department, but the proof is clearly made by Lieut. John C. Peay and other witnesses. There is no question as to the service. These men who have testified are of the highest character and the service notorious. I know the witnesses and applicant personally, and there can be no doubt about the truth of the facts stated by them. The lady herself is an educated, worthy lady and of one of the most distinguished families in our State. She was married to him before the service and is incapable of making a false claim.

Mr. HULICK. What is the rate of pension fixed by the Senate bill?

Mr. McRAE. The bill passed for $12 a month, but the House committee recommends that it be reduced to $8 a month, just as was done with the House bill.

Mr. HULICK. I understand the request of the gentleman is to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; but that request, if granted, will carry with it the consideration of the amendment proposed to the Senate bill, which is to reduce the amount to $8 a month.

Mr. HULICK. How will that avail anything in the way of expediting the bill, if it be amended in the House? It will have to go back to the Senate anyhow.

Mr. McRAE. Certainly; but I expect that the Senate will concur in it without action by the Senate committee.

Mr. HULICK. Why not pass the House bill and let it go to the Senate for adoption?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The Senate bill as amended is $8 a month.

Mr. McRAE. It is identical with the House bill, and the same amendment is pending to each.

Mr. HULICK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I misunderstood. I thought the Senate bill was $12 a month.

Mr. McRAE. It is $12 a month in the bill, but the House committee has recommended a reduction of the amount fixed in the bill to $8 a month, and I presume that amendment will be adopted to either bill that may be considered.

Mr. HULICK. But I understood the gentleman from New Jersey to say that the Senate bill was $8 a month.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The House committee recommends that it be reduced to that sum.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman think he will be able to hold down that reduction if it goes back to the Senate?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I think there is no doubt of that. We will endeavor to do it with the best of our ability. These bills have been reduced in every instance to $8.

Mr. McRAE. And I will state to the gentleman that, so far as I can control it, I will ask the Senate to concur in the House amendment without any conference, because I understand that the House Committee on Pensions will not consent to any higher rate. I prefer $8 to nothing for this deserving widow.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That has been the action of the committee in all of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 135) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook, who, at the town of Washington, Hempstead County, Ark., in the month of July, 1846, volunteered and served as a United States soldier in the war with Mexico in the First Arkansas Mounted Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the House committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 strike out the word "twelve" and insert "eight"; so that it will read "$8 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the House bill will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection.

MARY ANN LAFFERTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 717) granting a pension to Mary Ann Lafferty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll of the United States of America the name of Mary Ann Lafferty, the surviving widow of Patrick B. Lafferty, deceased, private in Captain Crawford's company, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer M. G. Men, Col. Thomas Williamson commanding, in Seminole Indian war, 1818, at the rate of $8 per month, according to the rules and regulations governing pensions.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. BLACK of Georgia) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 717) granting a pension to Mary Ann Lafferty, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant's deceased husband, Patrick B. Lafferty, is shown by the records of the Second Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, to have served from January 31, 1818, to June 30, 1818, in Capt. Samuel Crawford's company, Second Tennessee M. G. Volunteers, in the Seminole Indian war. In addition to the official record your committee also had before them the soldier's certificate of discharge from said service.

Patrick B. Lafferty died in 1877. His widow, the beneficiary, is extremely old and in dependent circumstances. These facts are sworn to by James P. Baird, of Nashville, Tenn., and William C. Baird, of Hickman County, Tenn., who knew the soldier and have known his widow for many years. Mrs. Lafferty resides at Nashville, Tenn.

The Indian war act passed July 27, 1892, does not reach this case because that act has reference only to the wars from 1832 to 1842, and this claimant's husband served in 1818. Hence the only method of relief open to Mrs. Lafferty at this time lies in a special act of Congress, and your committee, believing the bill to be meritorious, return the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Amend by striking out the word "twelve," in line 9, and substituting therefor the word "eight," so as to fix the rate of pension at $8 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HELEN LARNED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6607) for the relief of Helen Larned.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $50 per month, the name of Helen Larned, widow of the late Frank H. Larned, captain Second Regiment United States Artillery, and pay her a pension on and after the passage of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6607) granting a pension to Helen Larned, have had the same under consideration, and report:

Mrs. Larned is the widow of Frank H. Larned, late major First United States Artillery, who entered the service as a second lieutenant of infantry March 3, 1847; promoted to first lieutenant July 1, 1852; to captain April 28, 1861, and to major of artillery January 3, 1867. He was retired from active service on account of disability February 5, 1867, and died January 8, 1891, at Baltimore, Md., of "cancer of the bladder, following the removal of a tumor of long growth, the immediate cause of death being septicæmia and uræmia."

The diseases on account of which he was retired from the service are shown by the official records to have been disease of the eyes and chronic diarrhea, originating from exposure in line of duty.

During the period of his service Major Larned rendered gallant and meritorious service in the war with Mexico and subsequently in the war of the rebellion.

His widow's claim for pension under the general laws, filed March 2, 1891, was disallowed by the Pension Bureau February 11, 1892, on the ground of the claimant's inability to connect the cause of his death with the service, the said disease being of a very obscure nature and difficult of proof.

Hon. Herman Stump certifies that Mrs. Larned was left by the death of her husband without property of any kind, and that she is dependent upon others for her support.

In view of the long and distinguished service of the soldier, embracing two wars, and in the light of the dependent condition of his widow, your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $25 per month, the same being the rate allowed by the general laws for widows of soldiers of the rank of major.

Amend by striking out the words "captain Second," in line 6, and substituting therefor the words "major First."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6556) granting a pension to Jacob Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Jacob Brown, late of Company A, Fifteenth Iowa Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24 a month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 5, after the word "late," insert "a private."

In line 6 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty."

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DINGLEY. Or the gentleman from South Dakota can make a statement of the case.

Mr. PICKLER. This report shows that the claimant is now 73 years of age, totally disabled, and nearly blind; has been unable to do any kind of work for the past twelve or fifteen years, and is dependent on a pension of $12, which he draws under the act of June 27, 1890. He still carries in his shoulder the memento of the battle of Shiloh.

He states, under oath, that his hernia and rheumatism were incurred and contracted in the line of duty, but can not locate any of his comrades who have knowledge of this fact. The evidence shows, however, that he is a man of exemplary habits, very truthful, and of excellent character, and an allegation coming from him under existing circumstances is in the nature of an antemortem statement. He is totally incapacitated, and while he swears that this disease was contracted in the service, he can not substantiate that fact to the satisfaction of the Pension Office by the testimony of comrades. I think it is a very meritorious case.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very good report to skip—an exceedingly good report to omit.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the reading of the report, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ERDMAN. The gentleman is not on the floor now, and I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this poor soldier has been struggling along through Republican Administrations from 1863 with a pension of $6 per month. He has made repeated applications to Republican Administrations, and Republican Administrations have repeatedly turned him down. Now he comes to Congress for relief. It is a very good report indeed to omit.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report now, and we will see whose judgment is correct.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6556) granting a pension to Jacob Brown, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

The beneficiary named in the bill enlisted in Company A, Fifteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, November 16, 1861. At the battle of Shiloh (April 20, 1862) his right shoulder was shattered by a musket ball and he was sent to hospital, where he remained under treatment until October 4 of the same year, when discharged on certificate of disability. A pension of $6 per month was granted him from date of discharge.

June 23, 1863, the examining surgeon reports:

"I find the clavicle of the right shoulder has been badly shattered, and no evidence of ball having passed through, but must remain. The shoulder is very much stiffened."

This soldier was several times examined, and on February 6, 1878, a report shows:

"Ball struck about an inch from the sternal end of the clavicle, fracturing it, and it is now much flattened, with a depression nearly through it."

Again, on September 2, 1885, another board finds:

"Cataract of both eyes. * * * We do not know the rating for disease of eyes, but give the state of his vision, etc., as presented. * * * Three-fourths total rating for disability caused by gunshot wound of right shoulder."

On May 5, 1890, he applied for increase, and the medical evidence in support of his claim shows that his condition was as follows:

"Gunshot wound of right clavicle, which resulted in fracture of said clavicle, with an adherent scar and very painful. Also suffering with varicose veins of both limbs; tendency to ulceration. * * * Also rheumatism of kneejoint. * * * Also find inguinal hernia, oblique and complete. Also find cataract of both eyes. This man is unable to perform any part of a day's labor whatever."

On June 18, 1890, the examining board, after stating the condition of the gunshot wound in shoulder, reports:

"We also find right inguinal hernia complete * * * so bad that it can not be controlled by truss; find also varicose veins in both limbs from both knees down; also find rheumatism in left kneejoint, very much enlarged on comparative measurement. * * * Both eyes, senile pannus. Second grade."

This board gives him a rating of twenty-six eighteenths, and on November 4, 1891, another examining board rates him at thirty-two eighteenths.

The soldier served also in the war of 1846, and appears to have participated in most of the engagements from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico. He was duly pensioned as a survivor of that war under the act of January 19, 1887.

The claimant is now 73 years of age, totally disabled, and nearly blind; has been unable to do any kind of work for the past twelve or fifteen years, and is dependent on a pension of $12, which he draws under the act of June 27, 1890. He still carries in his shoulder the memento of the battle of Shiloh.

He states under oath that his hernia and rheumatism were incurred and contracted in the line of duty, but can not locate any of his comrades who have knowledge of this fact. The evidence shows, however, that he is a man of exemplary habits, very truthful, and of excellent character, and an allegation coming from him under existing circumstances is in the nature of an ante-mortem statement.

Your committee believe that this claim is unusually full of merit. We will give the veteran the benefit of the doubt, and respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 5, after the word "late," insert "a private."

In line 6 strike out "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

T. CLARKSON INGALLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 144) granting an increase of pension to T. Clarkson Ingalls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of T. Clarkson Ingalls, late of Company E, Thirty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 144) granting an increase of pension to T. Clarkson Ingalls, having carefully considered the same, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 166) as their own, and respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 144) granting an increase of pension to Theophilus C. Ingalls, have examined the same and report:

Mr. Ingalls's father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and he was one of three brothers who enlisted in the late war, all of whom had honorable military records. Claimant enlisted August 13, 1862, in his sixteenth year, and was discharged from Hilton Head Hospital June 8, 1865. It is said that soldier might have been pensioned at any time after the close of the war, but he was a patriotic man and did not make application for pension, preferring to earn an independent support for himself and family. Later on, however, he suffered greatly from rheumatism, paralysis of the optic nerve of the right eye supervening, which greatly interfered with his ability to earn a living.

In this emergency he applied for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, which was granted at the rate of $12 per month from June 3, 1891, for rheumatism and loss of vision of right eye. Since that time these disabilities have gradually increased, until now soldier is entirely blind, being led about the village by a small boy. He is also in very straitened circumstances, with no possible relief in the future.

A petition from the leading citizens of Derry, N. H., where soldier resides, has been filed with your committee setting forth the soldier's necessities and praying that his pension may be increased.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MELITA E. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7212) to increase the pension of Melita E. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Melita E. White, widow of Carr B. White, late colonel of the Twelfth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $42 per month.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. LAYTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5338) for the relief of Ann Eliza White, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the dependent and permanently helpless daughter of Carr B. White, late colonel of the Twelfth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The soldier served in the war with Mexico, and also during the rebellion. He enlisted October 1, 1861, and was honorably discharged July 11, 1864. September 30, 1871, he died from disabilities contracted in line of duty.

The evidence shows that the claimant has been afflicted with curvature of spine since childhood, being wholly unable to take care of herself or earn a support, being entirely dependent upon her mother. September 6, 1890, she filed application under the act of June 27 of that year as permanently helpless, but on October 21, 1891, the claim was rejected because the applicant was more than 16 years of age at the date of the passage of said act.

The soldier's widow is now drawing a pension of $30 under the general law, but she has little or no property, is extremely feeble, and is likely to die very suddenly at any time.

Your committee do not believe it was the purpose of the act of June 27, 1890, to forever bar the permanently helpless child of a gallant soldier because the unfortunate happened to be over 16 years of age on the day the law was enacted, and several favorable reports have been made on bills introduced to correct this statutory discrimination. We think the case a very meritorious one, and, in view of all the facts, respectfully recommend the passage of the following substitute for the bill:

"A bill to increase the pension of Melita E. White.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Melita E. White, widow of Carr B. White, late colonel of the Twelfth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $42 per month."

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that bill, which amendment I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. Before the reading of the amendment I wish to state that this bill is a substitute for one that I offered in behalf of this helpless child. The original bill was to pay her a pension, but the committee thought it the wiser plan to offer a substitute, and have the money paid to the widow, to increase her pension for the benefit of this helpless child. The substitute, therefore, is before the committee for consideration. I offer the amendment now, in view of the fact that the mother is very feeble, and if the daughter were to outlive the mother the pension would cease at the death of the mother. That ought not to be the case and was not the intention of the committee. Upon calling the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON], the member of the subcommittee who had the bill in charge, to this phase of the case, he suggested that there be an amendment, and so I offer this amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 8, after the word "month," the following:

"And at the death of the said Melita E. White the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Eliza White, the dependent and permanently helpless daughter of the said Carr B. White, deceased, and pay her a pension of $20 per month."

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose she dies first?

Mr. HULICK. Then the pension would cease.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order. This amendment seeks to provide for a contingency that I do not think Congress has the power to provide for in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is ingrafting one private bill upon another, really.

Mr. HULICK. Yes; but the substitute really makes ineffective the original bill, which was introduced for the benefit of this helpless daughter.

She was over 16 years of age at the date of the passage of the law of 1890. She was a few months over the age, and for that reason is not entitled to pension.

Mr. PICKLER. The reason why the committee reported the bill as it has is to avoid the objection of the statute that two pensions shall not be paid at the same time for the same service.

Mr. HULICK. This would not be two pensions at the same time for the same service. It is not to go into effect until the death of the mother. The pension is thereafter to be given to the daughter.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not think I have any objection.

Mr. HULICK. This daughter is a helpless invalid, and will always be during her life. The mother is very feeble and doubtless this daughter will be left, if this bill passes in its present shape, on the death of her mother, without friends, without money, and without pension, and therefore I have suggested the amendment, which I think is not subject to the objection.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DALZELL). The Chair sustains the point of order. It is not in order to ingraft upon a bill providing for one beneficiary a provision for another.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY ARNOLD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4548) granting a pension to Mary Arnold.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Arnold, of Unadilla, Nebr., mother of Isaac Arnold, late a private in Company B, Thompson's Battalion Six Months Missouri State Militia.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by making the title of the bill read "Mary L. Arnold," instead of "Mary Arnold," and that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mary L. Arnold, mother of Isaac Arnold, late a private in Company B, Thompson's Battalion Six Months Missouri State Militia, and pay her a pension of $12 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment again, without objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was again reported.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is substituted for it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has just reported the substitute.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4548) granting a pension of $12 per month to Mary L. Arnold, mother of Isaac Arnold, late of Company B, Thompson's Six Months Missouri State Militia, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report as follows:

The soldier enlisted as a private in Company B, Thompson's Battalion Six Months Missouri State Militia, and served from October 14, 1861, to February 11, 1862, and died February 25, 1863. The soldier was in hospital sick when he was mustered out, and died before reaching home. There is no question about his having contracted his fatal illness in the service. The evidence shows that three sons and the husband of the claimant, Mary L. Arnold, enlisted in the Union Army; that she herself rendered valuable services to the country during the late civil war. She filed an application for a pension November 29, 1890, which was rejected January 28, 1895, on the ground that the organization in which soldier's services were rendered was a State organization, not in the United States service, and that under the present laws and practice can not be allowed by the Pension Bureau.

The testimony shows, and the Commissioner reports, that the testimony on file in the Pension Office establishes the fact that she has no property other than her labor. She is now 72 years of age. The soldier was a single man at the time of his death and at the time of his enlistment.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by making the title of the bill read "Mary L. Arnold" instead of "Mary Arnold," and that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mary L. Arnold, mother of Isaac Arnold, late a private in Company B, Thompson's Battalion Six Months' Missouri State Militia, and pay her a pension of $12 per month."

And that the bill as so amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. This seems to be the case of the widow of a soldier not mustered into the United States service, one of the Missouri militia. There is no general law providing a pension for those who were not so mustered in.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Have there been instances where they have been pensioned?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, yes; there have been frequent instances. This is in the line of precedent, and we have reported a general bill to cover these cases.

Mr. DINGLEY. Was he in the service ninety days?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I will answer the gentleman's question. This is my bill. The report of the committee shows that he served from October to some time in February—about four months. The evidence shows that he was under the command of a United States officer.

Mr. DINGLEY. Although not mustered in the United States service?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, this report, in accordance with the policy of the committee, very carefully omits to state what the soldier died of. It says he was sick and died before reaching home, and then draws the conclusion there is no question about his having contracted the disability in the service. There are probably 30,000 or 40,000 people whose husbands died in the militia, and who would like to have pensions on just such evidence as this. You do not allow them to come in, but select a particular one and show favor to her, giving her the bounty of the Government.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to move to amend, after the word "Arnold," in line 5, by inserting the word "dependent," so as to read "dependent mother."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the gentleman's amendment is not now in order.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that the word be inserted. It ought to go in there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to insert the word "dependent," before "mother," in the fifth line. Is there objection?

Mr. ERDMAN. I object. It does not matter whether we insert the word "dependent" or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. PICKLER. It is not material.

The bill as amended was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

CONFEREES ON RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the appointment of the following conferees on the river and harbor appropriation bill: Mr. HOOKER of New York, Mr. HERMANN of Oregon, and Mr. CATCHINGS of Mississippi. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

MRS. JULIA A. JAMESON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5792) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Julia A. Jameson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Julia A. Jameson, widow of Brig. Gen. Charles D. Jameson, United States Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension of $30 per month she is now receiving, to commence from the passage of this act.

The committee recommended an amendment, which was agreed to, striking out, after the word "receiving," in line 9, the words "to commence from the passage of this act."

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read in part, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5792) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Julia A. Jameson, having carefully examined the evidence on file in the case, together with the reports from the records of the War Department, report as follows:

Charles D. Jameson served as colonel of Second Maine Volunteer Infantry from May 28, 1861, to August 14, 1861, when he resigned. He was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers September 3, 1861, and commanded a brigade in Heintzelman's Division, Army of the Potomac, from October, 1861, to February, 1862; from March, 1862, to May 31, 1862, he commanded the First Brigade, Hamilton's Division, Third Army Corps. He was granted leave of absence June 13, 1862, for the benefit of his health, and died from the effects of typhoid fever November 6, 1862, at his home in Oldtown, Me. The following letters from Gen. O. O. Howard and Gen. Joseph S. Smith are pertinent:

"CHICAGO, February 19, 1896.

"DEAR MR. BOUTELLE: Mrs. General Jameson's case is so clear that I think she will get her increase. General Jameson was badly hurt at Fair Oaks in the battle, and lay all night on the field without cover. He was never well again. He died in consequence of that terrible exposure.

"Sincerely, yours,

"OLIVER O. HOWARD."

"BANGOR, ME., March 1, 1896.

"DEAR SIR: Referring to the Jameson pension case, I would say that at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., in 1862, General Jameson's horse was killed and fell upon the General during the latter part of the battle, hurting him severely; that the General lay upon the field all night. It was raining very hard. As a result of his exposure typhoid fever set in, which was the cause of his death. I am personally knowing to the above, as I brought him from the field of battle to Washington, D. C., at the time. I sent to Maine for his wife and her father, who came on, and after he gained a little they took him to his home, but he never was able to rally, and soon after died.

"Mrs. Jameson has ever since been a widow, and has no other means of support excepting her pension. She is now nearly 70 years of age, very feeble and infirm. General Jameson gave up a prosperous business to enter the service, and died a bankrupt.

"As to who I am, I can refer to Senator FRYE, Speaker REED, Representatives BOUTELLE, DINGLEY, and MILLIKEN.

"Very respectfully,

"JOSEPH S. SMITH,

"Late Brevet Brigadier-General, United States Volunteers.

"Hon. GEORGE M. CURTIS,

"Member of Congress, Second District of Iowa."

In view of General Jameson's gallant services and the necessitous condition of his widow, the committee earnestly recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out all after the word "receiving," in line 9.

Appended is a very full statement in regard to the services of General Jameson, which shows the esteem in which he was held by Gen. Phil Kearny and others.

Military record of Brig. Gen. Charles Davis Jameson, United States Volunteers, war of the rebellion, 1861–1865.

The Second Maine Regiment, Col. Charles D. Jameson, was the first to leave the State for the seat of war, and was among the first of New England regiments that set foot upon the "sacred soil" of Virginia, arriving at Falls Church on the morning of July 1, 1861, where they were encamped three weeks, being the farthest advanced of any regiment toward the enemy.

At the first battle of Bull Run the Second was hotly engaged, and displayed numerous instances of daring and reckless bravery. Upon the retiring of General McDowell's army they were detailed as rear guard and were attacked by the celebrated Black Horse Cavalry, which they routed completely. For this exploit Colonel Jameson was warmly thanked and complimented by General Keyes, commanding the brigade, and by General Tyler, commanding the division. During this battle their loss was 47 killed and wounded and over 100 missing. The Union forces being ordered to fall back the night after the engagement, the Second arrived the following morning, after a severe and tiresome march, at Alexandria, where they remained two days, and then were ordered to the vicinity of Fort Corcoran, directly opposite Georgetown. There they remained some two weeks, when they were placed in possession of the fort, and acted as heavy artillery until the middle of October, during which time they were reviewed by General McClellan, President Lincoln, and Secretary Stanton, the former complimenting them highly for their drill. While in command of the fort Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts, who succeeded to the colonelcy of the regiment after Colonel Jameson was appointed brigadier-general, was twice ordered to get ready for action. (Adjutant-General's Report, Maine, 1862, part 1, page 39.)

Maine has been called upon since my last report to mourn the loss of some of her sons whose virtues it will not be unbecoming briefly to describe. It is due to the gallant dead that meritorious service for the public good should have public record.

Gen. Charles D. Jameson was one of the best specimens of the chivalrous gentleman, soldier, and patriot which his native State has sacrificed to the Union during the war. He was a true son of Maine; lived on the banks of our noblest river, always resident within our borders, engaged in that business which marks our distinctive employment and gives us name. He was in all respects a true child of the Pine Tree State. In all the calls of life he was active and energetic. He was successful in his business and happy in his home. He was generous and genial in his associations with his fellow-men. He had a great readiness of perception, the nicest sense of honor, and a bland and pleasing address. He had no enemies, but the most extended circle of warm and sustaining friends. In politics he was a Democrat whose patriotism and love of liberty blazed high and warm above the limits of party.

It was natural that such a man should have been the colonel of the militia regiment of his vicinity and twice a candidate for governor of the State. The attack upon Sumter brought from his heart the earliest vows upon the altar of his country. He left wife and children, parents, and home and friends, and all that made life cherished and valuable, to share the hardships and dangers of the field. The Second Regiment, raised under his active exertions, made him its colonel, and was the first from Maine at the seat of war. In a few weeks it was launched in battle at Bull Run. Its conduct there gave it glory and a gallant name. Its colonel then won his star as brigadier.

It shows the man that in this conflict, when the regiment had been driven back from batteries of the enemy, leaving their wounded behind, he called for volunteers, and leading back a little band, under steady fire, brought off in their arms the injured and helpless men. As brigadier he had not the fortune to lead men from his own State, but choice regiments from Pennsylvania and New York composed his command. With those he fought at Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, and in other fields of battle. He was first to enter Yorktown, and one of the first to enter Williamsburg.

At Fair Oaks his conduct and generalship won him warmest praise from his superior, that eminently gallant man, the late lamented Kearny. It is believed that Jameson then and there carried the Stars and Stripes and by its side the Pine Tree banner of Maine nearer Richmond than any other, before or since, in this war. A friend once asked him, "What did you intend, with your handful of men, when you received orders at Fair Oaks to fall back?" "But for that order," said he, "I would have been in heaven or in Richmond that night." As a soldier General Jameson was a striking figure. Daring to rashness, exposing himself without sense of danger, he rushed into battle and inflamed with his own dash and ardor the men who followed him.

He asked no man to go where he was not willing to be in advance of the foremost. He was not less noticeable in other fields of duty. He had at all times and in all places the love and admiration of his brigade, which gloried in its leader. He cared for his men tenderly, and counted no labor as hardship which brought them health or comfort. In marches he walked with them. He lived with them in camp and shared their lot, whatever it was. By such labor and exposure he became sick, and in September came home to recruit his health, intending soon to go back to the field again; but it was not so ordered of Providence, and he sank gradually until, on the 6th day of November last, he died. It sums up this narrative that Jameson was the first volunteer and the first colonel in the field from Maine; that he was first at Yorktown and among the first and foremost toward Richmond; one of the first in gallantry, one of the first in the love and admiration of his men. Alas, that he should be the first general of Maine to die. At 35 years of age it was hard for the country to lose such a gallant spirit, but the State has gained the memory of a hero.

The Washington Republican speaks as follows of the qualities which distinguished our gallant general:

"Intrepid, enterprising, but withal judicious and full of resources, General Jameson had before him the prospect of a most brilliant military career. He was one of the fighting generals.

"As he, with others of the salvoed chiefs of fearless men who lately have left us—when we could have better spared others of another mold than theirs—as he, and Kearny, and Stevens shall reach the shores of that dark river, made mournful by Cerberus's ceaseless howl, the waiting hosts of the bravest dead of all the past will recognize their beaming blades, nor will they seek to dispute them place amid their front and foremost ranks."

[General Kearny to General Jameson.]

"DEAR GENERAL: I have signed and forwarded to Mr. Fuller the requisite certificate.

"You have no idea how greatly I miss you socially and militarily, and your last, on the 30th of June, on the Newmarket road, I think, really, the handsomest fight of the war. Our line was very unjustly extended 2¼ miles for our weak division.

"The fighting fell entirely on the First Brigade, and I grudged giving General Robinson, a stranger to us, the credit. The enemy tried on us Longstreet's men, who had succeeded on the Chickahominy, but it would not go down. They disregarded our artillery, Thompson's battery; lost men not by scores, but by hundreds, and were only repulsed by Hayes with the Sixty-third and part of the Thirty-seventh and your humble servant. Hayes counted for a legion. As he led them, with his wild, heroic actions, he really looked Homeric; and I trust that I figured for some. * * *

"Oh, how I fancied your being there, with your own fine form and dashing impulsive manner, forming one of our trio. This brigade, which you managed so well and kept in heart, believed in you and followed you with a discipline of the heart. * * *

"I have invariably maintained that you are identified with the division. Williamsburg and Fair Oaks (the great battles of the war) saw you towering o'er the sea of fight, and I acknowledge none other. I have met with too many insulting slights not to count as precious above all other distinctions my noble division as it entered the baptismal stream of fire in that first proof for the idlers of the Potomac—Williamsburg. * * *

"Dear general, may you soon recover and be back in time to head those men who believe in you.

"Very truly, yours, "P. KEARNY, General.

"HARRISON'S LANDING, August 9, 1862."

The following letter of General Jameson to his friend and neighbor was accompanied by a pen and ink diagram of the engagement of which he gives a description:

"HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE, KEARNY'S DIVISION,
"Fair Oaks Station, June 4, 1862.

"DEAR SIR: Thinking you might be interested in a brief description of the great battle of last Saturday, I inclose a rough sketch of that portion of the field that came under my observation during the engagement, and will endeavor to give you some idea of my movements after arriving at the scene of action.

"I came up the Richmond road with three regiments, having sent one, the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, up the railroad. Upon arriving near the open field where the rifle pits are, on the Richmond road, I filed off to the left into the woods road, and marched up to the abatis. I deployed the Sixty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers upon either side of the road on the abatis, with orders to drive the rebels out, they (the rebels) having succeeded in getting into the abatis first, driving Casey's division before them like sheep. I succeeded in holding them in check, but they were evidently determined to break our lines on the Richmond road, having been repulsed in their attempt to turn our left flank by Berry's brigade, and were working that way, keeping up a terrific fire. Our troops had all left the abatis, near the Richmond road. That was a critical moment. General Kearny was with me; my brigade had all been used up at different points (the Eighty-seventh New York Volunteers were sent to the right to support General Peck), except 348 rank and file of the One hundred and fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers under Col. A. A. McKnight. There was not a moment to be lost.

"The only way to prevent the torrent from pouring down that road was to move out of the woods where we were standing, charge across the open field, and up the Richmond road. We started at double-quick, General Kearny at the head with me, also Captain Potter, my assistant adjutant-general. We went up the road to the point designated by a multiple mark on the plan, and then deployed, one-half on either side of the road in the abatis. For more than one hour those men fought in that abatis, not more than 8 or 10 rods between the two lines, during which time I rode back and forth in rear of the abatis, and up the road to the line. At last the rebels broke to the rear and toward their left. About that time large bodies of the enemy were seen moving down the Nine-mile road. Couch's division was holding it. They began to give way. Just at that time the troops in the rifle pits broke and ran, leaving me completely cut off, the rebels rushing into the open field at the point marked 5, and sweeping everything before them.

"For more than half an hour I was driving the rebels before me toward Richmond, and directly in my rear the rebels were driving our troops toward the Chickahominy. It was a novel sight I can assure you. Before I received orders to fall back I had gone three-fourths of a mile beyond the rebels that were in my rear and the point where the attack was first made on Casey. I immediately moved my men off the left flank, toward the White Oak Swamp, through the woods to the rear. To add to the danger of our situation, our battery (6) opened fire on us, thinking our troops had all fled from that position. To give you an idea of our position while on the Richmond road, I will state the loss: Of 348 men that started up that road 171 were either killed or wounded; and of the 18 commissioned officers 13 were killed and wounded. General Kearny's horse and mine were both killed, mine having three bullets in him before he fell.

"I got back to the open field in rear of the battlefield in time to rally some remnants of regiments and make a charge on the rebel cavalry and infantry that had made their appearance, driving them into the woods. It was then quite dark and firing ceased for the night. This ended the fight for the day. In less than three hours I lost, in killed and wounded, nearly one-third of the force I took into action. The commanders of my four regiments were all disabled—three seriously wounded and one taken prisoner. * * *

"Heavy reenforcements having arrived in the night the rebels were repulsed in every quarter. I was not in the fight on Monday. But for Kearny's division it is hard telling what the consequences might have been.

"Please let father and mother know you have heard from me. Remember me to Mrs. ——— and the children. I feel very anxious to hear from you.

"I remain, yours, etc.,

"C. D. JAMESON.

"Hon. G. P. SEWALL."

[General Kearny to Governor Washburn.]

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, HEINTZELMAN'S CORPS,
Camp Berry, Barhamsville, Va., May 10.

SIR: As the commanding general of this division, of which two of the generals commanding brigades (General Jameson and General Berry), as well as two regiments, the Third Maine, Colonel Staples, and the Fourth, Colonel Walker, form part, I take this opportunity of calling to your notice their meritorious conduct in the late fight, and to display the fact that although these regiments were not the sufferers in the late engagement at Williamsburg, having been detached by General Heintzelman to guard the left flank, yet by their steady and imposing attitude they contributed to the success of those more immediately engaged. And I assure you, sir, that with such material, commanded by such sterling officers, nothing but success can crown our efforts when the occasion requires. I have the honor to inclose the report of Gen. D. B. Birney, who commanded the noble brigade of which these two regiments form a part. General Birney commands two New York and two Maine regiments.

It is peculiarly appropriate, after having rendered justice to the regiments, to bring Generals Jameson and Berry to the especial attention of yourself and citizens at home, who look to them for noble deeds to illustrate their annals; and I am proud to state that they have amply filled the full meed of anticipated distinction. General Berry, charged with the left wing of our line of battle, evinced a courage that might be expected from him (when as colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Maine Volunteers he really saved the day at Bull Run), and also a genius for war and a pertinacity in the fight that proved him fit for high command, for he was most severely assailed on the left, and had most difficult rifle pits and abatis to face and carry. General Jameson, who commanded the First Brigade (One hundred and fifth, Sixty-third, Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Eighty-seventh New York), forming the rear of the column on the march from camp on the 5th instant, used vigor in bringing up his men under every difficulty, and was with me under severe fire when he arrived, and gave guaranty of a resolution that promised success in case, daylight remaining to us, he had been launched to the attack of Fort Magruder and those works which the enemy evacuated to us during the night, and which he was the first to enter at daylight.

I have the honor, sir, to be your obedient servant,

P. KEARNY,
Brigadier-General, Commanding Third Division, Heintzelman's Corps.

His Excellency ISRAEL WASHBURN, Jr.,
Governor of Maine.

[Report Adjutant-General of Maine, 1862, part 1, pages 132-136.]

Brig. Gen. Charles D. Jameson was one of the best specimens of the chivalrous gentleman, soldier, and patriot which his native State has sacrificed to the Union during the war. He was a true son of Maine; lived on the banks of our noblest river, always resident within our borders, engaged in that business which marks our distinctive employment and gives us name. The Washington Republican speaks as follows of the qualities which distinguished our gallant general:

"Intrepid, enterprising, but withal judicious and full of resources, General Jameson had before him the prospect of a most brilliant military career. He was one of the fighting generals.

(Adjt. Gen. Report, Maine, part 1, pages 402, 403.)

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor to introduce this bill. The report, a part of which has been read, is quite full and exhaustive, setting forth the military record of General Jameson, containing letters from the generals under whom he served, and a letter from the adjutant-general of the State of Maine. If, however, it is the desire of the committee to have this information in a condensed form, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who lives in the town from which General Jameson enlisted and is familiar with all the facts of the case, can state them better than I can, and I shall be glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the portion of the report that has been read contains the substance of this case. General Jameson was the first colonel to go to the field from the State of Maine, and the first general officer from that State who died. The letters printed in the report at considerable length show his service to have been remarkably brilliant and valuable. Very early in his military career he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, and he rendered distinguished service at the battles of Williamsburg and Fair Oaks. In a conversation a few moments ago with Governor MCCORMICK he mentioned the fact of his having entered Williamsburg with General Jameson, who had so distinguished himself by his gallantry in the action preceding the capture that General McClellan assigned him to the command of the city. At the battle of Fair Oaks his horse was shot three times and fell on him and injured him so badly that he was obliged to be taken to his home, where typhoid fever set in and resulted in his death a few weeks later. His widow, who is now advanced in years and in very poor health, has made application for this increase, in accordance with the custom that has prevailed of making provision in cases of this character. The testimonials in this report from General Howard, General Kearny, from the adjutant-general of Maine, and from other sources all combine to set forth the peculiar gallantry and brilliancy of General Jameson's record; and I have no idea that any gentleman on this floor will hesitate a moment in granting the increase that is asked in this case.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise not to oppose the passage of this bill, but to submit a few remarks. Here is the widow of a distinguished general, whose military record, as set forth in this report, I have read with pleasure, including the references made to him by his commanding officers, Generals Kearny and Howard, and the report of the adjutant-general of the State of Maine. They are touching, they are eloquent, and the widow of this distinguished officer deserves the consideration that is proposed to be given to her in this bill, which, as I understand, is at the rate of $50 per month. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CURTIS] said that he would not ask more than $50 per month; that he thought that would be sufficient. Now, Mr. Chairman, I only want to repeat that I hope we shall vote unanimously for this bill, and thereby establish the precedent of voting to the widows of distinguished Union generals (of whom there were few more distinguished than the husband of this lady) a regular uniform amount. Let us give this widow $50 a month, and I do not think it likely that we shall be called upon in the future to vote a pension to the widow of any more distinguished officer than General Jameson. I hope the bill will be passed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCINDA RICKARDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5393) for the relief of Lucinda Rickards, widow, and the minor children of John D. Rickards, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Lucinda Rickards, the widow, and the names of Henry, Lon, and Frank, the children of John D. Rickards, a private in Company A, Sixty-ninth Regiment of Enrolled Missouri Militia, at the rate of $2 per month each. The pension in the case of widow and children to commence on the 4th day of July, A. D. 1890, the date of the death of said soldier, John D. Rickards, and to be subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having considered the bill (H. R. 5393) to pension Lucinda Rickards and the minor heirs of John D. Rickards, beg leave to report that a similar bill was introduced in the Fifty-third Congress. It was reported favorably in the following language, which the committee incorporate as a part of this report:

"The petitioner is the widow of John D. Rickards, who served in Company A, Sixty-ninth Missouri Enrolled Militia, in the years 1862, 1863, and 1864. This being a State militia organization, he was not pensionable under the general laws, but on proof that he had been wounded August 23, 1862, in action with the enemy, he was pensioned by special act of Congress approved February 14, 1885, and was rated at $8 per month for gunshot wound of left side. The petitioner was married to him January 24, 1865. The soldier died July 4, 1890, at the State insane asylum at St. Joseph, Mo.

"Dr. A. M. Raines testified May 29, 1894, that he was called to attend John D. Rickards on account of a gunshot wound received in actual service August 23, 1862. The ball, entering the spinal column, passed through one lobe of the lungs, and was extracted by affiant from between the ribs. He was treated by affiant for about six weeks, and his mind failed from the time he was wounded until his death in the asylum. 'I believe and have no doubt his insanity was the result of said wound.'

"Dr. D. V. Van Syckel, of Canton, Mo., testified June 2, 1894, that he examined the soldier and found a gunshot wound of left side of lung, near the vertebra, affecting the great spinal nerves of the back, especially motor and sentient nerves; passed through one lobe of lung and was extracted from between the ribs. 'I am confident, from the appearance of the man at time of examination, his insanity resulted from the wound and finally his death, which took place in the St. Joseph Asylum.'"

The committee recommend that all after the word "each," in the ninth line, to the word "subject," in the twelfth line, be stricken out, and as so amended the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended in the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6608) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Taylor.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this and the next bill on the Calendar be passed over for the time being.

Mr. FLYNN. I object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against George W. Taylor, late of Company C, One hundred and third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on the records of the War Department, and to issue to said George W. Taylor a certificate of honorable discharge.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

After the words "honorable discharge," in line 8, add "to date April 3, 1865: Provided, That such soldier shall not be entitled to any pay, bounty, or emoluments by virtue of this act."

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the committee amendment. This soldier resides in my district, and I submit that gentlemen who hear the report on this bill read will be inclined to sustain my proposition and to refuse to sanction the amendment of the committee. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6608) entitled "A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Taylor, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments as follows:

Add to line 8 the words "to date April 3, 1865: Provided, Such soldier shall not be entitled to any pay, bounty, or emoluments by virtue of this act."

The facts as found by your committee, upon which such soldier relies for the relief provided for in this bill, are as follows:

The soldier enlisted August 18, 1862; was wounded and suffered amputation of left middle finger in December, 1863; wounded in right thigh and groin, May, 1864; was furloughed on account of such wound, July 2, 1864; furlough extended to November 12, 1864. Up to this date the record of such soldier, from date of enlistment up to October, 1864, is most worthy.

The proofs submitted to your committee indicate that while such soldier was seeking to return to his command he was captured with a number of others at Powder Springs, Mississippi, about October 25, 1864. That he attempted to escape in January, 1865, but was wounded and recaptured. That he made a final escape in April, 1865, and rejoined our forces at Ebenezer Church, near Selma, Ala. That he was sent from there to Louisville, Ky., and was given transportation home. Two of the members of the forces who were present when the escaping soldier came inside our lines have testified as to the facts, which seem to be confirmed by other testimony, that at the very time such soldier was reported to be a deserter he was a prisoner of war and confined within a Confederate prison.

After a careful consideration of this case your committee believe that such soldier never deserted, but had been so diligent in trying to reach his command from his furlough that he refused to turn back when notified of danger and thereby became a prisoner of war.

The report of the War Department is as follows:

Case of George W. Taylor, late of Company C, One hundred and third Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

It appears from the official records that the soldier named above was enrolled August 18, 1862, for three years. On the roll of his company, dated December 31, 1863, he is reported as absent, "wounded at Chattanooga, November 25, 1863." The rolls dated February 29 and April 30, 1864, show him present with his command, but the rolls dated June 30 and August 31, 1864, show him absent in field hospital near Dallas since May 27, 1864. The roll dated October 31, 1864, reports him absent, wounded in action at Dallas, Ga., May 27, 1864, and the roll dated December 31, 1864, reports him to have deserted while at home on furlough November 20, 1864. The company muster-out roll, dated June 21, 1865, shows him to have deserted November 12, 1864, while on furlough from hospital at Altoona, Ga.

The medical records show that he was admitted to regimental hospital November 25, 1863, with gunshot wound of the left middle finger, which was amputated, and that he was furloughed December 10, 1863.

The medical records also show that he was admitted to regimental hospital May 27, 1864, for gunshot wound (nature not stated), and that he was sent to the corps hospital June 9, 1864, but no record of him in the last-named hospital has been found.

The records of the Fifteenth Army Corps show that he was furloughed from July 2, 1864, to August 1, 1864, but the cause of his furlough is not given.

Nothing has been found of record to show that he was ever captured by the enemy.

Applying for removal of the charge of desertion, this man testified on December 28, 1892, that, having been wounded in the right thigh and groin, he went home on furlough about the 1st of July, 1864, which furlough was extended to November 12, 1864; that he left his home to join his command in October, 1864; that he was captured by the rebels at Powder Springs, Mississippi, about October 25, 1864, and was held as a prisoner until April, 1865, when he escaped to the United States forces at Ebenezer Church, near Selma, Ala.; that he was sent to Louisville, Ky., and there given transportation to his home; that he attempted to escape from the rebels in January, 1865, but was pursued, recaptured, and wounded by a saber stroke.

Jacob Johnson testified, under date of August 18, 1892, that he was a private in Company K, Fourth United States Cavalry, and that he knows that while his command was advancing from Ebenezer Church, Georgia, to Selma, Ala., and had reached the Alabama River, "the said George W. Taylor was on the opposite side of the river, came across in a canoe, and was escaping from the Confederate lines where he was a prisoner," and that he was very weak and emaciated.

Lewis Manker testified, under date of August 18, 1892, that he was a member of Company G, Second Indiana Cavalry, and that on April 3, 1865, George W. Taylor, who had just made his escape from the Confederate lines, where he had been a prisoner, came to Manker's company at Selma, Ala., and remained with it about four days.

Samuel N. Rockhold testified, under date of December 22, 1892, that he was a member of Taylor's company and went home with him on furlough in June or July, 1864, Taylor being wounded. He also testified that he had been "informed" that Taylor did not rejoin his command because he was captured and imprisoned by the rebels.

Under date of April 1, 1893, Taylor made a sworn statement in which he reiterated his previous allegations and detailed at some length the circumstances of his being wounded, attempting to rejoin his command, and his alleged capture and escape, and in addition he declared that after he reached the Union lines he was sent, about April 25, to Memphis and thence to Louisville; that the surgeon in charge of the convalescent camp at Louisville gave him a certificate showing that he was not fit for service; that he was given transportation to Bushnell, Ill., which was near his home, and that he had the surgeon's certificate until 1886, when it was destroyed by the burning of his house.

Bernard Kelly, late captain of Company F, One hundred and third Illinois Infantry, testified, under date of June 17, 1893, that Taylor was a member of his company, was a good soldier, always ready for and attentive to his duty, up to May 28, 1864, when he (Kelly) was last wounded. He gave no testimony with regard to the soldier subsequent to the last-named date.

Charles D. Monroe testified, under date of January 2, 1890 (?), that he was adjutant of the Forty-eighth Illinois Infantry in November, 1864; that on November 9, 1864, when returning from a leave of absence to his command, which was south of Rome, Ga., he found many others on their way to their commands, some of whom were turned back, but others were not, and many of those who were not turned back were captured by the rebels; that "from conversation with" Taylor he believed that he was one of the party that was captured by the rebels at that time; that he does not recognize Taylor as being one of the soldiers who were returning to their commands at the time in question, but from the fact that Taylor recognized him and made statements concerning the affair in question, which statements the affiant, Monroe, knows to be correct, he is satisfied that Taylor was captured by the enemy, as he claims, and that he did not desert.

Francis M. Hunt testified, under date of February 4, 1895, that he was a corporal in Company C, One hundred and third Illinois Infantry; that he knew of Taylor being wounded about May 28, 1864, and receiving a furlough; that he did not see him during the remainder of his service, but that from his acquaintance with him he does not believe he ever deserted, but believes that he was captured by the enemy and held as a prisoner of war, as stated by him.

Christopher C. Holland testified, under date of January 16, 1895, that Taylor employed him in 1862 to file a homestead entry; that in the course of this employment he saw and handled Taylor's "discharge," which he read and examined, and which he knows was in the usual form of such papers; that said discharge, on its face, showed, among other things, that the soldier was honorably discharged from the service of the United States; that the discharge was dated at Louisville, Ky., was issued from a hospital, and was signed by the person in charge of said hospital; and that this discharge was destroyed by fire in the spring of 1886.

Austin L. Thayer testified, under date of January 8, 1895, that he remembers that Taylor showed him "some kind of discharge paper," and that it contained Taylor's name, but that he has no recollection as to the official signature; that he considered the paper good enough evidence of Taylor having been in the service and discharged by some military authority; that he vouched for Taylor in a Grand Army post as having disclayed his discharge to him previous to his (Taylor's) being "burned out" in the spring of 1886; that his "impression" is that Taylor had a genuine discharge, and that his "impression" is that it was issued from some hospital, but he can not swear to that fact; that he "heard Taylor speak" of his having served in the Army and of his discharge, and when and where he was discharged, but that he can not remember the date or place of discharge as stated by Taylor.

The application for removal of the charge of desertion in this case has repeatedly been denied, and now stands denied, because repeated and exhaustive searches of the records of both the Union and Confederate armies have failed to elicit any evidence that Taylor was ever captured by or escaped from the enemy, or that he was ever under military control, either with troops in the field at Memphis or Louisville, at any time subsequent to July 2, 1864, on which date he received a furlough for thirty days; and because, further, the only record relative to his final separation from the service that can be found is the clear and positive record which shows that he deserted in November, 1864, while at home on furlough.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
War Department, March 2, 1896.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. FLYNN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that the committee find that while the charge of desertion was made against this soldier he was lingering in a Confederate prison. They further find that he never deserted; and in view of that fact I say the amendment of the committee should not be sanctioned by the House.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to offer an amendment. There is a mistake in describing the company in which this man served. I move to strike out, in line 5, the letter "C" and insert "F."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. I think this bill ought not to pass. I move, therefore, that it be laid aside to be reported to the House unfavorably. Let us get bills of this character out of the way, in order that bills which ought to pass may come in.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TALBERT, it was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 5, noes 68.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

OSCAR A. BULETTE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5407) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Oscar A. Bulette, late private in Company E, Fifty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, during late war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the record of desertion now standing against Oscar A. Bulette, late private in Company E, Fifty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, during the late war, and instead thereof to grant him an honorable discharge.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the name "Bulette," in line 5, the words "known in his military record as Austin Bulette"; also to amend the title by inserting the same words after the name "Bulette." My reason for offering this amendment is that in the records of the company and regiment the name appears as Austin Bulette.

Now, in regard to the circumstances of this case, I will make a statement so as to avoid the necessity of reading the report. This was a French boy who enlisted from Wisconsin, going over the line, however, into the State of Illinois. He had been brought up on a farm; and, fired with the patriotism which, as we all remember, swept over the country in those days, he ran away from home and enlisted. His people were very anxious about him and sought in different ways to obtain his discharge from the Army. Finally President Lincoln was petitioned by the father of the boy, and in some manner—just how it was accomplished the record does not state; the petition does not appear in the record, but there is an affidavit showing that there was a petition—in some way the prayer of that petition was carried out, and the boy was taken out of the Army. He states in his affidavit that an officer came to him at St. Louis, took him from his company with the knowledge of the officers of the company, and started him on his way home. He went home and remained there for several months—perhaps for more than a year; but, at all events, as soon as he became old enough he reenlisted and served out the time of his enlistment.

Mr. PICKLER. And was honorably discharged?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And was honorably discharged. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to hear the report read in this case.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have attempted to state the substance of the report.

Mr. TALBERT. But the report may state the facts more explicitly.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report (by Mr. GRIFFIN), but was interrupted by Mr. TALBERT. I have no desire to hear that report further. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported unfavorably.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, first, on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment of Mr. DOOLITTLE was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] that the bill be laid aside to be reported unfavorably.

The question being taken, the motion was rejected; there being on a division (called for by Mr. TALBERT)—ayes 4, noes 71.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported favorably.

RHODA AUGUSTA THOMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6826) granting a pension to Rhoda Augusta Thompson, daughter of the late Thaddeus Thompson, a private in the Revolutionary war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Rhoda Augusta Thompson, daughter of the late Thaddeus Thompson, a private in Colonel Lamb's regiment of artillery and in Captain Joseph Thomas's company of artillery, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month during her natural life.

Mr. SPERRY. This lady, who is well known to me, is the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, and as such her father was on the pension roll. She is now 75 years of age; is infirm, with no one to care for her except her friends. This is a statement of the case. I think it is one well worthy of a pension.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

ANNA M. NEWTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1508) granting a pension to the widow of Gen. John Newton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name Anna M. Newton, widow of John Newton, late major-general of volunteers and brigadier-general of the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 a month.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Anna M. Newton, widow of Gen. John Newton."

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the adoption of the following amendment: Strike out "one hundred," in line 7, and insert "seventy-five"; so that it will read "at the rate of $75 a month."

Mr. DINGLEY. We ought to have some statement with the bill or have the report read.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to make this suggestion simply: I think it but just to the committee and to the House that there should be some brief statement made as to the merits of each of these cases as they come up, and this would be better than the reading of the report, as it would consume less time. If no one volunteers to make the statement concerning the bill, it will be necessary to have the report read in each case.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Maine——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has demanded the reading of the report. Does he yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I was going to say that, in view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, I would make a brief statement respecting this case, which will take less time than the reading of the report.

This bill proposes to pension the widow of Maj. Gen. John Newton. He was one of the most distinguished graduates of West Point before the war in a class nearly all of whom went into the Confederacy, and he, with Gen. George H. Thomas, were the conspicuous exceptions among the Virginians at that time who remained in the Union Army.

He was one of the most competent engineers of his day, graduated second in his class, and received promotions on account of his skill in the science of engineering, first to the rank of brigadier-general, and later, because of his military genius, to a higher grade. He served through the war most gallantly and won honorable distinction, and later on he was in charge of the most important Government works, especially the improvement in New York Harbor, and particularly in arranging for the safe navigation at what is known as the "Hell Gate Channel" leading into the sound. His widow is left in destitute circumstances and has to care for an invalid daughter.

The Senate passed this bill at $100 a month, and, Mr. Chairman, there is no bill on the Calendar that appeals more strongly to the sense of justice of this House than does this bill. Because of the action of the committee in reducing the amount proposed by the Senate bill I am reluctant to ask an increase, although my sense of justice would warrant me in so doing.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this officer did not receive, while performing the eminent services he describes, during his military life a compensation of from five thousand to seven thousand dollars a year for at least twenty or twenty-five years.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, General Newton received such compensation as the law gives to the officers of the rank he held. Because of his peculiar talent and skill he was often charged with more responsible duties than other officers of like grade. But to raise the question whether his compensation was large or small raises the question of the propriety of the salaries given by law to officers in the service of the United States, and is a question upon which I do not care to enter as germane to the subject under consideration.

General Newton left no property to his family. He had to live in a very expensive city while receiving the compensation referred to by my friend from California, and his salary was exhausted. His widow, now an aged lady, nearly 70, past 65 years, comes to the House under these circumstances for its favorable consideration. Congress has expressed over and over again in measures for the relief of widows of officers of distinction who served the country as well as General Newton did its purpose to provide suitable support, and I am sure that there can be no disposition to grant his widow less than this bill requires.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," and I do this simply on the same ground that I advocated a few moments ago—the pension to the widow of another general officer, General Jameson. I dislike very much to make this motion affecting the bill of my amiable friend from New York, on whose first visit to my part of the country we treated somewhat badly, but in justice to myself and to this class of pensions I think that they should go on a common ground, and for that purpose I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to what my distinguished friend on my right [Mr. LOUD], who was himself a gallant soldier in the Union Army, has said with regard to the compensation received by General Newton from the Government for services rendered in the war and elsewhere. When application was made here for a pension to the widow of General Grant, if my friend from California had been a member, I think he would not have been found asking such a question concerning her pension. I speak on behalf of the widow of Gen. John Newton. He has a record of services taking in the battles on the Peninsula, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg. It reaches to the great armies of the West. His widow has far less of this world's goods than the widow of General Grant. She is entitled to at least the poor pittance of $75 a month. [Applause.] The Senate gave her a hundred. I was surprised to hear that the House committee had reduced it to $75.

John Newton became a major-general not through political or other influences. He won his double-starred shoulder straps on the field of battle. [Applause.] He was as modest and as undemonstrative in his bearing as General Grant himself.

General Newton was not only useful to his country when our great civil war was raging, but he was useful to her in the paths of peace and commerce after the war. He blasted a highway from Long Island Sound into the great port of New York. As president of the Panama Railroad Company he maintained for commerce that iron link between the Atlantic and the Pacific. He deserved well of his country from the day that he entered her service up to the day that he died, not only in war but in peace. His widow, now in straitened circumstances, asks only what has been granted to widows of major-generals in the Union service who died before her husband.

Mr. Chairman, Mrs. Newton will not receive under this bill what has been granted to the widows of former major-generals who were in far better circumstances. I do hope that my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] will not insist upon his amendment, which reduces the amount still lower. I know that if he had fought with General Newton, as I have done, with others on this floor, and if he was acquainted with the circumstances of the case as they know them, he would be the last man here to gravely move to reduce this proposed pension. We have with us here on my left an officer, and a brave officer, who was upon General Newton's staff. I refer to my friend and colleague, Colonel SHANNON. He knew General Newton. He has seen him on the bloody field, and can testify to his meritorious services and the needs and necessities of the case. Mr. Chairman, this House will simply stultify and disgrace itself if it reduces this pension from $75 to $50 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman say something for the widows of the privates who followed General Newton?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am voting for pensions for them whenever I have an opportunity. Votes are at least as good as words.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Time for debate on this bill is exhausted.

Mr. LOUD. The opposition to this bill have not consumed sixty seconds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this bill has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I hope that the gentleman will give me an opportunity to reply——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not give the gentleman an opportunity when the time is exhausted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes?

Mr. MILNES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from California be allowed five minutes.

Mr. POOLE. I object.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I can get time on the next bill. I want nothing except what I am entitled to by right, and I will get it on some other bill.

Mr. HULL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULL. As I understand the rule, debate is limited to five minutes on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is limited to ten minutes, to be divided between the friends and opponents of the measure.

Mr. HULL. Can a man take the floor and occupy the ten minutes on one side, and thus cut off the other side entirely?

The CHAIRMAN. Two or three members can take the floor and occupy the whole ten minutes on either side, unless some member objects or raises the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 55.

Mr. TALBERT. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused, 9 members (not a sufficient number) voting in support of the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The amendment recommended by the committee, to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five," was agreed to.

The question was taken on laying aside the bill as amended to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes none.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the committee). One hundred and fifty-three gentlemen are present. The ayes have it, and the bill is laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CATHARINE LEARY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 819) granting a pension to Catharine Leary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Catharine Leary, a nurse in the war of the rebellion, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month on and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment striking out the word "eight," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to remind the chairman, before I proceed, that the Chair has repeatedly called the attention of members to the fact that they can not determine when a member's time has expired, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to the position in which a member is placed in this House. The House, or a member of the House, can not determine when a member's five minutes have expired. Hence a member must retain his seat until another member has used up the whole time, either in favor of or in opposition to the bill.

Now, then, in relation to the last case. When I suggested an inquiry to the gentleman from New York as to what salary had been received by General Newton, whose widow this House has just put upon the pension roll at $75 a month, the gentleman from New York worked himself into an imaginary frenzy—and when I say the gentleman from New York I mean Mr. CUMMINGS, who turned to me and said the "gentleman upon his right," meaning, I suppose, me, because he could not have meant anyone else—and asserted that if I had been in this House at the time that the widow of General Grant was pensioned I would not have raised my voice against the pension granted to that widow. Now, permit me to say to the gentleman——

Mr. CUMMINGS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said that he would not have applied the same argument to that case.

Mr. LOUD. I think I have quoted the gentleman's exact language. Permit me to say that the statement is entirely gratuitous on the part of the gentleman from New York. He is talking about something that he knows nothing about, as he quite frequently does. I deny to him or to anyone else the right to assume what position I would take. I think I have been consistent in my position in this House. I have endeavored to show favoritism to no one. I assert here that General Newton was paid for his services during his entire service, and he was educated at the expense of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I was led to believe a fact, which I subsequently discovered to be true, which perhaps influenced the gentleman in the matter, and that was that General Newton was a Democrat.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If the gentleman will allow me, he was an anti-Tammany Democrat, and my political enemy.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. And put out of office by Tammany.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care anything about that. I was led to believe that, Mr. Chairman. So that it was wholly unnecessary for the gentleman to suggest what position I would have occupied. But I will state that if I had the power to prevent the pensioning of widows of officers beyond the amount allowed by law I would do so in the case of every widow in this country, not excepting the widow of General Grant. I do not believe that it is in the province of Congress to be charitable to any person. I say again, and I am sincere and earnest in what I say, that if I had it in my power I would defeat every one of these cases. I have been consistent in my course. I know I can not defeat them, and hence I keep my seat.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us hear the report read or some explanation given of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. The only point there is in this case is——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. In the general army nurse bill, which is now the law, certain authority is defined in the law for the engagement of these nurses. This woman filed her application, but they decided that her employment was not under such authority as was defined by the general statute. She served six months. The record of this nurse's service shows that they were valuable. They were given during an epidemic of smallpox or cholera, and the only point in the case is that her employment was not under such authority as is defined in the law as it now stands. She is worthy of her pension. She served six months and did valiant service. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it the same amount of pension as given to nurses?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; it is the same as given to other nurses.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this woman did not enter the army service until a year after the war. A parliamentary inquiry. Is it within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report a bill of this character?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair that point comes too late. The bill has already been under consideration by the committee and has been debated for several minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PICKLER. This woman was in the hospital service after the war was closed.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rise to a point of order. I make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. ERDMAN. My point of order is that this bill is not properly reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order comes pretty late, after the bill has been under consideration by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. I do not understand that that would make any difference on the point of order. The question of jurisdiction in a court of justice can be made in the appellate tribunal, even if not made before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ERDMAN. Then I only want to say, Mr. Chairman, that from the affidavits on file it appears that this party was employed as a domestic in the family of Private Gillis at the time she was alleged to be a hospital nurse.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to raise my voice here. [Laughter.] I want to try to bring to my assistance the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], who came very near falling in his tracks a while ago in the interest of the widow of a distinguished officer. I want to call to my assistance the Democrats who stood here and voted for that appropriation. I want them to help me to get a little pittance now for a poor woman. I want to appeal to the distinguished gentleman from New York who shed some of his crocodile tears a while ago; I want to appeal to him in the interest of this poor woman. It is a sad condition of affairs that whenever you gentlemen make an appeal for the officers' widows you have to come to the Democratic side to get those bills through. I am ashamed of it. Let those gentlemen get up here now and say something in the interest of the poor people as well as in the interest of the rich.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL D. GILMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7127) granting a pension to Samuel D. Gilman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provision, and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel D. Gilman, late of the Strafford Guards, New Hampshire Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope we shall have a brief statement of the merits of this bill.

A MEMBER. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7127) granting a pension to Samuel D. Gilman, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

Samuel D. Gilman enlisted May 5, 1864, as a member of Strafford Guards, New Hampshire Volunteers, and went into service at Fort Constitution. While on duty in the service he took cold from exposure in a drenching rain, and rheumatism in his feet and ankles immediately followed, rendering him unfit for duty, and in a short time erysipelas of head and face. He had, up to that time, been a vigorous man, seldom lost a day by reason of illness, and was industrious and of good habits.

A special examiner, under date of January 24, 1896, says:

"The diseases named have resulted in his present wretched condition. There can be no question of his entire disability to do manual labor, and he has been in that condition for six or seven years or longer. The uncontradicted testimony is that he did have rheumatism when at Fort Constitution and erysipelas a few weeks later. The only question, it seems to me, is, was the man sound when he enlisted? Claimant's witnesses are some of the most reliable citizens of Dover, N. H., and he is a conscientious and honest man. He is 70 years of age."

In October, 1894, the examining board reports:

"This man is totally unable to do any work and can not take care of himself. Has to have a constant attendant."

In view of all the facts, your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AUGUSTUS G. CARY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4405) granting a pension to Augustus G. Cary.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Augustus G. Cary, late a lieutenant, United States Revenue Marine, serving on the revenue cutter Forward in November, 1863, at which time, by order of the President of the United States, the said cutter Forward, together with its officers and crew, was detached from the Revenue-Marine Service and attached to the naval forces, and served as a naval vessel for eleven months, during which time the said Augustus G. Cary acted as a lieutenant. Therefore the said Augustus G. Cary shall be paid such pension as he may then be entitled to according to law.

The committee recommended amendments striking out "a," after the word "late," in line 6, and substituting the word "first"; also striking out all after the words "revenue marine," in line 7, down to and including the words "according to law," in line 15, and substituting therefor the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4405) granting a pension to Augustus G. Cary, have had the same under consideration, and after a thorough and careful examination report the same back with the following amendments, and recommend that it do pass when so amended:

Strike out, in line 6, after the word "late," the word "a" and insert in lieu thereof the word "first." Strike out all after the word "marine," in line 7, and add "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

The reasons for this recommendation were submitted to the Senate at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress in a report presented by Senator Sawyer, and again to the Senate at the Fifty-third Congress, second session, in a report presented by Senator VILAS, embodying the report of the preceding Congress, and to the House during the Fifty-second Congress. Said reports are hereunto attached and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 2401, Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have had under consideration Senate bill 2648, and report the same with amendment, and when so amended recommend that it do pass.

Amend by striking out all after the word "pension," in line 7, and insert the following:

"Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws as provided by the act of June 27, 1890, and that said pension shall be paid out of the naval pension fund."

During the war Mr. Cary was lieutenant in the Marine Revenue Service on the revenue-cutter Forward. In November, 1863, the Forward, with its crew, was transferred by order of the President from the marine to the naval service, and was in the naval service until July, 1864. The record shows that Mr. Cary was lieutenant on the revenue cutter, and that it was under orders from the President, and cooperated with the Navy at Beaufort, N. C., and at other points during that period.

He continued in the marine service for some time afterwards, where, he claims, he contracted the ailment from which he is now suffering. The evidence shows that he has been under treatment of physicians for sixteen years or more, and has undergone operations, which have failed to relieve him. He is now a confirmed invalid, wholly disabled, and has been so for several years. He is sick and in need of medical attendance, and he is dependent on his wife for care and support. His family consists of a wife and several small children.

[Senate Report No. 590, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1948) granting a pension to Augustus G. Cary, have examined the same, and recommend that the bill be passed.

The reasons for this recommendation were submitted to the Senate at the second session of the Fifty-second Congress in a report of which a copy is appended.

[Senate Report No. 1068, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2648) granting a pension to Augustus G. Cary, have examined the same, and report:

The beneficiary, Augustus G. Cary, was, at the commencement of the war and subsequently, a lieutenant in the United States Revenue-Marine Service, and his claim for a pension is based upon his services in connection with the Navy. The committee have taken some pains to ascertain the facts in regard to Lieutenant Cary's claim, and have been informed by an official letter from the Secretary of the Treasury that the records of the Department show that "Lieutenant Cary served on the revenue cutter Forward at Beaufort, N. C., from November, 1863, to July, 1864, and that said vessel was under orders by the President to cooperate with the Navy during the period this officer served thereon."

Information from other sources shows that he rendered active and valuable service during the time his vessel cooperated with the Navy, and he is clearly entitled to a pension, inasmuch as he was practically an officer in the Navy during the prevalence of the President's order.

He is now advanced in years, very much disabled, and in reduced circumstances. His attending physician makes affidavit that he has a complication of diseases, and has had for a long time.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

This committee, after a careful examinination of the documents and other reliable evidence in this case, find the following state of facts:

The beneficiary, Augustus G. Cary, was, at the commencement of the war, and for some time prior thereto, a lieutenant in the United States Revenue-Marine Service, and his claim is based upon his services in connection with the Navy. The committee have taken some pains to ascertain the facts in regard to Lieutenant Cary's claim, and have been informed by an official letter from the Secretary of the Treasury that the records of the Department show that Lieutenant Cary served on the revenue cutter Forward at Beaufort, N. C., from November, 1863, to July, 1864, and that said vessel was under orders by the President to cooperate with the Navy during the period this officer served thereon.

Information from other sources shows that he rendered active and valuable service during the time his vessel cooperated with the Navy. Prior to the date on which the cutter Forward was transferred to the Navy by order of President Lincoln, viz, May, 1862, Lieutenant Cary was on the Miami at the taking of Norfolk, Va. Mr. Cary's first voyage in the service was on the Varina, which left New York in April, 1861, after rebel privateers. While on this vessel he was acting as third lieutenant, sailing master, and pilot. He was also on the Stevens Battery, a submerging monitor. Mr. Cary seems to have been a very efficient man and a thorough pilot, and his services were in great demand, hence his transfer from one boat to another from 1861 to 1864.

Your committee are clearly of the opinion that Lieutenant Cary is entitled to a pension, inasmuch as he was practically an officer of the Navy during the time his vessel was attached to the Navy by order of the President.

The affidavits filed by his attending physician show that he has a complication of diseases and for some years has suffered therefrom. He is now advanced in years, absolutely disabled, and so long as he lives will not again be able to perform manual labor. He is now confined to his bed, his property exhausted after continued illness covering a period of sixteen years, and he lives to-day as the result only of careful nursing and faithful service rendered to him by a devoted and noble wife.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this man to be pensioned as of the Revenue-Marine Service or for naval service?

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. For naval service.

Mr. DINGLEY. I thought this person whom it is proposed by this bill to pension was in the Revenue-Marine Service and was transferred to the naval service. Of course we should be very careful not to pension anyone simply for being in the Revenue-Marine Service.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will look at the finding of the committee I think he will be satisfied.

The amendments recommended in the report were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 7740) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Keiser, of Hubbell, Nebr.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CORLISS. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to follow the rule, unless there is some special reason why this bill should be taken up out of its course.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I trust the gentleman will not object to taking up this bill. The case is a very peculiar and meritorious one. The beneficiary of this bill is 74 years of age, helpless, bedridden, and paralytic—one of the most pitiable cases on record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. I have a case just like this myself.

MRS. CHRISTINA GRAHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4268) granting a pension to Mrs. Christina Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Christina Graham, of Baltimore, Md., daughter of Wendel Laurentz, deceased, late a private in the Revolutionary war.

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4268) granting a pension to Mrs. Christina Graham, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the daughter of Wendel Lawrentz, a Revolutionary soldier, whose service is shown in the following report from the Pension Bureau:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS
"Washington, D. C., February 28, 1896.

"SIR: In response to your request, herewith returned, for a statement of service of Wendel Lawrentz, a Maryland soldier in the Revolutionary war, I have the honor to inform you that it appears from the papers in the claim of his widow, Ann Lawrentz, for pension (No. 9113), that he enlisted as a private "in the German regiment," in July, 1776, and served under Capts. Philip Graykill and Christopher Myers, Colonels Honsegger and Weltner, until July 20, 1779, when he was discharged. He was engaged in the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth.

"Very respectfully,

"WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

"The CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS,
"House of Representatives."

The relationship of the claimant to the soldier is certified to by the officers of Avalon Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution, of Baltimore, Md.; and it is shown by the claimant's sworn statement, and by the certificate of Hon. JOHN K. COWEN, M. C., who is personally acquainted with the facts, that she is now 72 years old, without any means whatever, and dependent on friends for the necessities of life.

There are several precedents for the allowance of pensions to the aged and destitute daughters of soldiers of the Revolution, and, believing this case to be a worthy one, your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. One word, Mr. Chairman. This seems to be a bill to pension the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier. Is it understood that daughters of Revolutionary soldiers, provided they can show need, are to be granted pensions?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. In reply to the gentleman from Maine I will say that that has been the attitude and action of the committee in the Fifty-third Congress, of which I was a member, and also in this Congress. The rule has been to report favorably upon all bills of that character.

Mr. DINGLEY. I simply wanted to know what the practice was to be and whether we were going into that business, because I have a dozen applications of that kind.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN R. ROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3380) granting an increase of pension to John R. Row, of Toronto, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John R. Row, of Toronto, Kans., late of Company B, Third Illinois Infantry, Mexican war, and pay him a pension of $72 per month in lieu of the pension now received by him, said increase of pension to be paid subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

An amendment recommended by the committee, striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 6, before the word "dollars," and inserting "thirty," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB M. HAMBURGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 948) to remove the charge of desertion against Jacob M. Hamburger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove charge of desertion standing against the name of Jacob M. Hamburger, late musician in Company G, First Battalion, Twelfth United States Infantry, and issue him an honorable discharge.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case is short and covers all the facts. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 948) entitled "A bill to remove charge of desertion against Jacob N. Hamburger," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass.

It appears from the petition, proof filed with the committee, and official records of the War Department, that Jacob N. Hamburger enlisted at the age of 15 years as a musician in the Twelfth United States Infantry, at the city of New York, on the 29th day of February, 1864, for a term of three years. He continued in the service until January, 1866, when he was reported as deserted at Richmond, Va. The official records also show that William Lowe was principal musician of the Twelfth United States Infantry, and had control of the musician, Hamburger, who was a frail boy, less than 16 years of age. It is claimed, and there is sufficient evidence to establish the reasonableness of petitioner's claim, that after Mr. Hamburger had served about a year he was most severely punished with a rawhide by the chief musician, Lowe, who, it is claimed, inflicted the punishment at a time when he was intoxicated. The punishment was so violent as to cause the cheek bone of the petitioner to be broken and his eye affected, from which he has since lost sight. The records show that the petitioner was taken to the hospital for treatment of lacerated wounds, and that the principal musician was placed under arrest, but there is no record of his trial.

The records further show that the petitioner returned to his service and continued until 1866, under the command, however, of a different principal musician. It appears that in January, 1866, Mr. Hamburger was transferred to Richmond, Va., and again placed under the command of William Lowe, who had inflicted such severe punishment, and in consequence thereof deserted the ranks and returned to his home, alleging as a reason therefor the fear of his life, in consequence of the repeated threats made by said Lowe.

The claimant was, upon his own application, furnished, in August, 1891, a deserter's release under General Orders No. 55, Adjutant-General's Office, 1890, which protects him from arrest and trial by general court-martial and closes his military record.

There is no record that this musician, during his service prior to date of desertion, was ever absent without leave for two days or for any other period.

The merits of this case, and extreme youthful appearance of the boy at the time, his age, and his good conduct during his entire service in the Army, constrain the committee to recommend the relief desired, and therefore urge that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES WILLIAMSON.

The next business was the bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Charles Williamson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Williamson, late assistant surgeon of the Twelfth Regiment Kansas State Militia Volunteers.

Mr. MILNES. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Charles Williamson, having carefully considered the same, adopt as their own the following Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill:

[Senate Report No. 140, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Charles Williamson, have examined the same and report:

The petitioner, Charles Williamson, was assistant surgeon in the Twelfth Regiment Kansas State Militia Volunteers. He was enlisted July 8, 1864, and discharged October 25, 1864. He bases his claim upon double inguinal hernia incurred October 23, 1864, between Independence and Westport, Mo.

From the evidence submitted it appears that he was an able, strong-bodied man and perfectly sound at the time of his enlistment.

At the time of his discharge he was ruptured substantially as claimed by him in his declaration. He received the rupture while riding on horseback and attempting to cross a small ravine, occasioned by the jumping and stumbling of the horse. Immediately afterwards he was removed from the horse to the ambulance.

At the time of the injury he was in actual service and in the discharge of his duties. He presented proof of his claim and it was rejected because (as it was claimed) his proof failed to show his injury while in actual service. This claim on the part of the Government appears to be unfounded. Although the evidence furnished by the claimant and taken by the special examiner of the Department does not show by actual direct evidence the origin of claimant's double inguinal hernia, yet the testimony of bodily and physical soundness prior to his entering the service is positive, direct, and conclusive to the fact that the claimant was physically and bodily sound when he entered the Army, and the evidence is equally direct and conclusive that he did suffer from such hernia when he was discharged from the service, and the circumstances surrounding the origin of his disability, supported by strong circumstantial and corroborating evidence, lead to the conclusion of the correctness of his claim that he was injured while in the line of duty. The presumption is very strong and almost conclusive in his favor, and in accordance with the rulings of the Secretary of the Interior heretofore made, "that where strong circumstantial and corroborative evidence is given in favor of the claimant, he should be given the benefit of the doubt and the burden of proof changes from the claimant to the Government," and as the Government presents no proof overthrowing this claim of presumption, your committee, to whom was referred the bill, return the same with recommendation that it do pass with an amendment.

Amend by striking out all after the word "volunteers," in line 7.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

WILLIAM GREER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6590) granting a pension to William Greer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of William Greer, late of Company A, One hundredth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6590) granting an increase of pension to $50 per month to William Greer, late private Company A, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, having carefully examined and considered all the facts and circumstances in evidence in this claim, respectfully report:

William Greer enlisted February 15, 1864, and was honorably discharged August 16, 1865. He was wounded in the battle of Weldon Railroad, near Petersburg, Va., August 19, 1864, being struck with three balls about 2 inches below the elbow in right arm and passing through both bones of forearm, and one ball deflecting into the elbow joint, or through it.

He was pensioned at $8 from August 17, 1865; increased to $12 from April, 1886; afterwards a reissue at $30 from April 14, 1886, to correct the rating, and $36 from April 6, 1887; this was reduced to $18 from June 4, 1888; increased to $24 from July 23, 1889, and to $36 from December 30, 1889 (date of amputation).

The Pension Bureau sent a special examiner to inquire why the arm was amputated so far above the elbow, and Drs. Bond and Drake explained:

"The reason that we cut the arm as high above the elbow joint as we did was to get above the diseased tissue. The examination of the arm before amputation disclosed the fact of diseased tissue, and after the amputation the arm suppurated, showing that we had not gotten above that diseased portion. On opening the joint after the amputation we found necrosis of the elbow joint. The bones of the joint were denuded of cartilage, and fragments of the bullet were embedded in the bones of the forearm and arm through the joint. There were several suppurating sinuses both above and below the joint. We not only found that the bones of the lower arm had been injured by the ball as it entered and passed through the forearm, but also injured the humerus as it passed out of the arm above the elbow joint. We found fragments of lead in the bones of the forearm and cartilage of the humerus. Most of the cartilage of the humerus had necrosis. The condition of the arm as we found it to exist at that time, we believe, could not have been produced by any other cause than the gunshot wound as alleged."

The last medical examination had by the board at Kansas City, Mo., February 15, 1892, and which is in line with the previous examinations, and which was made very carefully under instructions from the Pension Bureau, the soldier being stripped and subjected to every test known to the science of medicine and surgery, clearly demonstrates the merits of applicant's claim that his present paralysis and loss of sight is due to the gunshot wound. The board reports as follows:

"Upon examination we find the following objective conditions: Pulse rate, 90 to 108; respiration, 20; temperature, 98½; height, 5 feet 9 inches; weight, 157 pounds; age, 48 years. The right arm amputated 7 inches below the acromion; right shoulder is 2½ inches smaller than the left. The right arm, 4 inches below acromion, is 3 inches less in size than its fellow. The stump is tender, the bone is well covered. There is enlargement of the end of the bone, which is also rough and irregular in outline. Violent paralysis agitans in the right arm, still more severe in the left arm and entire body, including the head, and affecting speech. The lower limbs are involved; violent muscular twitching of arms and trunk. Hyperæsthesia along the entire spine, also hyperæsthesia of scalp and face, with tender points on left side; tongue tremulous; incoordination of left arm—does not come within 1 foot of a point (with closed eyes)—incoordination of lower limbs, less marked than in the upper; great tenderness over the ulnar nerve in right axilla—the nerve, with its sheath, is many times its normal size.

"Pupils of eyes 4½ millimeters in size, but little affected by strong reflected light; atrophy of disks, pale retina (spinal amourosis); vision is indefinite, tests do not apply; he sees very well for all his purposes, however. No increase of cardiac dullness, but by reason of the palsy agitans we can not differentiate any of the cardiac sounds. The body is in a constant tremor. Claimant was nude while being examined, and the examination was long and careful. Employed all needed tests, such as æsthesiometer, dynanometer, electrical tests (in three forms), opthalmoscope, etc.

"Claimant has lost an arm above the elbow; a bad stump with diseased bone and extensive muscular atrophy remain, results of the original gunshot wound; ascending neural sclerosis as shown by the condition of ulnar nerve in the axilla. The condition of the spine and all nerves emanating therefrom is shown by the palsy agitans and the amourosis.

"This condition of the eyes may be due to either meningeal thickening at base of brain, or the disease of spine may thus affect the retina through the sympathetic, or both. The loss of coordinating power is very marked. Claimant, by reason of this, is totally unable to walk or stand alone (eyes open or shut); he can not dress or undress himself or cut up his food. He reaches his mouth by making an effort, working along till he reaches it. Claimant is so totally and permanently helpless from result of gunshot wound affecting spine and nervous system that he requires the personal aid and attention of another person for a larger portion of the time and for nearly all purposes. Rate, total first grade, $72 per month."

The Pension Bureau refuses to accept the paralysis agitans and amourosis as result of the gunshot wound, notwithstanding the ample medical testimony by those who had the soldier before them from time to time and made careful and painstaking examination.

Your committee place more reliance on the medical testimony showing the deplorable condition of this old veteran than upon the action of the Pension Office, and therefore urgently recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

HELEN M. MALLERY.

The next business was the bill (S. 724) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Mallery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Helen M. Mallery, widow of Garrick Mallery, late captain and brevet lieutenant-colonel, United States Army, and lieutenant-colonel Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry and brevet colonel, United States Volunteers, to $50 per month, and pay her a pension hereafter at that rate.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 724) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Mallery, having carefully examined the evidence presented, report as follows:

Her late husband, Garrick Mallery, entered the Army as captain in the Seventy-first Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry June 4, 1861, and served in that regiment until February 16, 1863, when he was promoted lieutenant-colonel of Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and served as such to June 15, 1864, when he became lieutenant-colonel in the Veteran Reserve Corps, and served in that capacity until appointed a captain in the Thirteenth United States Infantry, to date from July 28, 1866. He was retired with the rank of captain July 1, 1870, on account of wounds received at the battle of Peach Orchard, Virginia. He was brevetted colonel of volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the war, and major and lieutenant-colonel in the Regular Army for gallant services in a skirmish at Garnett's Farm and in the battle of Peach Orchard, Virginia.

He was engaged in actions at Lewinsville, Munsons Hill, Falls Church, Balls Bluff, Fair Oaks, Seven Pines, and at Savage Station, where he was taken prisoner, having received two severe wounds, and left on the field, from whence he was taken to Libby Prison at Richmond, Va. The effects of these wounds and the privations of Libby Prison reduced Colonel Mallery to such extremity that his life was despaired of, when he was exchanged and sent to Philadelphia, Pa., where he was restored to comfortable health, though never again a well man.

The interest taken in this young officer by the great War Secretary is shown by the accompanying letter, sent to him at the time of his exchange.

He was honorably mentioned in the records of the rebellion in the report of the Seven Days Fight, and his services were conspicuous, not only for his gallantry in battle, but for his marked ability as an executive officer. He died October 24, 1894, from diseases contracted in the service.

The beneficiary of this bill is entirely without income for her support, except the pension which she is now receiving, of $30 per month. She is a lady of high culture and refinement, but broken down in health and unable to engage in any occupation for her support. She has no relatives to whom she can turn for aid, hence the urgent need of the relief proposed by this bill, the passage of which is earnestly recommended by your committee.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, D. C., July 23, 1862.

Capt. Garrick Mallery, Seventy-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, has leave of absence for thirty days, with privilege of returning to his home, for the restoration of his health.

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Indorsed: Paid for May and June, 1862. David Taggart, paymaster, U. S. A.

DEAR SIR: I inclose with the above furlough $100 of my own private funds to enable you to get home comfortably, as I understand from Mr. Nidi that you are short. You can replace it at your convenience. Congratulating you on your safety and honorable service, with respects to your father, with whom I have the pleasure of an acquaintance,

I am, yours, truly,

EDWIN M. STANTON.

A true copy.

A. W. SULLY, Surgeon, U. S. A.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

PRICILLA R. BURNS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5938) for the relief of Pricilla R. Burns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Pricilla R. Burns, widow of the late Gen. William W. Burns, of the United States Army, on the pension roll at the rate of $75 per month, in lieu of the amount she now receives.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "General" and insert "Brigadier-General."

In line 7 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty"; so as to make the pension $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5938) for the relief of Pricilla R. Burns, submit the following report:

Pricilla R. Burns is the widow of Brig. Gen. William W. Burns. The bill as introduced gave her a pension of $75 per month.

Her husband had an especially meritorious military career, and he received several brevets and many testimonials for his gallant services in the war of the rebellion.

He commanded a company in the war with Mexico and a brigade in the Shenandoah Valley and a division in the Rappahannock campaign in the late war.

At the battle of Savages Station General Burns was severely wounded in the face, but notwithstanding his wound he continued in the field in command until the enemy had been repulsed and the battle was over. For his gallant and meritorious conduct on this field he was recommended by Major-General Sedgwick for appointment as major-general of volunteers.

The following letters are appended:

"Brig. Gen. L. THOMAS,

"Adjutant-General United States Army, Washington, D. C.:

"I have the honor to present to the honorable Secretary of War for his consideration the name of Brig. Gen. W. W. Burns for the appointment of major-general of volunteers. General Burns commanded a brigade in my division at the siege of Yorktown, the affair at West Point, and the battles of Fair Oaks and Allyns Farm. At the battle of Savages Station he commanded at the point of attack and handsomely repulsed the enemy, receiving a severe wound in the face. On the next day at the battle of Glendale he was warmly engaged. At these two engagements I consider his services were brilliant and well merit promotion.

* * * * * * *

"JOHN SEDGWICK,
Major-General Volunteers.

"I very cordially agree with General Sedgwick in his recommendation. I have known General Burns well, and know he has fairly earned his promotion.

"E. V. SUMNER, Commanding Corps."

"As the commander of the Army of the Potomac during the period referred to in the preceding letters, I feel it a pleasure as well as a duty to bear testimony to the worth of General Burns and the value of his services. General Sumner in his indorsement, and General Sedgwick in his report of July 5 and letter of July 6, 1862, have not overrated the importance of the services rendered by General Burns during the period from June 29 to July 2, 1862. General Burns was severely wounded on the 29th, but nevertheless, retained his command. The conduct of General Burns at Savages Station and at Glendale on the 29th and 30th was something more than that display of gallantry which every brigadier commander ought to possess. In both instances the successes achieved were against large odds and (especially in the latter case) under very trying circumstances, and one of vital importance to the success of the movement then in progress. During the entire period that General Burns served in the Army of the Potomac under my command his services were eminently satisfactory, as they also were on my staff in western Virginia.

"GEORGE B. McCLELLAN."

Mrs. Burns is poor and without other means of support than her pension of $30 per month.

The committee recommend the following amendments, and that as amended the bill do pass:

Amendments: In line 5, before the word "General," insert "Brigadier," and in line 6 strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. TALBERT. I move to amend this bill by striking out "$75" and inserting "$50."

The SPEAKER. That is the pending amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

WILLIAM LORING SPENCER.

The next business was the bill (S. 1699) for the relief of William Loring Spencer.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that this bill may be passed over. A House bill for the relief of Mrs. Spencer has already been passed by the Committee of the Whole and is now on the Calendar as unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this bill will be passed over informally.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I object. I desire to have this bill disposed of.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Loring Spencer widow of George E. Spencer, late colonel First Regiment Alabama Cavalry, at the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "thirty," so as to make the pension $30 a month.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, when the House bill corresponding to this was up for consideration the other day the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs insinuated that the statements made with reference to the physical condition of Mrs. Spencer were not true. Since that time I have at considerable trouble obtained certificates from physicians and from other sources corroborative of those statements—showing, indeed, that many of the statements then made were not as strong as they should have been. I will first read the doctor's certificate:

WINNEMUCCA, NEV., May 7, 1896.

I hereby certify that Mrs. W. Loring Spencer is suffering from angina pectoris and chronic pen paralysis.

H. HAGAR, M. D.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of May, 1896, by H. Hagar, who is a practicing physician in the town of Winnemucca, Humboldt County, Nev.

[SEAL.] L. F. DUNN,
County Clerk and ex officio Clerk of the Second Judicial District Court of Nevada, in and for Humboldt County.

I also call attention to the following:

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., May 11, 1896.

U. H. PAINTER, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am sorry that I did not see you when you called at my committee room this afternoon.

You ask me to say a kind word about General Dodge. I have known him for more than thirty years. He entered the military service at the beginning of the war and continued to the end, being a major at the beginning and a major-general at the end. He was one of the most trusted corps commanders under General Grant in the Western Army. He is a man of splendid judgment, accurate observation, and always knows what he is talking about, and is truthful in every statement he makes. So, if he has made any statement as respects the military record of any one, I should regard it as a valuable statement for the purpose he may have in view.

Very truly, yours,

W. B. ALLISON.

Knowing General Dodge intimately, I earnestly concur in all of the foregoing.

D. B. HENDERSON.

We all know who HENDERSON is and who ALLISON is.

I have known Gen. G. M. Dodge over thirty years. He is one of Iowa's most foremost men, and any statement made by him would be considered by those who know him to be true. He is a man of high sense of honor and a personal friend.

JOHN W. GEAR.

We know who GEAR is.

I ask attention also to the following:

No. 1 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, May 12, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of May 11 in relation to Gen. George E. Spencer, I do not see how I can write anything stronger than in my letter dated St. Louis, May 9, 1865, where I recommended him for promotion to the rank of brigadier-general.

On my staff he took part in all the engagements which my command was in up to Kenesaw Mountain, and you will find him mentioned in my official report with proper credit.

Whilst in command of the Alabama cavalry, in the District of Corinth, he took part in several noted raids, and no doubt his official reports of this are on file.

When he left me in June, 1864, to resume command of his regiment, he fell under the direct command of General Van Dever, at Rome, Ga., a detached portion of my corps. After that he fell directly under the command of General Sherman and took part in all the engagements up to the Carolinas, commanding a brigade in Kilpatrick's division, and whatever battles he took part in while in that division no doubt his official reports will show.

There is no doubt as to General Spencer's standing as an officer, his courage, and the ability with which he handled his men on the battlefield.

He had good judgment, and was an officer that great discretion could be given when sent with orders. In addition to this, during the time I held the country and protected Grant's flank in the Vicksburg campaign, General Spencer was sent with some very important communications to the enemy, penetrating far into their lines and territory. He also was with me when I made the campaign to Bragg's rear, destroying his supplies in the Tennessee Valley. He performed all these duties with great credit, never failing to accomplish what he was sent for.

I am, truly, yours,

G. M. DODGE.

U. H. PAINTER, Esq., Washington, D. C.

Now, in view of these corroborative proofs I ask that the Senate bill be passed without the amendment of the House committee. We ask the paltry amount of $75 a month for the widow of General Spencer, who for twelve years served his State in the United States Senate and who for gallantry upon the field of battle was brevetted a major-general. We ask simply for $75 a month. Over and over again we have seen instances where this amount has been given in this House to the widows of undistinguished and unknown men. I ask for the destitute widow of General Spencer simple justice.

Mr. CROWTHER. I wish to say in reply to my friend from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] that we are proposing to pension the widow not of General Spencer but of Colonel Spencer, for the rank of colonel was the highest he ever attained during the war. Nor are we engaged in pensioning ex-Senators of the United States or their widows. We are proposing to pension the widow of Colonel Spencer at the highest figure that the law allows in such cases—$30 a month. A House bill granting that amount has been passed. The committee have carefully considered this question, and they have unanimously recommended that this Senate bill be reduced in amount from $75 to $30 a month, which is what the law would give her if she could prove that her husband's death originated from army service.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, in this case, though it may be true that the highest actual rank held by General Spencer was that of colonel, yet it is not by any means true that the committee or the House has confined the rate allowed on pensions to that fixed by the law.

Here is one of those meritorious cases where this widow should receive such a pension as the committee has been accustomed to give the widows of other officers of like grade. I can not understand how the committee, in view of its other recommendations, should recommend the cutting down of this pension to $30 a month. At least there should have been $50 to make it at all commensurate with what the committee has very frequently done in other cases, and at the proper time I shall move to strike out "thirty," if that amendment of the committee is insisted upon, and insert "fifty."

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move, as a substitute for the pending amendment, that the Senate bill lie on the table. The House bill has been passed for the same beneficiary.

Mr. DINGLEY. The motion should be, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that such action be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that the committee recommend that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point of order that that can not be done. It can not be laid on the table in committee.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the parliamentary status of the bill now? Will the Chair be kind enough to explain?

The CHAIRMAN. The only question is with reference to this bill. It is a Senate bill——

Mr. PICKLER. But this same bill, or a bill pensioning the same party, passed the committee last week and is among the unfinished business yet on the Calendar. This bill or the other bill ought to lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the other was a House bill. This is a Senate bill. But it is competent for this committee to recommend either or both favorably or otherwise.

Mr. CROWTHER. In order to facilitate the granting of pension to this party, I will withdraw my motion to recommend that it lie on the table and let the bill of the Senate be passed with the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. The House passed the bill for $30 a month the other day.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I do not understand whether this is a bill for General Spencer or his widow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to give any other information than that appearing in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Gentlemen are talking of a pension to a widow in this case, but on the Calendar it seems to be a pension for General Spencer himself.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The name given in the title of the bill is the name of this lady herself.

Mr. MILNES. I move that that part of the bill be read again, to see who is the beneficiary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection; and the bill was again reported.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty."

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I accept that amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 46.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chairman announced the appointment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire and Mr. PICKLER as tellers.

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire is to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty." Now all of those voting in favor of that amendment express themselves in favor of fixing $50 by the House as against the rule fixed in the Senate, whereas those who vote against it are practically in favor of $75 a month pension in these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only state that the amendment of the committee is to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "thirty," to which the gentleman from New Hampshire moves an amendment by striking out the amendment proposed by the committee—that is, "thirty"—and inserting "fifty."

Mr. TALBERT. Exactly; and if we do not get the fifty we will have to take the seventy-five.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 43.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the amended bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILNES. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILNES. If I understood the bill when it was read a moment or two ago it was to pension "William" Somebody. I understand the object is to pension a widow——

Mr. WHEELER. That is her name—William Loring Spencer.

Mr. BARRETT. That is her correct name.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only state what the bill contains.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend that the House bill lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the House bill has been reported to the House. Under those circumstances the committee would have no jurisdiction, and the motion would be out of order.

Mr. PICKLER. I thought it was in the committee, but I believe it has been reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALEXANDER C. MORRISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6552) granting increase of pension to Alexander C. Morrison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Alexander C. Morrison, late a corporal in Company E, Fourth Iowa Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6552) granting increase of pension to Alexander C. Morrison, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

The soldier enlisted September 23, 1861, in Company E, Fourth Iowa Cavalry, and was honorably discharged August 8, 1865.

The records show that from December 9, 1864, to June 16, 1865, he was in hospital under treatment for injury to leg, diarrhea, and other complications, incurred and contracted in line of duty.

October 3, 1870, he was pensioned at $2; March 30, 1880, increased to $4; December 1, 1881, to $6; July 22, 1885, to $8; June 13, 1888, to $17.

The gradual aggravation of claimant's disabilities during this time is indicated by the reports of the examining boards, as follows:

February 1, 1878, one-half total; March 30, 1880, "a difficult case to rate"; December 1, 1881, three-fourths total; July 22, 1885, total; June 14, 1888, sixteen-eighteenths.

In 1890 he filed an increase claim, alleging disease of eyes, scurvy, piles, deafness, and general debility, in addition to injury to leg, varicose veins, and ulcers.

January 6, 1892, the examining board rates him thus: Injury and ulceration of left leg, ten-eighteenths; varicose veins, four-eighteenths; deafness, six-eighteenths; scurvy, two-eighteenths; piles, two-eighteenths.

February 16, 1894, the claim was approved for disease of eyes, deafness, piles, scurvy and results, the examiner saying:

"Disease of eyes, piles, and impaired hearing of botn ears can not be rejected on medical grounds."

The medical referee, however, found other grounds on which to disallow the claim, and uses this language:

"Injury to left leg and resulting varicose veins and ulcers, seventeen-eighteenths; no increase. Piles, four-eighteenths—rate for combined disabilities not to exceed seventeen-eighteenths. Reject claim for disease of eyes and deafness; no ratable disability since filing."

The rating for scurvy and results seems to have been lost sight of entirely.

Claimant is 60 years of age, and the medical and lay evidence on file in the Pension Bureau shows that he has been for several years and is now totally disabled.

Your committee believe that the soldier is justly entitled to $30 per month, and therefore respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the action which the committee has just taken in regard to the pensioning of generals' widows. I want to state in behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I want it understood, that this Committee of the Whole on last Wednesday and to-day have repeatedly and persistently put up the amounts recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in pensioning generals' widows. Last week the bill to pension Mrs. Spencer passed the Committee of the Whole at $30 on the recommendation of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. To-day this Committee of the Whole disregard that recommendation and pass the same bill at $50. And so in regard to other bills. I do not refer particularly to the case of Mrs. Spencer, but I am speaking generally on the subject. The Committee on Invalid Pensions were criticised early in the session for reporting bills which were alleged to be for large amounts; but I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that the Committee of the Whole is persistently going above the recommendations of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the cases of brigadier-generals and major-generals. I hope that the Committee on Invalid Pensions will not be criticised hereafter by anybody on this floor in that regard.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. PICKLER. It seems in every case, as I stated here the other evening, that when a bill comes from a State in which gentlemen reside they forget all about the theory which they advocate as to other bills. I merely desire to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions are proving to be the conservative body connected with this House, and that this Committee of the Whole are voting up and increasing the recommendations of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the case of generals and generals' widows.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to second the motion of the gentleman in his endeavor to establish a uniform rate of pensions for officers and officers' widows. I have gone hand in hand with the gentleman in that respect; but I want to say that I have failed to control the Democratic party on this side of the House, who rush through like stall-fed horses and vote for $75 and $100 every time when $50 is proposed. I will do all I can to help the gentleman, but I can not control the boys on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee, and of the country as well, to the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. PICKLER] voted to disregard the action of the committee in reducing the pension of Mrs. Spencer from $75 to $30 per month and to put it up to $50.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He is mistaken. I did not do any such thing. The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended that bill at $30 a month.

Mr. WOOD. And the gentleman got up and accepted an amendment providing $50.

Mr. PICKLER. No; we cut the Senate bill down to $30.

Mr. WOOD. I understand that, but I am speaking of what occurred here on the floor.

Mr. PICKLER. I would not misrepresent the committee.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GIDEON L. M'GINNIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6549) granting a pension to Gideon L. McGinnis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Gideon L. McGinnis, late of Company K, Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended inserting in line 5, after the word "late," the words "a private."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6549) granting a pension to Gideon L. McGinnis, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

Claimant enlisted April 1, 1862, in Company D, Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry, and was honorably discharged April 4, 1865.

He applied for pension under the old law, alleging diarrhea, piles, and rheumatism contracted in line of duty. His allegation as to origin is substantiated by the testimony of one comrade, and the records report him sick during July and August, 1862, and show that he was in hospital under treatment for fever and dysentery in August and October, 1864. Continuance of disability is satisfactorily proved down to the year 1870, after which time and until about 1885 the claimant did not reside long enough at any one place to allow acquaintances to gain a knowledge of his infirmities.

December 17, 1890, the examining board gives him a rating of sixteen-eighteenths.

He is now drawing a pension of $12 under the act of June 27, 1890.

Since his last examination his disabilities have greatly increased, and the affidavits of several neighbors show him to be a man of good habits, worthy of belief, almost destitute, and totally disabled at the present time. If he could prove continuance he would undoubtedly be entitled to $30 per month, and in view of all the facts your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 5, after the word "late," insert "a private."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee of the Whole House will be admonished by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions not to interfere with the reports of that committee. The fact about it is, I do not know why this Committee of the Whole is here. I do not know any earthly use that it fills. There is no demand for it that I know of. The Committee on Invalid Pensions alone is quite sufficient to do this business, I find. In point of fact, if I had my way about it, I would leave the whole subject to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. PICKLER. You would do well. I am always here, and that is more than the gentleman from Ohio can say.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; one of the most efficient men on earth is the chairman of that committee. I know it, for he has admitted it to me [laughter], and admissions are competent proof in cases of that character.

Mr. PICKLER. They ought to be.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman admits that he is always here, and now he reprimands the boys for undertaking to have a voice in this matter. I advise that hereafter there be no interference with the reports of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. They understand it, and you do not know anything about it. Now, let us go ahead and get this thing through as fast as we can. I want to get to some bills a good deal farther down on the Calendar than we are now.

Mr. PICKLER. You are in favor of going above the recommendations of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the cases of generals.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I am opposed to any interference with the reports of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Ohio is a great deal better on blackboard exercises than he is on pensions. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2281) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892;

A bill (S. 2918) granting a pension of $20 a month to Nettie A. Cheeks;

A bill (S. 2859) changing the time for holding circuit court of the United States at Hartford, in the district of Connecticut;

A bill (S. 1833) to amend the act of March 1, 1895, and other acts relating to the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (S. Res. 135) providing for the appointment of a commission to report upon the practicability of establishing near Washington, D. C., a ground map of the United States; and

A bill (S. 2237) providing for the appointment of a guardian for pensioners in certain cases in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. 5379) making it unlawful to shoot at or into any railway locomotive or car, or at any person thereon, or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation, in said State, as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7671) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to U. S. Grant Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, Ind., Department of Indiana;

A bill (H. R. 8012) donating one condemned cannon and balls to Grand Army of the Republic post of Sparta, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 5217) making one year's residence in a Territory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there;

A bill (H. R. 6298) to correct military record of Charles K. Jenree, etc.;

A bill (H. R. 6833) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures in use in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7161) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6836) to amend section 2981 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of June 10, 1880.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House, in compliance with its request, its resolution agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 3279) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. MCMILLAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8260) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan, asked a conference on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. MCMILLAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, asked a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. JONES of Nevada as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The committee again resumed its session.

SARAH A. STACEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6046) granting a pension to Mary A. Stacey, dependent mother of Manley T. Stacey, late private Company D, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States at the rate now authorized to be paid to pensioners of a similar class the name of Mary A. Stacey, dependent mother of Manley T. Stacey, late a private of Company D, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "Mary" and inserting the word "Sarah"; also to change the title in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, strike out the word "Mary" and insert the word "Sarah"; so as to read "Sarah A. Stacey."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman, I can state briefly the contents of the report, if I may be permitted to do so. The bill proposes to pension Sarah A. Stacey as the dependent mother of Manley T. Stacey, who was accidentally killed while in the Army. He was accidentally shot, and the Pension Office decided that it was not in the line of duty. The fact is that he and several comrades were scuffling, and in the course of the scuffle they picked up a revolver that was supposed to be empty, and one of the boys pointed the revolver at this man and fired. The result was that he was instantly killed. The Pension Office can not grant a pension to the woman on that ground. She is now about 70 years old and very poor. The bill is a very meritorious one, and I hope there will be no opposition.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6046) to pension Mary A. Stacey, after duly considering the same, together with the evidence submitted in support thereof, respectfully report as follows:

Manley T. Stacey enlisted August 6, 1862, in Company D, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers, and died in the regimental hospital at or near Brandy Station, Va., on the 6th day of December, 1863.

On the latter date he, with two of his comrades, was in the tent of their captain, and one of the party, Catlin by name, picked up an old revolver and began playfully snapping it at young Stacey. Unknown to Catlin, one of the chambers of the revolver was loaded and the charge exploded, the bullet lodging in the brain of young Stacey, who died in less than half an hour thereafter. The only persons who were actual witnesses of the accident were Charles M. Catlin and Luther Rogers, the latter now deceased.

The evidence as to the circumstances attending the accident varies in some particulars, but in the main is very plain and convincing.

In a letter to his wife, written at the date of the accident and published in the Lyons (N. Y.) Republican of January 1, 1864, Capt. Sebastian Holmes, of Company D, One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers, says:

"Only a few moments since Sergeants Catlin, Rogers, and Stacey were in my quarters chatting together, when Catlin picked up Lieutenant Green's revolver (which he did not know was loaded) and went to snapping it. There happened to be two loads in it and one of them went off, the ball hitting Stacey in the corner of his eye, killing him almost instantly."

In an affidavit made in January last he says he was not present at the time of the accident, but was in a tent just in rear; that as reported to him at the time by those present, Stacey was blacking his boots at the time when Catlin fired the revolver.

Charles M. Catlin, when examined by a special examiner of the Bureau of Pensions, November 29, 1895, said that he and Rogers and Stacey were in the quarters of Lieutenant Green; that they were fooling with each other; that they found an old revolver; that he can not tell who handled the revolver first, but thinks they all had hold of it; that they were fooling with each other; that he could not tell how many times he snapped the revolver at Stacey before it went off; that both Captain Holmes and Lieutenant Green were on the scene within a few moments of the accident.

Lieutenant Green, examined in November, 1895, testified that he heard the shot fired and ran to the scene of the accident immediately; that he heard at the time from those present that Catlin and Rogers had been fooling with firearms; that he never heard that Stacey had any in his hands; that the only firearms in the tent were his [Lieutenant Green's] revolver and Rogers's musket; that Catlin got the revolver down and began snapping it at Stacey; that Stacey would each time the revolver was snapped at him fall and pretend he was hit, until finally Catlin came to the loaded chamber and the revolver was fired, hitting Stacey in the forehead.

Sarah A. Stacey, the beneficiary named in this bill, is shown to be the dependent mother of the victim of this accident. She is 75 years of age and in feeble health. The special examiner who was detailed by the Pension Bureau to examine as to the question of her dependence reports as follows:

"They [Mrs. Stacey and her daughter] are in straitened circumstances, and are borrowing money of friends to live on. About all the income they have is what a poor, sickly daughter can earn by teaching music."

In 1893 Mrs. Stacey filed her claim with the Pension Bureau, and after exhausting her ability to furnish further testimony submitted her case. Her claim was rejected upon the ground that the soldier's death did not occur in the line of duty.

Your committee are of the opinion that the circumstances of this case are of such a character as to warrant the intervention of Congress for the relief of this widowed mother. The evidence clearly shows that the victim of this distressing accident was wholly blameless. There is no evidence tending to show that this party of comrades were wrongfully in the tent of their captain; indeed, it appears from the evidence that one of the party (Rogers) tented with Captain Holmes. Nor does it appear that Stacey was violating any order or military regulation at the time he was shot, but was presumably conducting himself as a soldier not on duty might properly conduct himself. The evidence does not bear out the conclusion that he in any way contributed to the negligence which was the cause of his death.

Your committee therefore respectfully recommend that this bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVE M. LEWIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6472) granting a pension to Olive M. Lewis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Olive M. Lewis, widow of John B. Knight, late of Company C, Second New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 dollars per month.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6472) granting a pension of $12 per month to Olive M. Lewis, as widow of John B. Knight, late of Company C, Second New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, having examined and fully considered all the facts and circumstances in evidence, respectfully report as follows:

John B. Knight enlisted as corporal, Company C, Second New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, May 27, 1861, and died in hospital at Philadelphia, Pa., September 3, 1862, from dysentery contracted in service. He had been previously married, and three children, Edward L., born September 23, 1850; Ida M., born July 20, 1852, and Sarah, born November 17, 1854, were the fruits of this prior marriage. His first wife died September 7, 1858.

He was married to the claimant December 20, 1861, by whom he had no children, but claimant brought up, cared for, and educated his children by the previous marriage of her husband.

Her stepson, Edward L. Knight, enlisted in the United States Navy, on U. S. S. Portsmouth, March 16, 1865, and faithfully served until July 16, 1870, when he was honorably discharged. He was sick at date of discharge with chronic disease of lungs, contracted while in the service, and speedily became more weak and helpless, and died with consumption on September 28, 1870, about two months after discharge.

Applicant applied for pension as dependent upon this stepson, Edward L. Knight, who had recognized his obligation to contribute to her support and maintenance, on July 26, 1890, under the act of June 27, 1890; but the claim was rejected February 16, 1893, on the ground that she was not the mother of the soldier.

She is now 62 years of age, in destitute circumstances, having cared for, brought up, and educated her husband's children (including her stepson, Edward L. Knight, kindly laboring for him in his last illness, contracted while he was in the service) until they could care for themselves.

Your committee believe she should be pensioned, and recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "Lewis," in the fifth line, and adding in lieu thereof the following: "Dependent stepmother of Edward L. Knight, late of the U. S. S. Portsmouth, of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $12 per month," and as so amended urgently favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is an entirely new departure. This is to grant a pension in the interest of a stepmother. I do not think there is any precedent for it; and if this House passes this bill it will be establishing a precedent, so that stepmothers can come in and draw pensions.

Mr. PICKLER. That has always been the case, let me say to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. I will ask the gentleman if that has been done before?

Mr. PICKLER. If the stepmother had the care of the child, and the boy then became a soldier, pension has been granted.

Mr. TALBERT. Is there any precedent?

Mr. PICKLER. If in the early years of the child's life she takes the place of a mother, Congress has time and again granted a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. But the precedent is by a special bill.

Mr. PICKLER. It is by special bill.

Mr. TALBERT. There is nothing in the general law that allows this.

Mr. PICKLER. There is nothing in the general law that allows it.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I am only asking for information, Why does she not draw a pension as the widow of her husband?

Mr. PICKLER. This is the case of a stepmother. Her husband was not a soldier. It was her stepson that was the soldier. The boy she took when a child went into the service.

Mr. TALBERT. Then this is a case of step all around, is it?

Mr. PICKLER. It is the case of a stepmother. The soldier was a stepson.

Mr. TALBERT. They propose to step into a pension?

Mr. ERDMAN. Allow me to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that John B. Knight was the husband of this woman and he enlisted as corporal in Company C of the Second New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, and died from dysentery contracted in the service. The stepson, Edward L. Knight, is the one on account of whose service she is asking for a pension. Why not pension her as the widow of the husband instead of as the stepmother of a stepson?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know.

Mr. ERDMAN. Is she going to draw two pensions?

Mr. PICKLER. No; she is not drawing a pension.

Mr. LOUD (to Mr. ERDMAN). Probably she remarried.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I am informed by the clerk of the committee that she remarried.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOSIAH P. BRADBURY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5852) to increase the pension of Josiah P. Bradbury.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to increase the pension of Josiah P. Bradbury, late private in Company M, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and pay him at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension now paid him by certificate No. 65366.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I will move that the committee rise at fifteen minutes past 5, and then move that the House adjourn.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5852) to increase the pension of Josiah P. Bradbury, having very carefully considered the evidence on file here, as well as the Pension Office papers, report as follows:

This soldier served in Company B, Eleventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, from September 18, 1861, to April 10, 1863, when he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability, which shows that he was incapable of performing the duties of a soldier, because of—

"Exposure to malaria at Helena, Ark., in August, 1862, in consequence of which he has dysentery and intermittent fever, which first has become chronic, still continues, and is incurable (in the Army). He is otherwise physically incompetent for the duties of a soldier. He again enlisted January 2, 1864, this time in Company M, First Maine Volunteer Home Guards, and was again discharged for disability September 20, 1865, on account of a wound received in battle before Petersburg, June 18, 1864: ball passed through right leg just below the knee transversely. Necrosis and much lameness have resulted. Unfit for the Veteran Reserve Corps. Degree of disability, three-fourths.

"Soldier is pensioned at $17 for gunshot wound of right knee and malarial poisoning. Certificate of medical examination by board of United States examining surgeons, made on June 5, 1865, shows: Right knee, extension complete; flexion not possible beyond a right angle. Has depressed, adherent, very tender cicatrix (depression, three-fourths inch below general surface); inner side head of tibia, one-half inch by 2½ inches, showing recent scab of oozing pus. Right patella movable, irregular in conformation, with distinct separation of old fracture lines; depressions about one-fourth inch wide. Right leg also a mass of varices; very few varices on left leg. Uses crutches constantly. It is our opinion that claimant is disabled as result of this injury equivalent to the loss of the leg at the knee joint, the varices increasing the amount of suffering to such an extent that labor is impossible, while the appearance of the cicatrix is of angry recurrences of necrotic processes."

It is apparent from this description that the soldier is in a worse condition and more disabled than if his right leg were amputated below the knee, and as this condition is found to be due to the wound for which he is pensioned by the board of surgeons, who had the man before them and had a chance to see for themselves just how he is affected, your committee are inclined to be governed by their judgment rather than by that of the medical referee of the Pension Office, who has not seen the soldier, especially as the finding of the local board is corroborated by other medical evidence showing that claimant is wholly disabled for manual labor, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JENNIE E. MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6247) to grant a pension to Miss Jennie E. Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Miss Jennie E. Moore, orphan, invalid daughter of Charles E. Moore, late of Company K, Twenty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Lovina J. Moore, his wife, now both dead, and grant her a pension of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6247) to grant a pension to Miss Jennie E. Moore, submit the following report.

The evidence in this case shows that Charles E. Moore, private, Company K, Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteers, was enlisted June 1, 1861, and discharged March 31, 1863, for disability. Kind of disability not shown by the record. He does not appear to have drawn any pension. He died February 22, 1873, from inflammatory rheumatism and chronic diarrhea.

Lavinia J. Moore, mother of claimant, was legally married to soldier March 2, 1869. The claimant was born January 2, 1873. Lavinia J. Moore, the mother, was pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, at $8 per month from May 15, 1891. She was adjudged insane December 18, 1894, a conservator appointed for her, and she died in insane hospital at Kankakee, Ill., March 1, 1895. Her pension was drawn by conservator to January 4, 1896.

No person whatever is, or has been since widow's death, drawing a pension on account of this soldier.

Jennie E. Moore is the only child by this marriage. She has no means or property or income whatever. By reason of rheumatism, the outgrowth of typhoid fever, she is a helpless invalid, requiring the constant attention of a nurse. Since January, 1887, she has not been able to sit up, even in bed. Spinal disease has resulted, and she has only the use of her arms, hands, and head, and can only be moved upon a sheet. She lives with her grandparents, old people, aged 75 and 73 years, respectively. She has two half brothers by the former marriage of her father. She is now living on charity. Nobody is legally bound to support her, or appears to be able to support her.

In view of these circumstances the committee recommend the passage of this bill with amendments, inserting after the word "orphan," in line 6, the words "permanently helpless," and in line 7, after the word "late," the word "private."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEWIS KEISER.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the objection which I made a while ago to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska for the consideration of a bill which he desired to call up.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 7740) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Keiser, of Hubbell, Nebr.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. HICKS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CATHERINE DILLON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 148) granting a pension to Catherine Dillon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine Dillon, of Logansport, Ind., widow of Patrick Dillon, deceased, late a private of Company E, Ninth Regiment of Illinois Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 148) granting a pension to Catherine Dillon, submit the following report:

Patrick Dillon was a private soldier in Company E, Ninth Illinois Cavalry. He served from October 3, 1861, to February 9, 1864, without the loss of a day, so far as the record shows. He is presumed to have been a good soldier. There is nothing on record to the contrary during this time. He died while in the service, March 10, 1864, at regimental hospital, according to the record, from delirium tremens; according to other testimony, of fever brought on by excessive use of whisky.

His widow, the claimant, Catherine Dillon, is 66 years of age; was married to the soldier in 1845; she is without property and needy, and is supported by charity—in fact, is a county charge. She is not entitled to a pension under the general laws on the facts shown. The Commissioner of Pensions holds that death is not equivalent to an honorable discharge under act of June 27, 1890, and has rejected her claim.

The Senate committee are of opinion that soldier's death was "due to his military service." Your committee do not so believe, but do regard his nearly three years' faithful services and death as entitling his widow to a pension the same as if he had been "honorably discharged."

We therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I see that the report in this case states that the record shows that this soldier died of delirium tremens, and I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether it is the opinion of the committee that he contracted that disease in the service. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I do not profess to be a doctor. He died in the service, and his widow is now asking for this pension.

Mr. TALBERT. I suppose the gentleman from South Dakota, being a prohibitionist, does not know anything about matters of that kind, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD] is in charge of the bill, and I will ask him the question.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill, introduced by Senator TURPIE. There is nobody, I believe, on this floor who is specially interested in it. I have examined the evidence, and am prepared to tell this committee, in not more than two minutes, the whole case. The husband of this claimant was an Irishman. He loved his adopted country. For many months he had worn its uniform and followed the fortunes of its flag. He loved liberty, too. He was willing to risk his life that the poor and oppressed of another race might be free. During all the time he was in the service there is no record that he was absent a day from his command or that he missed a battle. He loved to fight, as is shown by the fact that he was always present when fighting was to be done. He had enlisted, and then he reenlisted to serve, not for three months or six months or a year, but during the war—until the last battle should be fought and peace should be restored.

I think it is fairly deducible from the evidence that he loved whisky. [Laughter.] If that be a sin, the Lord have mercy on some other Irishmen, and a good many Americans, and a few officers of high rank to whom previous Congresses have given pensions by special acts. [Laughter.] After serving two years or more, nearly his full time, he reenlisted as a veteran soldier. He served until a few days before his death. There is no reason to doubt that he got on "a bit of a spree" and was taken to the hospital where he died. His widow was married to him away back on the Old Sod in 1845. She was comparatively a young woman when he died, but she has remained true to his name and to his memory through all these long and dreary years. She has never remarried. She is now old and helpless and friendless, a county charge. She applied to the Commissioner of Pensions, but was told that the death of her husband in the Army after almost three years of faithful service was not an honorable discharge.

Mr. Chairman, the Power that planted in the breast of that poor Irishman the love of liberty and of country, and the love of combat as well, and permitted his frailties and imperfections, mustered him out of that service, and it hardly lies in the mouth of a petty officer of the great Government that he served so long and faithfully to pronounce that muster out or that discharge a dishonorable one; and while I do not know, I am just believing that the Great Disposer of all events has been more just and more merciful to poor Pat Dillon than the Commissioner of Pensions has been to his old widow. The facts are all before you, gentlemen. I believe that this House is entitled to all the facts of the case, and I have given them as they appear to me. This man served nearly three years honorably and faithfully, and I believe that his old and helpless widow ought to have this pension. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, of course it was a Republican Administration that refused this pension; for under the present rulings death in the service is held to be an honorable discharge where there has been a previous enlistment of thirty days. But as this Committee of the Whole has just voted to pension a servant girl as a quasi nurse, I do not think we ought to scruple at pensioning this widow, even if her husband did die of delirium tremens. She could not help it, poor woman. But it does grate a little to accept that as a disease of service origin. Still the responsibility, gentlemen, rests with you; and you are equal to it.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably.

WILLIAM GROSE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 515) granting a pension to William Grose.

Mr. PICKLER. It has been suggested to me that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] called this bill up and had it passed by unanimous consent ten days ago. I ask, therefore, that it be passed over for the present without losing any rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the bill has passed the House. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

LUE R. BROWN.

The next business was the bill (S. 1672) granting a pension to Lue R. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lue R. Brown, widow of the late William A. Brown, formerly first lieutenant and adjutant of the Sixth Indiana Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act; which pension shall be in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1672) granting a pension to Lue R. Brown, having carefully considered the same, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 130) as their own, and respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 130, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

It appears that William A. Brown was enrolled July 24, 1862, at Greencastle, Ind., for three years, and was mustered into service August 18, 1862, to date from July 24, 1862, as a private of Company C, Seventy-first Indiana Infantry, the designation of which regiment was subsequently changed to the Sixth Indiana Cavalry. He was promoted to be sergeant-major August 19, 1862, and to be first lieutenant and adjutant of the regiment to date from December 13, 1862. He was mustered out of service and honorably discharged while holding the grade of first lieutenant and adjutant, to date from July 27, 1865, having been rendered supernumerary by the consolidation of the regiment. He appears to have been present with his command or properly accounted for during the entire period of his service.

It further appears that he was appointed consul to San Juan del Norte, Nicaragua, in December of 1884, where he served until January of 1892. The severity of the climate of Nicaragua entirely destroyed his health, which was much impaired by exposure and a wound he received in the shoulder during the war; and when he returned to his home and family he was a complete physical wreck, requiring constant care and attention until his admission to the Hampton Military Home in the spring of 1892, where he was admitted in a deplorable physical condition, and where his shattered and broken health still further failed him until death relieved him of his sufferings February 18, 1895. Claimant receives a pension of $8 a month under the widows' pension act of June 27, 1890, but the amount is totally inadequate for the support of herself and her young daughter of 16 years, and her present needs are very pressing. In view of the long and honorable military services of her husband, and the utter destruction of his health and final loss of life in another branch of the Government service, claimant has been deprived of her only protection and support.

The following letter from Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, who personally knew the soldier and has knowledge of the petitioner and the facts in the case, is also submitted:

"JANUARY 24, 1896.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: I introduced a bill a day or two ago granting a pension of $25 a month to Mrs. Lue R. Brown. I knew the husband of this lady well and intimately; he was mayor of Greencastle, in my own State, at one time, and a man of high standing and character. He was as gallant and true a soldier as ever drew sword in defense of the Union during the late war, and was as modest in the discharge of his duty as he was brave and patriotic, and never sought in the plain discharge of his duty as a soldier any preferment or advancement to which his services did not justly entitle him. He was among the first to respond to the call to arms, having enlisted as a private in the Seventy-first Indiana Volunteers as early as August 28, 1862, and served continuously throughout the entire war, and was finally mustered out as first lieutenant and adjutant July 27, 1865. His rapid promotion from the ranks shortly after his enlistment to the grade of first lieutenant was but a small recognition of his worth and merit. He was subsequently assigned to duty as adjutant of his regiment, the Sixth Indiana Cavalry, which had been formed from the Seventy-first Regiment of Volunteers. The history of the services performed by that regiment are too familiar for me to undertake to rehearse here.

"I can not speak too strongly of this gentleman, for he was my friend and I knew him intimately. That he was mustered out with no higher grade than that of first lieutenant and adjutant of his regiment should not militate in any way against the claim of his widow for the amount of the pension for which she now applies; for had her husband been advanced in grade commensurate with his bravery, patriotism, and ability, his death would have entitled his widow to a pension of at least $30 a month. He was never absent from his command during the entire period of the war, as his record will show, and some recognition of such fidelity could well be shown his widow now in her need. Mr. Brown was appointed United States consul to Greytown, in Nicaragua, in December, 1884, and served there until January of 1892. The exposure and hardships of the war, together with a severe wound he received in the shoulder, had greatly impaired his health, and the severity of the climate of Nicaragua completed its wreck. He was in a most deplorable condition when he came back from there, and in the spring of 1892 was admitted to the Hampton Military Home, where he subsequently died, in February, 1895. I can conceive of no more meritorious or deserving case than this; his widow has been left in an absolutely destitute condition, with a daughter 16 years of age and the mere pittance she now receives under the widows' pension act of June 27, 1890, of $8 per month.

"I feel constrained to add that I have a strong conviction in my own mind, arising from my intimate personal relations with Adjutant Brown, that his breakdown in health and his premature death were due to the injuries and exposures he incurred in the line of duty while in the Army more than to all other causes combined.

"With great respect, I am, very truly, yours,

"D. W. VOORHEES.

"Hon. J. H. GALLINGER."

In view of all the facts in the case your committee recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

GREENVILLE PUCKETT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5880) granting an increase of pension to Greenville Puckett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Greenville Puckett, late a corporal in Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry, upon the pension rolls, with an increase of pension to $72 per month.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5880) granting an increase of pension to Greenville Puckett, having given the matter careful consideration, report:

This soldier served in Company D, Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, from September 7, 1863, to December 24, 1864, when he was honorably discharged. While in the service he contracted chronic diarrhea, for which he has been pensioned as of service origin. He is now pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, for chronic diarrhea and partial paralysis. He filed a claim under the general law for paralysis as a result of chronic diarrhea, but the medical officers of the Pension Office decline to accept it as a pathological result, and therefore the claim was rejected.

Examination by a board of pension surgeons in 1890 showed that soldier was then totally disabled and required constant aid and attendance, entitling him to a first-grade rating of $72 per month for chronic diarrhea and paralysis. Another examination, made in August, 1891, shows a similar condition arising from the same causes.

The evidence presented to this committee shows that the soldier is now in a state of utter helplessness and in absolute destitution.

In view of this and the fact there appears no other cause for the paralysis than the chronic diarrhea which has been sapping his vitality for over thirty years, in spite of the fact that the medical officers fail to see the pathological connection, this committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

ELISE BLENKER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4410) to increase the pension of Elise Blenker from $30 to $50.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Elise Blenker, widow of Gen. Louis Blenker, late brigadier-general of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $30 per month to $50 per month, and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place her name on the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4410) to increase the pension of Elise Blenker from $30 to $50, submit the following report:

This bill gives to Elise Blenker a pension of $50 per month as the widow of Brig. Gen. Louis Blenker. General Blenker entered the war of the rebellion at the beginning of hostilities and served until the battle of Cross Keys, where he was injured by a fall of his horse. His injury was wholly disabling, rendering him unfit for further military duty, and caused his death in September, 1863.

General Blenker's service at the first battle of Bull Run was conspicuous for gallantry. His regiment, the Eighth New York Volunteers, held one of the important positions in the Union line at Centerburg, and was the last to leave the field.

The evidence seems to show satisfactorily that the General's death was caused by an injury received while in the line of duty.

His widow is now over 70 years old and very poor. She has no means of support save her pension of $30 per month, and no property.

It seems to the committee that this is a proper case for the intervention of Congress, and that $50 a month is not more than a reasonable amount for the Government to bestow upon the poor widow of a brave and gallant soldier.

The passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

LENA D. SMITH.

The next business was the bill (S. 1342) granting pension to Lena D. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Lena D. Smith, widow of Green Clay Smith, late colonel Fourth Kentucky Cavalry and brigadier-general United States Volunteers, and to pay to her a pension of $50 per month from and after the date of the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having carefully considered the bill (S. 1342) to pension Lena D. Smith, report as follows:

Green Clay Smith, the husband of this claimant, was mustered into service June 9, 1846, as second lieutenant Company H, First Kentucky Cavalry Mexican War Volunteers, to serve for twelve months, and was mustered out June 8, 1847. He was mustered in as colonel Fourth Kentucky Cavalry April 4, 1862; was seriously wounded in the leg in action at Lebanon, Tenn., May 5, 1862. He was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers June 12, 1862. In September, 1862, he was commanding the Second division United States forces near Covington and Newport, Ky. He continued in active service, commanding a part of the time a brigade and some of the time a division, until December 1, 1863, when his resignation was accepted. He has a record of treatment for chronic diarrhea of two months' standing in 1863. He was brevetted major-general of volunteers to date March 13, 1865, for meritorious services during the war.

As is well known, General Smith died in this city a short time ago, and the evidence presented to this committee shows that he left his widow without means of support.

In view of his well-known services, he having rendered gallant and meritorious services in two wars, and of the need of the widow, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

ROBERT SMALLS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] whether it is not time now for the committee to rise? It is a quarter past 5 o'clock.

Mr. PICKLER. I will make that motion in a moment. As the concluding bill this evening, I desire to ask unanimous consent (which I do by direction of the Invalid Pensions Committee, the only such request they have directed to be made to the House) for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1874) to place the name of Robert Smalls on the pension rolls. Mr. Smalls, as will be remembered by all gentlemen here, was once a Representative on this floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is this a bill to pension him?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has it been reported regularly?

Mr. PICKLER. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has it been reached regularly on the Calendar?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir. I have been directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask unanimous consent that it be considered by the Committee of the Whole out of its order.

Mr. ERDMAN. May I inquire when that was done by the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. PICKLER. About two weeks ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension rolls the name of Robert Smalls, late a pilot in the United States Navy, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty"; so as to make the pension $30 a month.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I will read a portion of the report in this case:

Robert Smalls, the beneficiary of this bill, on the night of May 12, 1862, assisted by seven other contrabands, took the Confederate steamboat Planter from the wharf at Charleston, S. C., and carried her safely past the forts outside and turned her over to the officers of the blockading squadron. He was then employed as a pilot in the United States Navy, and later as a pilot in the employ of the Quartermaster's Department and as captain of the Planter until the end of the war. No record of his having been commissioned as captain can be found, but the records show that he served and was recognized and paid as such. He claimed and was allowed a pension under act of June 27, 1890, but under recent construction of that act, as set forth in the Bennett decision, he was dropped from the rolls on the ground that his was not a pensionable service under said act.

This committee by reporting and the House by passing the bill (H. R. 8271) have declared that such service as his while a pilot is pensionable under the act of June 27, 1890; but your committee are of opinion that such recognition is not adequate for the valuable services rendered by this brave man and gallant officer, but hold that he should be pensioned at total of rank of a captain in the Navy. They therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "twenty-five," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," and that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. Smalls is now nearly blind, or has very deficient vision, is suffering with rheumatism, and is totally incapacitated from any manual labor. He would be entitled, if totally incapacitated for manual labor, even as a private, to this pension. He has been a member of Congress, as most gentlemen here know, and has rendered very distinguished services to the Government, and deserves the thanks of the country. Only two days ago I was reading an oration of Mr. George William Curtis, and intended to bring the book up here with me, but neglected to do so, where he pays a very high tribute to Mr. Smalls.

Mr. LOUD. Let me ask the gentleman if he is cognizant of the fact that this gentleman now has a good big claim and is asserting it anxiously before Congress—a claim for five thousand, ten thousand, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not think he has; but if he has, it ought to be paid.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman know that he has?

Mr. PICKLER. I have heard so, but I do not know. I ask a vote upon the amendment.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the committee now rise and report the bills for the consideration of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar, under the special order, had directed him to report with amendments bills of the House of the following numbers: 6549, 6046, 6472, 6247, 1874, 3480, 4193, 6166, 6468, 6546, 2042, 2941, 2985, 717, 6607, 6556, 4548, 5792, 5393, 6608, 5407, 1508, 4405, 3380, and 5938; and Senate bills of the following numbers: 804, 125, 819, and 1699, with the recommendation that the amendments be concurred in and the bills as amended passed.

Also, that he had been directed to report back, without amendment, and with favorable recommendation, House bills of the following numbers: 6590, 6552, 5852, 4410, 3389, 3395, 7212, 6826, 7127, 4268, 948, 1175, 4873, 5379, 3333, 2328, 3565, 3514, 3755, and 5880; and Senate bills of the following numbers: 807, 724, 148, 1672, 144, and 1342.

Also, that he had been directed to report back the bill H. R. 2755, with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

QUESTION OF ORDER—RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Two hours ago, while in Committee of the Whole, the committee informally rose, as I am informed, for the purpose of receiving a message from the Senate, and at the same time took some action upon the river and harbor bill, or the Senate amendments thereto, disposing of them in some manner. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no authority on the part of the committee to do that; and that it was not a proper disposition of that bill.

I want to call the attention of the Speaker for a moment to Rule XXIII, which provides:

1. In all cases, in forming a Committee of the Whole House, the Speaker shall leave his chair after appointing a chairman to preside, who shall, in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or lobby, have power to cause the same to be cleared.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOUD. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa is not in order. He has presented no point of order; and if he should, the time has passed for it to be done.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman is only stating now his point.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am presenting the question now. Possibly if the gentleman from California can contain his soul in patience a while he may change his views.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I can do it. I have had to do it lots of times. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I take the position that after the committee has been formed, after the Speaker has left the chair, that it is not competent for the Speaker again to resume the chair until, through the action of the committee, it is determined that the committee shall rise, at which time it becomes competent for him to assume control of the body, which is then the House.

I know that for certain purposes, such, for instance, as receiving a message from the Senate, it has been the custom of the committee to informally rise; and I am not quarreling with that mode of procedure. But I am trying to complain against the action of the committee which was indulged in on the occasion to which I now refer. It had been my purpose, if I had been in the House at that time, to raise the point of order on the Senate amendments making additional appropriations; that they must, under the rule, be considered in a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. But I expected nothing of the kind to be done, of course, while we were in committee under a special rule. I was in the lobby when the procedure was had, and I think it competent for the Chair now to consider, and so hold, that that message from the Senate is on the Speaker's table undisposed of.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the additional point of order that there is nothing before the House to which the gentleman's point refers; that the conferees have been appointed, the amendments of the Senate have been nonconcurred in, the message has been transmitted from this House to the Senate, and the bill has now gone to the printer. Consequently there is nothing before the House to which the gentleman's point relates.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the usual announcement was made by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole—the Secretary of the Senate appearing—that the committee would rise informally and receive a message from the Senate, and thereupon the committee did rise, and one of the members of the House took the chair, and the Secretary of the Senate made his report. While in the House, the river and harbor bill having come in with amendments, a member of the House rose in his place and asked the Chair for the unanimous consent of the House to consider the Senate amendments as disagreed to and to concur in the Senate's request for a committee of conference. The question was then put, and there was no objection, and the committee resumed its session. I state this to give the entire history of the transaction, because I was present and witnessed it.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is as I understood it, Mr. Speaker, but I insist that the committee had informally risen for the purpose of receiving that message, and it can not be considered that the House was then in session for the transaction of business. By a formal vote of the House it had resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House and was in that condition; but by consent, following a precedent, it rose for a specific purpose. In the contemplation of our rules, in my judgment, the House was not a House of Representatives for any other purpose than to receive that message, not to act upon it. The injustice of that action is apparent when the suggestion is made that there were Senate amendments upon that bill that were subject to the point of order. Now, by this action—snap judgment, if you choose to call it—they have passed that stage, and it seems to me that a wrong has been done to the House, and one that the Speaker can right by declaring the nullity of the procedure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine into the matter and announce to the House his opinion about it to-morrow. The transaction, however, as the Chair recollects, is not an unusual one.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only want to say, Mr. Speaker, while I sympathize with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] on the merits of the proposition, that it occurs to me that his point of order now comes too late. I agree with him that when the Committee of the Whole rose, and the Speaker took the chair, as he says, informally, that it would not have been in order for the House then to have gone on with legislative business, provided the point of order was then made; but a quorum being present, the House duly organized, the Speaker in the chair, no one objecting, unanimous consent being given, I think it was in order for the House to do what was done, and that it comes too late for the gentleman to raise the point of order at this stage, at this hour. I think it was waived. I think that whenever the House is organized, that is, when the Speaker is in the chair and a quorum is present, by unanimous consent the action could be taken that was taken. That is my idea of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that there are numerous precedents on the subject; but he wishes to give it due consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, in view of that fact, will the Chair permit me now to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that reference was made, subject to his decision upon the case? I do not want to lose my right to do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not undertake to entertain the motion, but will regard it as notice of a motion to enter a reconsideration; because the matter has gone to the Senate.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the procedure upon the river and harbor bill was taken by unanimous consent, and I think it can only be changed in the same way. I do not consent to anything that will waive any right as to the status of that bill. I insist that the House was in session for the purpose of considering that bill, or any other appropriation bill that was presented for consideration, and I do not agree to the proposition stated by the gentleman from Tennessee that it was only by unanimous consent that it could be done. If it was proper to receive it, then it was in order to consider it, by motion or by consent. The order was made in the usual way.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will indulge me for just a minute, I am not vain enough to think that I can throw any light upon this situation, but it seems to me that upon the merits the river and harbor bill has quite sufficient legs to proceed regularly. Now, I think generally members supposed under the order, and had a right to suppose, under the special order to-day, that when the House went into Committee of the Whole the only business transacted would be in the Committee of the Whole.

Of course it is competent in the committee to informally rise, by universal precedent, to receive a message from the Senate; and I suppose it was quite competent for a motion to rise, and for the House to have taken up other business. While I apprehend that from time to time orders of this kind have been made under precisely similar circumstances without any challenge, it seems to me that, without imputing blame to anybody, it has the appearance of a suspicion of sharp practice that on the bare suggestion no friend of the bill ought to hesitate to have corrected; and while I am not clear about the point as to whether the Speaker, under the circumstances, would have the right to annul the order that was taken, yet, as a friend of the court, so to speak, I am glad that it has been brought to the attention of the House; and as the Speaker has indicated that to-morrow he might make a decision in the matter, I would be glad that it go over.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest to the gentleman that it would be competent to reconsider the action of the House and request a return of the bill from the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. That, however, would depend upon a majority vote; and while the majority has the right to take any step it may choose, yet it ought to be taken rightly, openly, and fairly.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say this: That it comes with rather poor grace from the gentleman from Illinois to make the insinuation that the motion which was made this morning for the consideration of that bill, that is to say, so far as nonconcurrence in the Senate amendments was concerned, was made in bad faith.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman certainly does not apply that interpretation to my remarks; and if he will get a copy of them as taken down he will find that he has made haste to misinterpret them.

Mr. HERMANN. The intimation was broad enough to include just exactly what I have said.

Mr. CANNON. With the statement——

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to say this further——

Mr. CANNON. With the statement that the gentleman misinterprets my remarks, I taking especial pains to hedge so that it could not be done, if the gentleman proceeds upon that line, I can not help it.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman is very well aware of the fact, as everyone else who is acquainted with the business of this House is, that the public business is being transacted in such a manner as to tend to an early adjournment. He is well aware of that; and as one of the leaders of the House he has been advising toward that end. It is, therefore, natural that those interested in the waterway improvements of this country should desire to have an early consideration of this bill. It may require three, four, or five days to consider the bill in committee of conference. Then it will have to be reported to the Senate and to the House; and that may be the last time it will come before the House before it may come back with a Presidential veto. Therefore it is the duty of every member of this House to do all he possibly can to expedite the consideration of the bill and bring it to its final conclusion. When I looked around the House and saw a quorum was present and the Speaker in his proper place, I concluded that I had the right, as I have observed other members doing under the same circumstances, to call up a measure of this character and ask action upon it. And when gentlemen rise in their places and solemnly make the point of order upon this question, I say that it is not the first instance in which it has been done. There are many precedents for this action, which I have known not only in this Congress, but in previous Congresses under similar rules. The measure is right in the line of the demands of the country.

Inasmuch as nothing further can be done until the conference report is submitted to the House by the managers, gentlemen will have ample opportunity to examine as to the propriety of the Senate amendments. The House will then have an opportunity again, for the last time, to consider the bill; so that if a gentleman has any objection to any portion of the bill, and deems it necessary in the performance of his duties faithfully to call attention to it, he will have an opportunity to rise in his place and make such objection as the occasion may call for.

I will state further to the gentleman from Illinois that the motion which has been made was made in the very best faith, and made in the interest of what I believe to be the public business of this Congress, and in the interest of the country; and I say to him, with reference to this very bill, he is mistaken in the conclusions that he has come to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to call attention to one important fact bearing upon this question of order. That is, that the resolution adopted by the House, on the report of the Committee on Rules, setting apart this day for the consideration of pension business, contained an express reservation that general appropriation bills, of which the river and harbor bill is one, might be considered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Undoubtedly; but——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has his impression about this matter, but it being near the moment of adjournment, he thought it might be as well to be certain about it, and therefore made the suggestion with regard to to-morrow, as no change would take place in the rights of anybody, the message having been transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, if it is understood that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to reconsider is now pending, I desire to make a point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. That is understood. All rights are reserved.

GEN. JOSEPH R. WEST.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major general, United States Volunteers, with the recommendation that the House insist upon its amendment to the Senate bill and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read in full.

The House insisted on its amendment and agreed to a conference; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PICKLER, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. ERDMAN.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 488) for the relief of the legal representatives and devisees of James W. Schaumburg—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1265) for the relief of Emmart, Dunbar & Co.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 2415) for the relief of B. J. Van Vleck, administrator of Henry Van Vleck, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2978) to provide an American register for the steamer Menemsha—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrell Carroll;

A joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc.; and

A bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILSON of Idaho, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. WOODMAN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COOPER of Texas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. DINSMORE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. HULL, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LORIMER, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. THORP, for ten days, on account of important business.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. PICKLER, by unanimous consent, obtained an order for a reprint of the bill H. R. 8271.

The House then, on motion of Mr. PICKLER (at 5 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Lucius Hough against The United States was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1741) entitled "An act to authorize the Muskogee, Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a line of railway through Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1811); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HILBORN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8894) granting to Lafayette Post, No. 217, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, of Easton, Pa., 2 condemned cannon and 35 cannon balls, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1812); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1888) to further amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1893, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1813); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BOWERS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7256) for the relief of owners and claimants to lands within the national parks and forest reservations in the State of California, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1814); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LINTON, from the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, to which was referred the House resolution No. 186, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 8967) to provide for an improved system of heating and ventilation of the House (south) wing of the Capitol, accompanied by a report (No. 1825); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR PIPE LINES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2032) to grant right of way over the public domain for pipe lines in the States of Colorado and Wyoming; which were, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out "and reservations"; in line 12, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five"; and in line 15, to strike out all after "line" down to and including line 20.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the amendments of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7542) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. In the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has charge of the bill here, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of Local Assembly, No. 3961, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of the so-called Phillips bill, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Lambert Pharmaceutical Company of St. Louis, Mo., relative to the rebate on alcohol; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the District of Columbia, praying for the establishment of an asylum and hospital in the District of Columbia for the treatment of inebriates; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of the Real Estate Exchange and Auction Board of Boston, Mass.; of the Paper Trade Association of Boston, Mass.; of the Retail Grocers' Purchasing Association of Rochester, N. Y.; of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., and of the Chamber of Commerce of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and manufactures; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, Commandery of the State of Maine, of Portland, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the grade of lieutenant-general in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a memorial of the Entomological Society of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1552, relating to vivisection; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect free labor from competition with convict labor and confining the sale of convict-made goods to the States in which they are made; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Connecticut State prison, remonstrating against the interstate transportation of articles manufactured in penal institutions; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ALLEN presented the petition of D. L. Geer, of Columbia County, Fla., praying that all homestead settlers on the Arredondo Spanish grant in that county be protected in their homes and lands entered since 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect free labor from competition with convict labor and confining the sale of convict-made goods to the States in which they are made; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a short letter from A. Wolcott, of Wolcott, Ind., on the subject of the pending bankruptcy bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN OPPOSITION TO HOUSE BILL NO. 6110.

Hon. W. V. ALLEN:

DEAR SIR: As opposed to the bankruptcy bill, House bill No. 6110, may I be allowed to offer some suggestions?

First, and generally. There have been not less than three bankruptcy laws since the Government of the United States was established; and all after mature trial have been repealed, for the reason that in their practical effects more harm than good resulted from them. The expenses of a bankruptcy court and the sacrifices of the estate of bankrupts in the hands of court officers, under summary laws for closing out and realizing on the estates of bankrupts, with lack of special knowledge of the properties constituting the estates, and the mere formal manner of performing their official duties by the court officers, have resulted uniformly in little pecuniary benefit to creditors. The histories of the courts of bankruptcy show always little and often no dividends to creditors from the estates of bankrupts. Industrious and useful men have been destroyed, and no one has been benefited. The work has heretofore been ruin without compensation. The same character of laws, if enforced, in the future will be followed by the same real destruction of the usefulness of men and the impoverishment, sufferings, and degradation of their families.

Fifty years ago, by the laws then prevailing in the various States of the Union, debtors could be imprisoned for debts. No matter how honest, no matter how unfortunate the debtor, no matter what suffering would be inflicted on his family, under the inexorable laws for imprisonment for debt the exacting creditor could put his debtor in jail. This law of barbarism has passed away as civilization has advanced. The especially cruel features of the bill No. 8110 relate to insolvency, as expressed in subdivision 2 of section 2, and subdivisions 8 and 9 of said section 2, as a cause of bankruptcy proceedings. Only an allegation of insolvency is required to bring the debtor into a court of bankruptcy. This proceeding against a debtor would alone so discredit him and embarrass his affairs as to create insolvency, though otherwise no insolvency would have existed. Ordinarily, if a man slander or libel the credit or financial standing of another he is liable in a suit at law for all damages.

But under this bankruptcy bill, if it shall become a law, a creditor may libel his debtor, by commencing, without legal cause, a bankruptcy proceeding, and do his debtor untold damages, without incurring legal responsibility for the outrage. The law should provide that if in any case a creditor shall commence in bankruptcy court without just grounds, the creditor shall pay all costs, and triple the damages the debtor may sustain by the unwarranted proceedings. In relation to the proceedings before referred to, in section 2 and its quoted subdivisions, the debtor may be a man of all honesty, and of every virtue, and a useful man, much respected in his community; yet if insolvent by any accident, or unfortunate condition of things, as for instance, a merchant who has trusted his farmer neighbors, that by adverse seasons have lost their crops, and are on that account unable to pay the merchant, he may be proceeded against and ruined. For this ruin, as in the case of the imprisoned debtor under former laws, the creditor would have a dividend only of gratified spite. But the question has other facts that in equity are entitled to controlling consideration.

No man is required to give credit to any person. If a man does give credit it is his free and voluntary act, and the laws of all the States and of the United States give ample remedies for the collection of debts. If frauds have been practiced by any person, and he has obtained property under false pretenses, the debtor is also liable to be prosecuted and punished under the criminal laws.

The destructive process of force or involuntary bankruptcy of honest debtors under any condition is a barbarism fully equalling the old law of imprisonment for debt, long since obsolete for its useless cruelty. As the creditor gives credit of his own free will, let him be satisfied with the collection and criminal laws under which he has given his credits, for he justly can claim no more. Wreckage and destruction of a debtor under involuntary, enforcing bankruptcy laws have no moral right, and should have no legal right. The highest interests of the public consist in the elevation and self-sustaining character of our people. Financial and industrial distress prevails greatly throughout the country. Their artificial increase by force of coercive bankruptcy laws would be evil, and only evil.

A. WOLCOTT.

WOLCOTT, IND., April 21, 1896.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is not contrary to the agreement, I should be very glad to submit a conference report this morning. I think it will take no length of time to dispose of it.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6348) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 142, 309, 310, and 314.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 19, 108, 109, 144, and 313; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "three laborers at $840 each; twenty-two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$120,784"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "30"; and on page 9 of the bill, after the word "each" where it first occurs in line 5, insert "7 privates, at $900 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$52,120"; and on page 9 of the bill, at the end of line 8, insert the following: "And hereafter the Capitol police, under the direction of the Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate and of the House of Representatives and of the Architect of the Capitol, shall police the Capitol building and the Capitol Grounds"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 36 and 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph constituting lines 12, 13, 14, and 15 of page 18 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For register of copyrights, $2,500, who shall be selected on or after June 1, 1896, by the Joint Committee upon the Library of Congress, consisting of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, and who shall give good and sufficient bond to the United States in such sum, not less than $20,000, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and to be approved by him, faithfully to account for all public moneys and property which he may receive. He shall have and exercise all the rights and duties touching copyrights now devolved upon the Librarian of Congress. He shall, without additional compensation, disburse the sums appropriated for the salaries and expenses of his office, and also the salaries and expenses appropriated for the Library of Congress. He shall have an official seal of such pattern and design as he shall designate, and it shall contain the words 'Register of Copyrights, United States of America'; and by this seal all records and papers issued from the office of the register of copyrights shall be authenticated. He shall be provided with suitable rooms in the building for the Library of Congress.

"For one clerk, at $1,600, and for twelve clerks, at $900 each, necessary for the execution of the copyright law, to be appointed by and employed under the direction of the register of copyrights; in all, $12,400.

"For salaries for the month of June, 1896, of the register of copyrights; one clerk at the rate of $1,600 per annum and one clerk at the rate of $900 per annum, $412.10, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"The assistants in the Library of Congress now employed on work relating to the execution of the copyright law shall continue to be so employed, in the discretion and under the direction of the register of copyrights, until the close of the fiscal year 1897."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the next session of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico shall commence on the third Monday in February, 1897, and each succeeding session thereof shall commence on the third Monday in February of every odd-numbered year thereafter: Provided further, That no other officer of either house of said legislative assembly shall be elected or appointed or paid out of any moneys appropriated by the Congress of the United States, or by the legislative assembly of said Territory, than such as may be provided for by the laws of the United States, except a translator and an interpreter."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 233, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $5,500; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 305, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the section proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. That the terms of office of all commissioners of the circuit courts heretofore appointed shall expire on the 31st day of December, 1896; and such office shall on that day cease to exist, and said commissioners shall then deposit all the records and other official papers appertaining to their offices in the office of the clerk of the circuit court by which they were appointed. All proceedings pending, returnable, unexecuted, or unfinished at said date before any such commissioner shall be continued and disposed of according to law by such commissioner, appointed as herein provided, as may be designated by the district court for that purpose. It shall be the duty of the district court of each judicial district to appoint such number of persons, to be known as United States commissioners, at such places in the district as may be designated by the Attorney-General, which United States commissioners shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are now imposed upon commissioners of the circuit courts. The appointment of such United States commissioners shall be entered of record in the district courts, and notice thereof at once given by the clerk to the Attorney-General. That such United States commissioners shall hold their offices, respectively, for the term of four years, but they shall be at any time subject to removal by the district court; and no person shall at any time be a clerk of a United States court and a United States commissioner without the approval of the Attorney-General: Provided, That all acts and parts of acts applicable to commissioners of the circuit courts, except as to appointment and fees, shall be applicable to United States commissioners appointed under this act.

"Warrants of arrest for violations of internal-revenue laws may be issued by United States commissioners upon the sworn complaint of a United States district attorney, assistant United States district attorney, collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or revenue agent or private citizen, but no such warrant of arrest shall be issued upon the sworn complaint of a private citizen unless first approved in writing by a United States district attorney.

"That United States commissioners and all clerks of United States courts are hereby authorized to administer oaths."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 306, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the section proposed to be stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That no marshal or deputy marshal, or deputy clerk of the circuit or district court, attorney or assistant attorney of any district, jury commissioner, clerk of marshal, no bailiff, crier, juror, janitor of any Government building, nor any civil or military employee of the Government, and no clerk or employee of any United States justice or judge shall have, hold, or exercise the duties of the United States commissioner. And it shall not be lawful to appoint any of the officers named in this section receiver or receivers in any case or cases now pending or that may be hereafter brought in the courts of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 307, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the section proposed to be stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. That each United States commissioner shall be entitled to the following-named fees, and none other: Drawing a complaint, with oath and jurat to same, 50 cents; copy of complaint, with certificate to same, 30 cents; issuing warrant of arrest, 75 cents; issuing a commitment and making copy of same, $1; entering a return, 15 cents; issuing subpœna or subpœnas in any one case, with 5 cents for each necessary witness in addition to the first, 25 cents; drawing a bond of defendant and sureties, taking acknowledgment of same and justification of sureties, 75 cents; for administering an oath (except to witness as to attendance and travel), 10 cents; recognizance of all witnesses in a case, when the defendant or defendants are held for court, 50 cents; transcripts of proceedings, when required by order of court and transmission of original papers to court, 60 cents; copy of warrant of arrest, with certificate to same, when defendant is held for court, and the original papers are not sent to court, 40 cents; order in duplicate to pay all witnesses in a case: For first witness 30 cents, and for each additional witness 5 cents, and for oath to each witness as to attendance and travel, 5 cents; for hearing and deciding on criminal charges and reducing the testimony to writing when required by law or order of court, $5 a day for the time necessarily employed: Provided, That not more than one per diem shall be allowed in a case, unless the account shall show that the hearing could not be completed in one day, when one additional per diem may be specially approved and allowed by the court: Provided further, That not more than one per diem shall be allowed for any one day: Provided further, That no per diem shall be allowed for taking a bond or recognizance and passing on the sufficiency of the bond or recognizance and the sureties thereon when the bond or recognizance was taken after the defendant had been committed to prison under a final commitment, or has given bond or been recognized for his appearance at court, or when the defendant has been arrested on a capias or bench warrant, or was in custody under any process or order of a court of record. For the examination and certificate in cases of application for discharge of poor convicts imprisoned for nonpayment of fine or fine and costs, and all services connected therewith, $3; for attending to a reference in a litigated matter, in a civil cause at law, in equity, or in admiralty, in pursuance of an order of the court, $3 a day; for taking and certifying depositions to file in civil cases, 10 cents for each folio; for each copy of the same furnished to a party on request, 10 cents for each folio; for issuing any warrant under the tenth article of the treaty of August 9, 1842, between the United States and the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland against any parties charged with any crime or offense set forth in said article, $2; for issuing any warrant under the provision of the convention for the surrender of criminals between the United States and the King of the French, concluded at Washington November 9, 1843, $2; for hearing and deciding upon the case of any person charged with any crime or offense, and arrested under the provisions of said treaty or of said convention, $5 a day for the time necessarily employed.

"Such commissioners shall keep a complete record of all proceedings before them in criminal cases in a well-bound book, which record book shall be delivered to and preserved by the clerk of the district court for such district on the death, resignation, removal, or expiration of term of the commissioner, for which record the commissioner shall receive no compensation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 308, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 23. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to make an investigation as respects the compensation to be paid by salary or otherwise to clerks of United States circuit and district courts; and he shall report on the first day of the next session of the present Congress a plan for fixing such compensation for the clerks of the several courts of the United States as he may deem just, and he shall also recommend with his report such provisions as may to him seem proper touching their appointment and the performance of their duties."

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
ALEXANDER M. DOCKERY,
JOHN E. McCALL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the report be printed and that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. I always like to accede to a request made by the Senator, but I would a little rather not do that to-day for the reason, if I may be allowed to refer to the fact, that the chairman of the House conferees desires to be absent, and he is very anxious that the bill shall be disposed of before he has to leave. I venture to mention this circumstance as the only reason why I should prefer to dispose of the report to-day. I think there is nothing in the bill referring to the commissioners, with two or three little exceptions which can be mentioned, that will not be found in the original bill as passed by the House of Representatives, if that is the portion of the bill to which the Senator desires to give attention.

Mr. HILL. Yes; that is the very matter complained of. For instance, the Senate committee struck out all the provisions relating to United States commissioners which had been inserted in the House. When the bill came into the Senate the Senate adopted that view and concurred with the committee. I called the attention of the Senate then to the importance of the provision, and I was assured by the distinguished Senator from Iowa that the proposition of the committee to strike out would not be yielded in conference if he could have his way. The Senate had not discussed the propriety of the House provision, but our conferees have in their wisdom seen fit to yield the point. That is the very question I want to examine. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate to-day, when we are acting substantially under a special order.

Mr. CULLOM. I see that the Senator is disposed to discuss the question some time, at any rate, and in view of the common-consent arrangement for to-day I hardly feel at liberty to insist upon the consideration of the report this afternoon. I will therefore allow it to go over until to-morrow morning and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and go over.

STANDARD FOR DRY MEASURES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill (S. 2359) defining the standard shape and size for dry measures to be used in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, now on the Calendar, be indefinitely postponed, a House bill identical in terms having passed the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4598) granting a pension to Mary Cray, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2583) for the relief of Leonard I. Brownson, late first lieutenant Company K, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1488) appropriating $6,332.30 in payment of the claim of C. M. Kirkpatrick for paving the street adjacent to the United States arsenal at Indianapolis, Ind., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment providing for an appropriation for the paving of certain streets leading to the Zoological Park, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported an amendment providing that skilled mechanics employed in the Government Printing Office be paid at the rate of 50 cents per hour for time actually employed, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1961) to authorize the purchase of the property known as the Corcoran Art Gallery, in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2402) to authorize the sale of a part of the Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. But two days ago, while the bill was still pending in the Committee on Military Affairs, this land was assigned to the Interior Department by proclamation as an abandoned military reservation. The bill should properly go to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 130) to extend the rights and privileges granted by an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a railway upon the Government Reservation at Fortress Monroe" to the Newport News, Hampton and Old Point Railway Company, in the State of Virginia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1438) for the relief of the estates of Daniel Woodson and of Ely Moore, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, in response to the resolution of April 10, 1896, transmitting a list of cases of Kentucky claimants for rents for barracks and quarters allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury and reported to Congress January, 1895, and not appropriated for, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 225) to provide for the transfer of Fort Omaha Military Reservation to the State of Nebraska, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

DIRECTOR IN CHIEF OF SCIENTIFIC BUREAUS.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PROCTOR on the 13th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the arguments before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in favor of the proposition for a director in chief of scientific bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, together with all the appendixes accompanying the same as published for the use of said committee; 1,500 of which shall be for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture and 1,500 for the use of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOOKER, Mr. HERMANN, and Mr. CATCHINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PICKLER, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. ERDMAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7771) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate a condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrell Carroll;

A bill (S. 2488) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes";

A bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ROACH introduced a bill (S. 3152) granting an increase of pension to Ransom S. Angell, late private of Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3153) granting a pension to Mary R. Henderson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3154) granting an increase of pension to Barnabas A. Bonham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURPIE (for Mr. VOORHEES) introduced a bill (S. 3155) for the relief of Barzilla C. Hudson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3156) to increase the pension of Lorenzo Thomas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3157) for the relief of those suffering from the destruction of the salt works near Manchester, Ky., pursuant to the orders of Maj. Gen. Carlos Buell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 3158) for the relief of the heirs at law of the late Duncan H. Campbell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MANTLE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7771) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate a condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to certain posts of the Grand Army of the Republic was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

TRIAL OF CITIZENS ARRESTED IN CUBA.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to submit a resolution, which I ask to have read and printed, and that it go over until to-morrow, when I shall ask the privilege of submitting some remarks upon it.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie over and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is directed to inquire and report to the Senate what are the rights of the United States, under our treaties with Spain, as to the trial of our citizens arrested in Cuba and now under condemnation and sentenced to death by the Spanish military tribunals for alleged offenses of a political or other character against the Spanish laws or Government, and to report on that subject by bill or otherwise.

2. That the Secretary of State is directed to send to the Senate literal copies of the original text of a protocol of conference and declarations concerning judicial procedure, signed by Caleb Cushing, as minister of the United States, and Señor Don Fernando y Collantes, minister of the King of Spain, on January 12, 1877, as the same was executed and interchanged, both in the English and Spanish languages; and that he will inform the Senate whether the established or agreed original text of said protocol is in the English or the Spanish language.

3. That the Secretary of State is further directed, if it is not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to the Senate copies of any correspondence that has taken place between the Governments of Spain and the United States respecting the said protocol and its bearing or effect upon the trial and condemnation of citizens of the United States who were recently captured on or near the vessel called the Competitor, that was seized under Spanish authority in Cuban waters, or near to that island.

PROPOSED TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution. After it is read I shall make a request concerning it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the widespread business depression and rapid increase of the public debt demonstrate that the existing tariff law does not produce sufficient revenue, and that a revision of the law is imperatively demanded in the interests of the people of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution lie upon the table subject to my call, as I desire to address myself either to the resolution or to some bill that may be before the Senate on the tariff question before the adjournment of the present session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

IMPORTATIONS OF ORIENTAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] reported a resolution the other day from the Committee on Finance and it went over. He dropped a note to me and asked me to have it called up. I made some objection, as did the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], to the resolution. I ask that the resolution be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. ALDRICH from the Committee on Finance on the 12th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance, under the provisions of the Senate resolution of March 3, 1891, is hereby directed to inquire whether American labor and industries are suffering from or threatened with injurious competition through importations of oriental products, and if so, to investigate the causes which have made such competition possible.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to amend the resolution by adding at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That in ascertaining the relative efficiency of oriental and American labor the committee shall report to Congress the labor cost of products per unit of quantity in both countries.

Mr. MILLS. That amendment, I beg to say, the Senator from Rhode Island said he would accept.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOHN S. EVANS.

Mr. ALLISON. As I am obliged to be absent much of the time during the sessions of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent at this time to call up the bill (H. R. 1601) to amend the military record of John S. Evans.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to restore to the muster rolls of Company E, Twenty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, the name of John S. Evans, and to grant him an honorable discharge from the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, in the Post of this morning I notice a reference to the bill passed day before yesterday regulating the standard shape and size of dry measures. The Post extract is as follows:

The bill related to a standard shape and size for dry measures. It was on the point of being passed when Senator KYLE, a Populist of South Dakota, offered an amendment which proposed that 60 pounds should be equivalent to a bushel of potatoes when sold at wholesale and 56 pounds when they were sold at retail. In other words, the wholesale dealer gained one-fifteenth of a bushel of potatoes on every bushel that he sold. In 15 bushels he made a clear profit of a bushel under the law. The proposition, too, came from a Populist, who would hardly be supposed to side with the large dealer and discriminate against the workingman, the boarding-house keeper, and the housewife in such fashion, etc.

I wish merely to state in this connection that the provision, as indicated in this communication, was the committee amendment, placed in the bill by the Committee on the District of Columbia of this body. It reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the lawful weight of a bushel of potatoes shall be 60 pounds when sold by wholesale and 56 pounds when sold by retail, and that hereafter all sales thereof shall be made by weight, under a penalty of $5 for each offense, to be recovered in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of the said District, in the same manner as other fines and penalties are recovered.

I merely by my amendment moved to strike out the provision that all potatoes should be sold by weight, and the recommendation for the discrimination making 60 pounds the wholesale weight and 56 pounds the retail weight was from the Commissioner of the District of Columbia, John W. Ross. He says in his report:

I recommend that the wholesale weight of a bushel of potatoes be made 60 pounds, but the retail weight be made 56 pounds. This difference is fully equalized by the amount of dirt shoveled up when putting potatoes in sacks for wholesale delivery and the care taken when preparing them for sale by retail.

I will state that the reporter of the Post assured me that it was by mistake that he connected my name with the matter. The responsibility for the amendment rests with the District Committee, and the authority for their action is District Commissioner John W. Ross.

REGULATION OF BOND ISSUES.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, several days since I gave notice that to-day I would ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 3101) to prohibit the issuance of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government by the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer of the Government, without the authority of Congress, in order that I might submit some remarks upon it. I now make that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill indicated by him may be taken up for the purpose of submitting some remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BACON. I desire to state, what I should have stated before, that prior to making this request I conferred with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and had his approval of the course I have taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the bill may be read at length.

The Secretary read the bill (introduced by Mr. BACON on the 8th instant), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor any other officer of the Government shall issue any bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government, except hereafter expressly thereto authorized by Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the bill which has just been read is of a general character and would prohibit, should it be enacted into law, the issuance of any bonds in the future by the Secretary of the Treasury unless thereto specifically authorized by act of Congress. It is a fact, however, that there is at present but one law upon the statute books under which bonds can be issued by an executive officer of the Government without the specific authority of Congress. That is the act of 1875, commonly known as the resumption act. The effect of the bill if it should become a law would be to repeal practically one portion of the act of 1875, to wit, that portion of it which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds for the purpose of raising what is known as the redemption fund, for the redemption of greenbacks when presented for payment. I shall, therefore, discuss this bill as if it were specifically an act to repeal that particular portion of the act of 1875, and when in the course of my remarks I speak of the law I am referring to the act of 1875 and that portion of it which gives this authority to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The fact that within the past two years the interest-bearing debt of the United States has been increased by $262,000,000 of bonds issued through orders of the executive department of the Government under a general existing law, is sufficient to challenge the attention of the Senate to this bill as one of most serious import.

The urgent importance of taking away from executive officers this immeasurable power to create public debt is emphasized by the further fact that neither of the several issues of bonds aggregating this stupendous amount would have been authorized or consented to by Congress at the several times of their issuance. On the contrary, it is beyond doubt that if the consent of Congress had been asked to either of these issues of bonds, such consent would have been most emphatically refused.

To this fact, which has only ceased to be startling because from its continued repetition we have grown familiar with its enormity, must be added the recognized certainty that in the future operation of a system of finance which under the present construction of existing law is the most vicious and suicidal that ever cursed a government and a people, there will inevitably be additional issues of bonds unless Congress, in the exercise of its power and in the performance of what I believe to be its duty, shall say it must not be done. Mr. President, it is no light matter to clothe one man with the power to burden the people with hundreds of millions of dollars of indebtedness. If in the opinion of Congress it is a proper thing to invest any one man with such power, or to permit him to remain invested with such power, it is a great responsibility which Congress assumes when it forms that opinion and acts upon it.

If, on the contrary, it is in the opinion of Congress a thing not proper to be done, it is an abandonment of the highest duty if it fails to prohibit the exercise of such power in the future in the most commanding and effective manner known to its powers. It is a responsibility which can not be escaped by Congress—this responsibility for the issuance of bonds at the will of one man. It is within the power of Congress to prevent the future issuance of bonds by the executive department without the direct authorization of the lawmaking power. If it defeats the bill which prohibits such issuance of bonds in the future by the executive department, by such action Congress takes the responsibility of justifying such future issuance. If Congress refuses or fails to take any action one way or the other, and by such refusal or failure permits to stand unrepealed the existing law under which the power to issue bonds without limit is claimed and exercised by the executive department, it is practically an approval by Congress of the continued exercise of such power. We can not escape the responsibility. We can not screen ourselves under the plea that it is the act of the executive department and that it is not done by Congress. The bonds are issued by the executive department under a law which it is within the power of Congress to repeal. Without that law the executive department will have no power in the future to make further issues of bonds. If we permit the law to stand on the statute book, we sanction the future issues of bonds by the Executive, and the responsibility is ours. If we repeal the law, the bonds will not be issued hereafter. If we do not repeal the law, they will be issued. Therefore, either in our action or nonaction the question whether these bonds shall be issued in the future is to be determined by us, and the responsibility is the responsibility of Congress. If this session closes and this law remains unrepealed, Congress will say to the people we approve the law, and we will further say to the people that, as we are certain that the executive officer will under this law issue more bonds in the future in the same manner as has been done in the past, we approve what this officer has done in the issuance of bonds under this law, and we justify and warrant his doing the same thing time and again in the future.

If the law under which this two-hundred-and-sixty-two-million-dollar bond issue has been made had now expired by limitation of time, would Congress now pass a law giving to an executive officer the unlimited power by his mere order to issue bonds, which is now claimed and exercised under the present law? How many Senators, in the light of the experience of the last two years, would vote for a law which conferred upon an executive officer, or any other one man, the power, in his single judgment and at his individual discretion, to issue bonds, and in all reasonable probability increase the public debt, principal and interest, to the enormous amount of one thousand million dollars?

That there are some Senators in this Chamber who would support such a measure may be possible, but that a large majority of Senators would refuse their assent to the enactment of such a law I can not doubt. If so, no Senator can shut his eyes to the logical conclusion that in refusing to give his aid to the repeal of the present law, the responsibility upon him is the same as if he were now by his vote to enact a new law to the same effect.

If the time shall ever come when it shall be recognized as the permanent policy of this Government that one man shall be clothed with the power at his own unbridled will to determine when and in what amounts and upon what terms the bonded debt of the people shall be increased, it will be the heaviest and most fatal blow ever struck at representative government. The responsibility for so great and so fateful a revolution in our instituntions should not be left in doubt, and upon the records of this Senate should be spread the names of those who favor it and the names of those who oppose it to the uttermost.

Every day that the existing law is allowed to remain in force is a recognition of its propriety. Every such day is an advance in the direction of the perpetuation of the system by which the people can be loaded down with enormous indebtedness without the consent and against the will of their chosen representatives. Every time there is an issue of bonds under the existing law, the loyalty of the people to republican representative government is weakened and they become more and more familiar with submission to one-man power.

The requirement for the repeal of the existing law is not the demand of sentiment. It is not for the promotion of the interests of any one particular political party, except in so far as such interest may be affected by the support of, or the opposition to, the repeal by such political party. It is demanded by the immeasurable interest and the conceded right of the people that they should not be burdened with debt except by the votes of their chosen representatives in Congress. It is demanded by the experience of the last two years—the great object lesson by which is shown the consequences of such royal power when placed in the hands of any one man. It is, above all, demanded that there may be preserved the bounds set by the Constitution upon executive power, and that the legitimate duties and powers and responsibilities devolved by the Constitution upon Congress shall be exercised by Congress, and shall not be delegated to any other department of the Government, or to any one man, whoever he may be, or whatever office he may hold.

If there is one thing in the Constitution clearer than any other one thing, it is the intention that Congress alone shall have the power to create a debt, or levy and collect taxes for the payment of debt, or for any other purpose. There is no line or syllable in that instrument indicating the intention that the executive department shall exercise in any degree either of these powers. There is not a line in it looking to the idea that the Chief Executive should have any connection with, or influence upon, the exercise of such powers except in the power of the veto as on any other proposed legislation.

The plain, emphatic, indisputable design of the Constitution is that the lawmaking power alone shall create debt, levy taxes, direct or indirect, make appropriations, and control the disbursement of the public treasure. A departure from such direct intention is a violation and a defeat of the purpose of the fundamental law.

There is no room for contention or successful dispute of this proposition. There is nothing either in the plain reading or the hidden meaning of the Constitution which will justify any other construction. There has never been the dictum of a respectable commentator on this instrument, never a judicial decision, and, so far as I am informed, never the utterance of a publicist upon which could be rested a contention in conflict with this proposition.

In the history of the English-speaking race there is nothing more important than the achievement, through the struggles of centuries, of the right of the people to control taxation and expenditure through their representatives. No cost and no sacrifice have been deemed too great a price for this inestimable right. And, sir, I think it may be safely said that no part of the English-speaking people has ever voluntarily surrendered this right. No part of this liberty-loving, self-ruling race has ever intentionally conferred upon the executive head of its Government the power to levy and collect taxes, and to expend the revenues derived therefrom, regardless of the wishes, and in opposition to the will of their representatives.

The Constitution of the United States most carefully guards and limits to Congress the right and the duty to create debt, to levy and collect taxes, and to make and control expenditure of the public money. After the preamble, the first line in the Constitution is as follows:

> All legislative power herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The creation of debt, the levy of taxes, and the appropriation of the public money are among the highest legislative powers. But not content with this general authorization, the Constitution, in that magnificent enumeration of the great powers of Congress, in the first clause of such enumeration provides that Congress shall have power "to lay and collect taxes" and "to pay the debts" "of the United States."

In the second clause of these enumerated powers is that "to borrow money on the credit of the United States."

The final clause of this enumeration confers upon Congress the duty "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers."

What powers? Why, undoubtedly the powers conferred on Congress. It is made the duty of Congress to pass all laws which may be necessary to enable Congress to exercise the great powers therein conferred upon it. There is nothing which can be construed into authority to Congress to pass laws by which these great powers, the execution of which is devolved upon Congress, may, by delegation thereof, be exercised by the executive branch of the Government. They are to be exercised by Congress, and by Congress only. Any device by which the great powers of creating debt, or levying taxes, or appropriating money, are practically taken away from Congress, and practically conferred upon the executive branch of the Government, is a violation of the letter and of the spirit of the Constitution.

The enumeration of the powers of the Executive contains nothing looking to the creation of debt, the levying of taxes, or the appropriation of the public money. Outside of the appointment of officers and the official intercourse with foreign governments, almost all of the duties of the Executive head may be included in the one sentence in the Constitution, "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

It is not for any executive officer to make law, nor is it for Congress to confer upon any executive officer powers the discharge of which enables him in his discretion to determine what amount of public debt shall be incurred and what amount of taxes shall be levied and collected for the payment of such debt. Such power and the duty to exercise it belongs to Congress only. It can not be constitutionally delegated to the executive branch of the Government.

Despite this careful constitutional limitation of legislative powers, and particularly of the debt-creating power, to Congress, it is not to be denied that the power is now by law, under its present construction, lodged in the executive department, and in one officer of that department, at his single will and in his sole discretion, to enforce taxation and expenditure practically without limit, and under this law this autocratic power is exercised not only in the absence of the assent of the people but directly in opposition to their wishes and to the wishes of their chosen representatives. Congress practically has nothing to do in the premises but to obediently, and as a matter of formality, levy the taxes and appropriate the money which the executive officer has himself already practically levied and appropriated in the contraction of a debt which must be paid without hesitation and without question.

But for the credit of the American people I am glad to be able to say, as I shall attempt to prove, that in the passage of the act of 1875 there was no intention to confer such a power on an executive officer, and that there was nothing in the terms of the act under the conditions then existing which would justify the contemplation of the exercise of such power under it at any time.

The act of 1875, as modified by the act of 1878, does not, it is true, confer in terms upon the Secretary of the Treasury the power to levy taxes and to appropriate and disburse the money collected from the people through such taxation. But it is in effect practically the same thing. Under the law as construed by the executive department, the Secretary of the Treasury has the power, in his discretion, to create debt and to issue interest-bearing bonds as the evidence thereof. When he issues in the name of the Government one hundred millions of bonds, it is no longer a question in the discretion of Congress whether the hundred million dollars, with the amount of the interest thereon, shall be collected from the people for their payment. The bonds thus issued must be paid, principal and interest. The money must by Congress be collected from the people by taxation, and the money thus collected must be appropriated by Congress for the payment of the debt, however unwillingly it may be done. So that, I repeat, the law empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of the Government practically without limit, in effect confers upon this officer, or upon the President who may direct and control him, the power, in thus contracting a public debt, at his own will and in his own discretion, to tax the people without limit. This law also practically empowers him to the same extent to make appropriations and disbursement of the public treasure without their wish or consent.

Mr. President, if Senators realize the enormity of a statute conferring such power upon an executive officer, can they possibly hesitate in the recognition of the duty of Congress to promptly reclaim and retake to itself the high prerogative of determining what amount of money shall be collected from the people, and to what public uses that money shall be appropriated after it has thus been collected?

Sir, it would seem that sufficient reason would be found for the repeal of this law in the fact that in its presence upon the statute book there is a practical abdication by Congress of the most important functions conferred upon the legislative branch by the Constitution. But this constitutional objection to this law has much additional force if it be true, as I think can be clearly shown, that in its enactment Congress never designed to confer upon the executive branch the power now exercised under it. While the law as construed by the executive department undoubtedly now confers upon the executive officer the power to create debt practically without limit, and while it is equally true that this law in its present operation practically confers on him the additional power to enforce the levying of taxes and the disbursement of the public money in accordance with his unrestrained discretion and will, it is nevertheless also true that it was not the original intent or contemplation of the statute to confer such power, and that there was nothing in its terms, under the conditions then existing, to justify the anticipation that any such power could be exercised under it by an executive officer.

The ministerial act of signing and issuing the bonds of the Government has always been delegated to the executive department, but the determination of what bonds should be issued, and when and in what amount, has always been kept within the control of Congress. It may be safely said that from the foundation of the Government the issuance of bonds has been either for the purpose of borrowing money or for the funding or renewal of an existing debt. In either case the discretion has been exclusively exercised by Congress in the issuance of such bonds. If a certain sum of money was to be borrowed, the executive department was directed to negotiate and issue bonds in the amount necessary to procure the same. If a debt was to be funded, or refunded, the executive department was directed in the same manner to issue the amount of bonds required for the purpose. In each instance the executive department, in issuing the bonds, was but the agency of the legislative department, and acting strictly within the limits prescribed by the latter department.

The act of 1875 was when enacted no exception to this general rule. The purpose of the act was to provide a fund by which the legal-tender notes of the Government should be paid in coin when presented for redemption.

The amount of these legal-tender notes was known, and when the law authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate and issue bonds at not less than par to an extent necessary to redeem all legal-tender notes presented for payment, it was in the contemplation of that act an authority to issue bonds in an amount not exceeding the total amount of legal-tender notes then outstanding. In the enactment of that law Congress never intended to clothe the Secretary of the Treasury with unlimited power to issue bonds in his discretion, and there was nothing in the conditions then existing to warrant the contemplation of Congress that the law could ever have such effect. If the original act had been carried out as designed, there would have been simply the exchange of one form of indebtedness for another by the Government, without increasing the amount of such indebtedness. For the legal-tender notes bonds in equal or less amount would have been substituted.

Under this act a portion of the legal tenders were redeemed and canceled. Finding that the cancellation of the legal tenders was too violently contracting the currency, the act of 1878 was passed requiring that the legal-tender notes when redeemed should not be canceled, but should again be reissued by the Treasury Department. By this latter act the whole nature of the act of 1875 was changed. From an act authorizing an issue of bonds which could not exceed the amount of the greenbacks, it was converted into an act which put into the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury practically unlimited power to issue bonds in his discretion. The effect in this regard of this act of 1878 was not foreseen by Congress at the time of its enactment, or doubtless at the same time the act of 1875 would have been further amended by withdrawing from the Secretary of the Treasury the power to issue bonds and reserving to Congress, to whom it legitimately belonged, to authorize thereafter such specific issues of bonds, upon such terms and under such conditions, as might be required for the redemption of the greenbacks. The possibilities of bond issues under this act of 1875 as modified by the act of 1878 did not become apparent for many years thereafter. Such possibilities never would have been developed if the Department had adhered to what was recognized for years as the law, and which I conceive still to be the law, that the authority to issue bonds was given by the statute only to be exercised when there was not in the Treasury, derived from any source, legal-tender coin in sufficient amount with which to redeem the greenbacks presented for payment. Not only is it plainly the correct construction of the resumption act that the Government should exercise the option as to which legal-tender coin it would use in the payment of its obligations, but this construction was recognized in the practice of the Government for more than fifteen years. Not only so, but the right and intention of the Government to exercise such option is emphatically announced in the act of July 14, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Act. I will ask the Secretary to read the portion of the act of 1890 which is marked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law.

Mr. GRAY. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should call his attention to the act repealing the so-called Sherman law, and the duty that by that repealing law was imposed upon the Government?

Mr. BACON. Not in the least.

Mr. GRAY. The law is in these words:

And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States in the markets and in the payment of debts.

It seems to me, I submit to the Senator, that that imposes a duty in a somewhat different light upon the Government and the administration of the fisc of this country than that read by the Senator from the so-called Sherman law.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad of the interruption by the distinguished Senator. I think so far from that being in any manner a change, it is directly in the line of that law. In response to the inquiry of the honorable Senator from Delaware, I desire to call attention with a little more particularity to the act of 1890 for the purpose of emphasizing the proposition that the act of 1890 did not simply do what all the political platforms have done and what several statutes and resolutions of Congress have done, to wit, announce the policy of the Government to maintain the parity, but it went further to indicate the particular way in which that parity was to be maintained. I confess that I have read this law a number of times, and only within the past few days has this exact language been called to my attention.

It is plain that the act of 1890 announced it as the policy of the Government, and as the direct law as to Treasury notes issued under that law, that the Government should exercise the option and that the creditor should not exercise it. There is no other proper construction to it. It is true the law does not use the word "option"; it uses the word "discretion," but there is no other construction which can be put to it.

Mr. GRAY. Read it again.

Mr. BACON. At the request of the Senator from Delaware I will read the clause again.

Mr. GRAY. I mean just those words.

Mr. BACON. It says:

That upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury—shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion.

Not "may"—

Mr. GRAY. Is there anything following that clause?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

It being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio—

Which is 16 to 1.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator——

Mr. BACON. Wait a moment—or such ratio as may be provided for by law.

If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I should like to state my proposition before he answers it. I say that no court in the construction of that language could come to any conclusion but that the use of the words "at his discretion" meant that the Government should exercise the option.

Now, it may be said that discretion of the Secretary might be exercised in permitting the creditor to choose, but there would certainly be no correct reasoning in that contention. That would defeat it, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. When the law says that the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem in either gold or silver coin at his discretion, it does not mean that he shall exercise that discretion by permitting the other party to exercise a discretion. It can not do that.

Mr. GRAY. I think that is right. Now, what I want to submit to the fair, legal mind of my friend the Senator from Georgia is the question whether the subsequent clause of the Sherman Act, the one following the clause just read, does not impose upon that discretion a limitation in the nature of describing the object for which the discretion shall be exercised?

Mr. BACON. In this law?

Mr. GRAY. Yes, in the Sherman Act.

Mr. BACON. The one I have just read?

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. BACON. By no means. The Senator's question simply anticipates what I intended myself to discuss.

Mr. GRAY. I beg pardon.

Mr. BACON. I think every Senator here, even the distinguished Senator from Delaware himself, admits the correctness of the proposition I have just announced as to what is the true construction of the language so far as I went. The Senator from Delaware assents to it.

Now, what is the meaning of the continuing language? The continuing language does not in any manner change the nature of the language already used, but simply goes on to state the purpose to be effected by that language which it had already used. It says, in other words, practically, in order that the parity between gold and silver may be maintained, the Secretary of the Treasury, when he pays the demand obligations of the Government, shall exercise the option whether he will pay gold or silver, and he shall not leave that option to be exercised by the creditor.

Mr. ALLEN. It being in the nature of a public trust, he must exercise it in the interest of the public.

Mr. GRAY. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. It does not interfere with me in the least. I am happy to hear the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. What I contend is, it seems to me, what the Senator has frankly stated, that the succeeding words do modify the use of the discretion by describing the end to be accomplished by the exercise of that discretion.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. There we agree.

Mr. BACON. We agree.

Mr. GRAY. What is that end? The end is:

To maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio——

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. To go further—or such ratio as may be provided by law.

Therefore it is not an unlimited discretion, but it is a discretion to be exercised in that way which will best accomplish this purpose.

If the Secretary of the Treasury should believe, in the honest exercise of that discretion, that it was necessary, in order to preserve the parity of the two metals, to pay an obligation of the United States in gold, surely it would not be a departure from the command of the law for him to pay in gold.

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly not, if he has both.

Mr. GRAY. Very well; then we agree.

Mr. BACON. But the departure is in the Secretary of the Treasury entirely surrendering his own judgment as to whether gold or silver coin would best promote the parity, and permitting the creditor to say in his discretion whether he will have the one or the other, regardless of what may be the opinion of the Secretary.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] suggests that that is a complete answer. It seems to me, if I may be pardoned for trespassing on the indulgence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]——

Mr. BACON. The Senator is not trespassing.

Mr. GRAY. It seems to me that where the end in view is described by the law, that is, to preserve parity, and discretion given to the Secretary of the Treasury to accomplish that end, it is beside the case, and the reason that underlies the case, to say that he has surrendered the discretion to a party who demands gold, where the Secretary chooses to pay gold in order that there may be no difference in the action of the Treasury Department in its use of the two metals, in order that whatever is demanded may be paid, for the moment one metal is discriminated against, or has a discrimination made in its favor, that moment, it seems to me, there is a departure from the plain end of the law. Now, as is admitted everywhere, it seems to me, by persons who are cognizant of the methods of doing business, a demand note of the Government has to be paid in that metal which the creditor prefers at the time, in order that that duty may be properly performed by him, for the moment he refuses to do that he compels the acceptance of a metal which is not preferred by the creditor, and the discrimination between the two coins commences and the parity begins to disappear.

Mr. ALLEN. Discrimination causes disparity.

Mr. BACON. The entire proposition as stated by the honorable Senator from Delaware, so far as I can analyze it and reduce it to a single proposition, is that the Secretary of the Treasury would be justified in surrendering his own discretion and in permitting the creditor to exercise the discretion, or the option, to use the other term, in case the Secretary of the Treasury thought it the best policy to do so. The law gives him no such power. The law gives him power to say, "I will pay in gold, because I think that will best produce parity," if he wishes to do so.

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. BACON. It gives him power to pay in silver, if that will the more surely tend to produce parity. It does not give him power to say, "I think it is the policy of this Government, regardless of what may be my opinion as to the interest of the Government, to let the creditor exercise the option when he comes and says 'I will take gold.'" There would be no such power. The Secretary might think it better for the Government that the creditor should take silver.

Mr. GRAY. It is the desire of the creditor for gold that operates upon and is the reason for the exercise of the discretion.

Mr. BACON. That does not make parity. Gentlemen talk upon this floor and on the stump about parity. Because a man can with a silver dollar get a gold dollar does not make parity. Parity is where either metal will stand of itself without the support of the other; where either will accomplish the same result as the other without the assistance of the other. That is all there is in parity.

Mr. ALLEN. The law of equality.

Mr. BACON. It is the law of equality, as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska says.

I am glad this interruption has occurred, because it emphasizes the fact which escaped my notice up to within the past few days, and which I have never heard presented before, although it is on the plain surface of the law, that the act of 1890 laid upon the Secretary of the Treasury the absolute obligation to exercise his option in behalf of the Government if he thought the paying of one rather than the other coin would tend to produce parity between the two coins.

Mr. President, what can more tend to produce disparity than for the Government to admit that a coin, which it itself says is a legal coin, is not an equal coin with the other, and that therefore a man has a right to discriminate between the two? I think that much we have heard on the coinage question would never have been heard if it had not been for the fatal mistake made by the Secretary of the Treasury in allowing that discrimination to be made. If he had said in the beginning, "Under the law these two coins are equal; under the law when you present one to me in payment for the debt due to the Government I do not ask you to give me the other. I accept either one; and under the law when you present an obligation to me for payment you must take either one, and I will exercise my judgment as to which is the one that it is more in the interest of the Government to pay"—if he had said that there would have been parity, parity not because one leans against the other or derives its support from the other, but parity because one is as strong and as tall as the other and will bear as much burden as the other. That is parity. So long as the Government admits the claim of the creditor that one is not so good as the other, and permits the creditor to say, "I will select what I will take," so long there will not be parity, certainly not under existing law.

Mr. GRAY. All that I meant to say, and I do not believe the Senator from Georgia will differ with me in that respect, is that where the Secretary of the Treasury has two coins in his possession, in maintaining the parity of which he is commanded to exercise a discretion he can only use that discretion by saying to a creditor, "Whichever of these coins you want you can have," for if he says, "You shall take one and not the other," then there is not parity maintained between them on the part of the Government. He says, "You can take either of these two coins, and therefore we show that we regard them precisely alike."

Mr. BACON. The mistake which the distinguished Senator from Delaware makes and which a great many others who think as he thinks also make is this: They confuse the idea of the parity which exists between the gold dollar and the paper dollar, which is not parity in the sense that we are talking about when we speak of the parity of two legal-tender coins. You say the legal-tender paper dollar is on a parity with gold. You use the expression "is on a parity with gold" simply because it is redeemable in gold.

The distinguished Senator and those of his school in this particular branch of politics think that all that is needed with reference to the silver dollar is that it shall have the same relation to the gold dollar that the paper dollar has to-day. I say that there is a fatal vice in that position, and that the relation which those recognize who occupy the position I do is that it shall be a parity not because one can be exchanged for the other, except so far as equality will promote exchange, but because one is as powerful as the other and will do as much as the other without reference to any support from the other.

Mr. GRAY. Then we mean different things by the word "parity."

Mr. BACON. We certainly do.

Mr. GRAY. I think it comes down to that.

Mr. BACON. We certainly do; and I am only sorry that the country at large and the men who do not have the time to investigate this matter are misled in that regard by the arguments of those who agree with the distinguished Senator from Delaware. They are confused upon the question of parity and made to believe that the question of parity between gold and silver is the same thing as the parity between gold and paper. They are as wide apart as the poles.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. If we admit what the Senator from Delaware says, that the Secretary of the Treasury has exercised his option, then certainly the Senator from Delaware must admit that he has used his discretion badly, because the result of his option and his discretion as he has used them has been to cause a disparity and to make the disparity greater with each exercise of that option.

Mr. GRAY. On the contrary, I believe that the use by the Secretary of the Treasury of his discretion has thus far maintained the parity, and is the only thing which has maintained it.

Mr. BUTLER. He has succeeded in making the bullion value of silver come down by discriminating against it, for the Senator knows that the only way to increase the bullion value is by treating it equally and fairly with gold, and in this connection I quote the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] in his Elmira speech, when he laid down the proposition that nothing had ever made the bullion value of silver equal to gold but treating it equally and fairly at the mints with gold.

Mr. BACON. Referring again to the act of 1890—and I say that the act of 1893 was practically a repetition of the same declaration on the part of the Government—it directly asserts the policy of the Government to maintain at the present ratio, 16 to 1 (that much-derided phrase in the act of 1890—it does not say 16 to 1, but it says present legal ratio, and that is 16 to 1), the parity between the legal-tender gold coin and the legal-tender silver coin by the exercise of this option on the part of the Government, and by refusing to permit the creditor to exercise his option in the premises. It not only asserts the general public policy as to the payment of all its obligations, but it unqualifiedly commands the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise that option in the payment of the Treasury notes to be issued under that act.

The recent contention is that parity between the gold legal-tender coin and the silver legal-tender coin is to be only maintained in the same way that parity is maintained between a gold dollar and a paper dollar, and that is by giving to the creditor the right to choose which of them he will receive in payment of his debt. But the recognized construction of the law for more than fifteen years and the plain assertion and command of the act of 1890 was that parity between the gold dollar and the silver dollar was to be maintained by treating each as standard money and by requiring the creditor to receive either which the Government in its discretion might choose to offer him.

With all respect to those who differ with me, it is to my mind an absurdity to call that a parity between two coins which permits a creditor to refuse to receive the one and gives him the right to demand the other. But however this may be in theory, the law recognized in practice by the executive department, which gives to the public creditor the right to demand and receive gold to the exclusion of legal-tender silver, is law made by the executive department and not by the constitutional lawmaking department. The making of this law by Executive order and the enforcement of it in practice, is a plain, palpable, undeniable usurpation of legislative functions by the officer of the executive department. It is not only without the sanction of the legislative department, but is directly in conflict with the laws which it has passed and with the resolutions which it has adopted.

It is not, however, my purpose in this connection to discuss at length the question whether the Secretary of the Treasury has or has not violated the spirit and intent of the law in the issuance of bonds to procure gold for the public creditor when there was at the time of such issue legal-tender coin in the Treasury with which to redeem the greenbacks. For the purposes of this argument that is not an essential question for determination at this time. Whatever may be the proper construction of this bond law in this regard, the reason and the necessity for its repeal are none the less imperative.

If it be conceded for the purposes of this argument that he has strictly pursued the law and has in no manner departed from its intent, the proposition is none the less beyond successful dispute that the exercise by an executive officer of the power in his discretion to create debt, and compel taxation, and force appropriations by Congress, is a violation of the plain intent of the Constitution. For Congress to permit such a statute to remain unrepealed is an abdication of its high prerogatives and an abandonment of its duty. Nay, more; to stand inert and submissive while the executive department, undisguisedly indifferent to the will of Congress, issues bonds and piles up debt upon the people to the amount of hundreds of millions of dollars, must necessarily bring into disrepute the legislative branch of the Government, and utterly destroy the respect to which its high office and its legitimate authority rightfully entitle it in the public esteem.

The great distinguishing feature between a despotism and a free government is the presence of a representative legislative branch, freely chosen by the people, and acting in the discharge of its legitimate legislative functions without hindrance, restraints, or attempted encroachment by the executive department. In every government, however despotic, there is found the executive department, and, as a practical necessity, also a judicial department. But a free representative legislature, free in its selection and free in the exercise of its powers, is only found in a free government, and wherever found there exists free government. The presence of the one insures the existence of the other. To the degree in which the executive department encroaches upon the legislative powers, or in which the legislative department voluntarily or carelessly surrenders its powers to the executive department, to the same degree is there a departure from the standard of a free representative government. It is a delusion to conclude that free government is assured by the mere existence of a representative branch, nominally and formally performing legislative functions. It has been my fortune to look upon a legislative assembly in which the members had been practically designated and chosen by the executive, and in which during several sittings witnessed by myself the bills which were presented for action, and which had been prepared by the executive department, elicited from no member present either motion, or suggestion, or comment. When these bills were put upon their passage, the roll call in every instance failed to show a single negative vote. And more than that, during those several sittings there was never, by any member, a motion, a suggestion, or a discussion upon any subject or measure. They did not meet to deliberate, or to discuss, or to legislate, but only to obey the executive orders. They simply voted unanimously in the affirmative upon the bills which had been prepared for them, and adjourned. Although nominally a representative legislative body, they were in fact but the agents to register in the form of law the arbitrary edicts of the executive.

Now, Mr. President, it is not to be feared that any legislative body in the United States will ever be reduced to such slavish subserviency to Executive will and dictation. Such a condition is an impossibility to men of our race. There is certainly no present indication that they will be reduced to silence. But while it is not to be apprehended that we will ever reach such an extreme, it is not to be denied that whenever there is a surrender by the legislature to the Executive of any of the power belonging to the former, to that extent there is such subserviency. In the domain of Federal legislation, among the most important subjects are the creation of public debt, the levying and collection of taxes, and appropriation to expenditure of the money thus collected from the people. And when we permit to stand unrepealed the law which in a very large measure practically abandons to the executive department the legislative functions in regard to these important subjects, we stand in our subserviency, as repects them, in no better position than does the legislative body of which I have spoken, and which as to all measures of legislation simply obeys the command of the Executive.

At this very session, and I am glad to see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations sitting before me when I make the assertion, in the appropriation bills are found $10,000,000 in round numbers to pay the annual interest on the $262,000,000 of bonds which within the past two years have been issued by the executive department under this law. Can it be said that in the appropriation of this $10,000,000 of interest Congress has done anything more than carry out the edict of the executive department?

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. None of the appropriation bills provides interest on the public debt. That interest is provided by a law passed in 1862, which carries continuous appropriations for interest on the public debt without any intervention of Congress.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. So we have not dealt with that question at all.

Mr. BACON. I understand that. What I mean is that the whole matter of appropriations is within the control of Congress, and that act as well as any other act is within the control of Congress, and whenever the Congress makes no change in the act appropriating money, of course it recognizes the propriety of payment under the act, because if there were an impropriety it would certainly recognize it and correct it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations, except by the consent of the Senate, to propose new legislation.

Mr. BACON. I did not say the Appropriations Committee did this. The Senator from Iowa misunderstood me.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator to say we had put these provisions in appropriation bills.

Mr. BACON. I am simply calling attention to the fact that a large amount of money, to wit, $10,000,000, which will represent in round numbers the interest accruing upon the $262,000,000 of bonds issued, is an amount of interest that this Congress is bound to recognize, and it has to make provision for the payment of it. It can not exercise any discretion, either to interfere with any existing law or to make any new provision which would interfere with it in any way. That law is under the control of Congress, as any other law is. I think it ought to stand. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] must not misunderstand me about that. I am speaking of the fact that this is a debt which has been created by Executive order; that it did not originate in any specific legislative enactment. I am simply illustrating the fact that in the creation of the debt by Executive order there is the practical absorption of the legislative functions by the executive department; that when it creates the debt, which must be paid, Congress no longer has any discretion as to whether it will pay it, and it is the same thing as if the executive department had power to order its payment. That is the purpose for which I alluded to it.

The national honor requires that this interest on these bonds shall be paid. Whenever the principal debt is created by the Executive in issuing bonds, Congress has no discretion, but is under compulsion to appropriate money for the purpose, and is under equal compulsion to collect from the people by taxation the necessary amount of money. And so on to the end, until the maturity of these bonds issued by the Executive, Congress, without the exercise of any discretion and under compulsion, must each year levy taxes and practically make appropriation to the amount of $10,000,000 to pay this annual interest until the aggregate of interest will amount to more than $250,000,000. And at the end, the principal debt of $262,000,000 must also be paid, and the people must be taxed to this amount without the exercise of any discretion or will on the part of Congress, but under direct, absolute compulsion to levy the taxes and appropriate the money.

Mr. President, of course it must be recognized that not only in the case of these particular bonds issued through Executive order, but also in the case of bonds issued by specific act of Congress, the national honor is pledged and the principal and interest must be paid, that there can be the exercise of no discretion by Congress as to such payment, and that the Congress in office at the time of their maturity is under an obligation which can not be disregarded to provide the necessary money and to appropriate the same to such payment.

But the two cases are radically different. In each case it is the obligation of the original contract which takes away from Congress any future discretion as to the appropriation of money for its payment. In the latter case the obligation of the contract is the creation of Congress, and this obligation is subsequently discharged by Congress. The original obligation to pay, contracted through the exercise of the discretion and will of Congress, and the final payment by Congress, are in their beginning and ending the acts of the legislative department, acting throughout within its constitutional functions.

But in the former case, where the executive officer acts in his discretion under a power delegated by a general law, the executive department alone exercises the discretion and the will by which the obligation is created, and under which the compulsion of payment is laid upon Congress.

It is too plain for serious dispute that in the issuance of bonds under this existing law, and in the exercise of his discretion and will in such issuance, asking neither yea or nay of anyone, the executive officer practically performs the legislative functions in the creation of debt, and in the taxation and appropriation required for the discharge of that debt.

In a great matter vitally affecting the interest of the people, the protection of which has by the Constitution been particularly and exclusively confided as a duty to the legislative department, the Executive commands, and Congress has but to obey. In truth, Mr. President, the office performed by Congress in this regard hardly rises to the dignity of obedience. This highest legislative body becomes scarcely more than the pawn moved upon the governmental chessboard by the Executive hand.

The legislative is, under the Constitution, the highest branch of this Government. To it the officers of all other branches of the Government are answerable as to a tribunal of final power. To it have been committed by the Constitution the great governmental functions and powers, with the particular design and intent that they shall not be exercised by the Executive; that, wrested as they were from the grasp of kings, these powers should never again be within the control of any one man. Upon those clothed with these high prerogatives rests the strongest obligation to carefully see to it that the exercise of these great powers, or of any one of them, shall not intentionally, or through inadvertence, pass from the legislative to the executive department.

It may seem idle to seriously discuss the encroachment by the Executive upon the legislative department; but it is not without significance not only that Congress should contentedly acquiesce in the practical and continued exercise of the most important legislative functions by the executive department through the means of this bond law, but that a subaltern in the Treasury Department should openly set at naught the commands of regularly enacted law, and no movement be made in Congress to return him by the shortest route to the avocations of private life.

It bodes no good to the constitutional limitations of the great departments of our Government that such things can be. The cloud on the horizon may not be larger than a man's hand, but it is plainly discernible, and it may in time overspread the entire heavens.

From exercising legislative functions by the executive department it is but one step to the influence and control of elections by the same department, and the control of the elections by the executive department means the absolute domination and dictation of legislation.

The time when encroachment upon right should be resisted is in its beginning. The point at which to grapple with an invader is where he first sets foot upon the border.

Mr. President, what has been already done under this bond law can not be undone. The evil which has already been accomplished must be endured. The mountain of debt which has been piled up on the people must be borne for the period of a generation, and every year during that full period the earnings of every branch of industry must be taxed for its payment. This enormous and unnecessary debt has added not one dollar of value to the products of the field, of the mine, of the factory, or of the fruits of any other productive enterprise. And yet it must be paid by the people of this country to the last dollar, principal and interest, aggregating the vast sum of more than $500,000,000; and among all the people there is no one who is personally so poor or whose avocation is so humble but what he will each year pay his portion of it. Out of the pittance of the poor as well as out of the abundance of the rich the Government will each year collect a tax for the payment of the principal and interest of this bonded debt thus created by Executive order. No one will escape. Each and every one in the whole land must pay his portion.

But however fixed and irretrievable is this calamity of the past, the fact can not be too strongly emphasized that if this bond law is permitted to stand unrepealed, Congress, in so doing, with the full knowledge of its practical operation, is deliberately and designedly surrendering to the executive department for the future the legislative power over the great and vital subjects of contraction of debt, the levying of taxes, and the appropriation of money. Not only so, but in refusing to repeal this bond law, Congress will furthermore be consenting that for the sole purpose of maintaining the gold standard, a still further bonded debt of hundreds of millions of dollars is hereafter to be added to the five hundred millions of principal and interest already contracted through Executive order to be paid for this purpose. And yet more; in refusing to repeal this bond law Congress will be also consenting that the greenback currency shall be withdrawn from circulation to the same amount for which bonds are issued. Congress must be assumed to consent to that which it knows will certainly occur when it refuses to exercise the power it has to prevent it.

There is no one so credulous as to believe that with this bond law unrepealed the issuance of bonds by the executive department has ended. It is not to be doubted that more bonds are to be issued for the same purpose that they have been issued for in the past. We have the word of the Chief Executive that these bonds have been issued to maintain the gold standard, and not for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Government. I have, upon a former occasion in the Senate, quoted this statement of the President, and I quote it again, because, in my opinion, the fact can not be too strongly or too often pressed home to the knowledge and the realization of the people that this stupendous debt of $262,000,000, which with the interest will amount to more than $500,000,000, has been laid upon their weary shoulders, not to pay any debt of the Government, not to pay any expenses of the Government, but solely and exclusively to maintain the gold standard. Whatever may have been the disposition made of any part of the proceeds of these bonds, the assertion of the President is that they were issued to maintain gold payments.

The President in his last annual message, sent in December, at the opening of Congress, said what I will insert in my remarks. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it. I have the passage marked here, and any Senator can see it. I shall incorporate it in my speech.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me the Senator from Georgia should at this point state that from $136,000,000 to $139,000,000 of the money thus borrowed has gone to pay the current expenses of the Government.

Mr. BACON. In a subsequent part of my speech, which I have nearly reached, I will discuss that very question; and I think that furnishes one of the very strongest arguments which can be used in favor of the repeal of the law.

Mr. ALLISON. The reason why I call the Senator's attention to it is because I understood him to say a moment ago that all the money had been used for the maintenance of the gold standard.

Mr. BACON. No, sir; the Senator from Iowa misunderstood me. I said that whatever disposition had been made of the money, the issuance of the bonds had been for the purpose solely of maintaining the gold standard. I have here marked the extract from the President's last annual message in which he makes that statement, and which I did not propose to occupy the time of the Senate in reading, because I am satisfied everybody recollects it, and I simply proposed to incorporate it in my remarks. I think, however, that the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Iowa is one of the most pertinent ones connected with the whole question, and I hope I may have the opportunity before concluding to present some views to him upon that subject. This is what the President said in his last annual message:

> It is possible that the suggestion of increased revenue as a remedy for the difficulties we are considering may have originated in an intimation or distinct allegation that the bonds which have been issued ostensibly to replenish our gold reserve were really issued to supply insufficient revenue. Nothing can be further from the truth. Bonds were issued to obtain gold for the maintenance of our national credit. As has been shown, the gold thus obtained has been drawn again from the Treasury upon United States notes and Treasury notes. This operation would have been promptly prevented if possible; but these notes having thus been passed to the Treasury, they became the money of the Government, like any other ordinary Government funds, and there was nothing to do but to use them in paying Government expenses when needed.
> At no time when bonds have been issued has there been any consideration of the question of paying the expenses of Government with their proceeds. There was no necessity to consider that question. At the time of each bond issue we had a safe surplus in the Treasury for ordinary operations, exclusive of the gold in our reserve. In February, 1894, when the first issue of bonds was made, such surplus amounted to over $18,000,000; in November, when the second issue was made, it amounted to more than $42,000,000, and in February, 1895, when bonds for the third time were issued, such surplus amounted to more than $100,000,000. It now amounts to $98,072,420.30.
> Besides all this, the Secretary of the Treasury had no authority whatever to issue bonds to increase the ordinary revenues or pay current expenses.

This relates to the first three bond issues and states the amount of surplus in the Treasury at the date of each of them. Since the date of that message $100,000,000 more of bonds have been issued for the same purpose, and at the date of that last issue the Treasurer's account showed the balance in hand of about $180,000,000. So that even if we had the guaranty of a large continuing balance in our favor in the Treasury, it would be no defense against the future issue of bonds if this law remains in force. One hundred and eighty millions of dollars in the Treasury in February last did not protect the people against the issue of $100,000,000 of bonds, and a like amount in the Treasury in the future will be equally impotent to protect them against an equal or greater issue of bonds within the next few months.

It can not be too often repeated that the people of the United States have been, through an Executive order, loaded with a debt of $262,000,000, besides an equal amount in interest, as the money price they have been required to pay for maintaining the gold standard for a little more than two years; and there is every indication that in the succeeding twelve months there will be added to this another payment by the people of certainly $100,000,000 of bonds, and probably twice that amount. This tribute which the people have already been compelled to pay in time of peace, solely to maintain the gold standard, added to the additional payments which, in all probability, will be exacted of them in another year, will, with the accruing interest, equal the amount which Germany, with the pent-up animosity of a century, exacted as a ransom from France when she lay crushed and helpless at the mercy of her hereditary foe.

While one creditor has as much right as another to demand gold, it is nevertheless true that, with one exception, all the creditors of the Government, excepting only one class, are content to be paid in silver, and, with that exception, practically all of them are now paid in silver or silver certificates. But whenever this favored class of public creditors, those who seem to be the chief objects of the concern and solicitude of the Government, those who toil neither in the field, nor in the mine, nor in the factory, nor in the workshop, but who each year gather untold wealth for themselves out of the products of the toilers in these and other spheres of productive industry, when they demand gold it is given them, and then more bonds are issued to gather in more gold, to be again paid to this class when they call for it. Under this law and its practical operation as administered by the executive department, our people are to be buried neck deep in debt in order that we may say to this favored class, and through them to all the world, "Here is gold; come and get it."

Each time the gold is drawn out the load of public debt is increased in fabulous amounts; each time the greenbacks and Treasury notes to an equal amount are locked up in the Treasury. At the same time that the public indebtedness is increased, the currency of the country is contracted. When the last bond issue was made in February, one hundred millions of the paper currency of the country was withdrawn from the circulation of the country and locked up in the Treasury, and more than that amount is there to-day, practically useless for the business needs of the country, while a corresponding amount of interest-bearing debt is demanding and exacting increased tribute from the people. There has already begun the outflow of the gold gathered into the Treasury but yesterday at such stupendous cost. Thirteen million dollars of it has gone, and of this $8,000,000 went in the past week.

Is there a Senator who doubts the fact that this drain of gold will continue and that within a few months it will be gone, and that under the existing law and the established practice of the executive department another hundred millions of bonds is again to be soon issued? It is not to be denied that in the withdrawal of the gold another hundred millions of greenbacks will be locked up in the Treasury. This hundred millions added to the amount already there and to the reserves will make more than $250,000,000 which, if this bond law stands unrepealed, will within the next few months be hidden away in the Treasury vaults and practically destroyed to the business purposes and necessities of the country. This is one-half of the whole paper currency of the Government. There is a most powerful and active element in the country, under the lead of the Chief Executive of the Government, openly advocating the retirement and cancellation of all the greenbacks and Treasury notes without any provision of law substituting any other currency therefor. To lock this currency up in the Treasury will effect their purpose as thoroughly as would be accomplished by their cancellation. When thus withdrawn from circulation and hidden away in the Treasury vaults, these bills are as effectually destroyed for all business purposes as if given to the flames and reduced to ashes.

Those who favor the retirement of our paper currency have the pecuniary means with which to accomplish this practical retirement by two or three successive withdrawals of the gold reserve, at each time paying into the Treasury a like amount of greenbacks and Treasury notes to be added to the hidden store in the Treasury vaults. The bond law remaining unrepealed upon the statute book gives the opportunity for this practical destruction of the paper currency of the Government. It has already been partially accomplished. Unless in the repeal of this bond law we arrest the further progress, it can not be doubted that in the near future it will be accomplished in a much larger degree, if not in its totality.

In his last annual message the President recommended to Congress the retirement and cancellation of the greenbacks and the issuance of interest-bearing bonds in lieu thereof. The proposition was unqualifiedly condemned by the utterances of Senators and Representatives of every political party in Congress, and never commanded sufficient support to secure even the introduction of a bill to carry it into effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Senator from Georgia will suspend a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, "That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895."

Mr. PLATT. If there is no objection, I should hope that the resolution might be laid aside temporarily to allow the Senator from Georgia to conclude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BACON. I am much obliged for the courtesy of the Senator from Connecticut. I will state that I have occupied very much more time than I anticipated because I have been led off into side discussions, to which I had no objection except in the interest of time.

What Congress refused to do by legislation, and what ordinarily could not have been accomplished without legislation, the executive department has, under the existing bond law, accomplished to the amount of one hundred millions of dollars by an executive order. The tide has already turned; the process of repetition has already begun, and in a brief period of time another hundred of millions of greenbacks will be retired by another Executive order, not only without legislative enactment, but in the face of the refusal of Congress to make such legislative enactment. And here again we have, in the practical operation of this unrepealed bond law, the legislative power practically put into the hands of the Executive, and the practical abandonment by Congress of the high legislative functions exclusively confided to it by the Constitution. Under this law not only has the Executive the powers properly belonging exclusively to the legislative branch—to contract debt, to force the levying of taxes, and the making of appropriations—but also the power to retire and practically destroy for business purposes the greenback currency as effectually as if canceled by an act of Congress. This is the practical exercise by the executive department of the highest legislative functions.

There is still another feature of this bond law in its practical operation under which the executive department exercises powers properly and exclusively belonging to the legislative department.

And now I come to the particular part to which the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] called my attention, and I beg his attention to the suggestion which I have to make upon it, because it seems to me to be of the most vital character for the consideration of Congress.

Under the provisions of this law all money arising from the sale of bonds is paid into the general fund in the Treasury and is subject to be paid out by the Secretary under any appropriation made by Congress. That is recognized by everybody. There is no denial of the fact that money arising from the sale of bonds is so deposited in the general fund and has been paid out for general purposes.

The Senator from Iowa states that $139,000,000 of it has been so paid. Senators on this floor within the past few days in the discussion of the appropriation bills have warned the Senate that excessive appropriations would result in the issuance of more bonds, thus recognizing that the Executive in the issuance of bonds under the existing law is, indirectly by this means, through a mere Executive order, contracting debt, the money arising from which is devoted to the payment of the expenses of the Government. The President in his last annual message emphatically states that there is no authority in the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds for this purpose, and yet under the existing law now sought to be repealed, there is the exercise of this authority by which, through an Executive order, debt is contracted and the money realized from the same is applied to the payment of the current expenses of the Government.

Now, here is the important consideration which I suggest in this connection: There can be no question that under the Constitution it is the duty, and exclusive power of Congress, to provide the money with which the expenses of the Government are paid, and it matters not in this regard whether the money is provided by loan, or by revenue from taxation. In either case the power and the duty and the responsibility in this regard are those of Congress alone. Any law, or device, or evasion by which this money is provided by the executive department, without direct legislative authority for that purpose, is an encroachment upon the legislative power, and is distinctly a violation of the Constitution, both in its letter and in its spirit.

Sir, I have said that a free representative branch is the distinguishing feature of a free government. I will go further and say that a fundamental principle in every such free government is that the legislative department shall control the raising of all the money needed by the government, and that the executive head shall not have the power to raise a dollar by taxation, forced loan, or otherwise, except by the consent of the representative branch of the government. It is of the very essence of free government that this should be so. It is the vital principle that the hand which wields the sword shall not control the purse. In the maintenance of this great principle those from whom we have derived our laws and our free institutions, have counted treasure as but dross, and blood as no more than water.

A denial of this principle and its practical overthrow, is an attack which passes the outer works and assaults the inner defenses of free representative government.

From the highest official source in this Government, and upon an historic occasion during the present week, we have heard the following:

> The perpetuity of our popular government depends upon our fidelity to the principles upon which it rests.

It was the utterance of a great political truth, and there is no principle more fundamental to those free institutions than that which requires that the executive head shall have no power to raise any money for the support of the Government, or for the payment of its expenses, but that all such power shall be exercised alone by the legislature.

Mr. PEFFER. Allow me to interrupt the Senator just at this point. I wish to call attention to the fact that whatever responsibility may rest upon the Senate in this matter, two years ago and more, immediately after the first issue of bonds, I took occasion to call attention to the matter in the Senate. I delivered an address of some length, pursuing the same line of argument that the Senator has to-day. So whatever responsibility may rest upon the Senate, the Populists are clear.

Mr. BACON. I regret that I have not had the opportunity to read the speech of the distinguished Senator from Kansas, otherwise it might not have been necessary for me to occupy so much of the time of the Senate in repeating what probably the Senator has already better said.

Mr. PEFFER. I did not intend to make such an allusion. I am delighted with the Senator's remarks. I am very much interested.

Mr. BACON. I am much obliged.

Mr. President, there is a wide difference in the views of various Senators relative to the issuance of bonds, and especially with reference to the issuance of bonds to maintain the gold standard. There are those who think bonds should be issued and sold whenever the gold in the Treasury has, under our suicidal system, with recurrent periodicity been drawn out below a certain point. There are others of us who think that no bonds should be issued in time of peace, except perhaps in making provision for the public defense, where the emergency may demand it. And especially do those of this class think that no debt of hundreds of millions of dollars should be heaped up on the people of this and future generations through the issuance of bonds to replenish a gold reserve, so long as there is in the Treasury a sufficiency of legal-tender coin which the Government itself receives in the payment of all dues to it.

But, Mr. President, it matters not, so far as the question now under consideration is concerned, whether Senators are of opinion that bonds should or should not be issued. The point is, that even if it be proper that bonds should be issued, their issuance should be authorized and controlled by Congress alone, and that the executive department should not have the power which is now exercised to issue bonds without restraint and without limit. Why, sir, when the last issue of one hundred millions was about to be made, it was generally reported that the executive department contemplated the issuance of either one hundred millions, or two hundred millions of bonds. The public and Congress were in doubt which amount it would be. The Congress of the United States, invested by the Constitution with the duty and the responsibility of all legislation of every kind and degree, and especially charged with the direct control of all matters affecting the contraction of debt and the expenditure of money, sat here while this question so gravely affecting the public interest was being decided at the other end of the Avenue. Senators and Representatives, clothed with the high functions giving the right and imposing the duty to control this matter in its every detail, had no more connection with it, and no more influence over it, than the Lords and Commons of the British Parliament. And if to-morrow morning, or the day after we shall have adjourned and hurried away to attend political conventions, it were announced that the executive department had determined to issue one hundred millions, or two, or even three hundred millions of bonds, so long as this bond law remains unrepealed, where is the power to say it nay?

Mr. President, is it to be recognized as the permanent policy of this Government that the executive department is to exercise in its discretion the power to contract debt and to issue bonds? Is Congress for all time to surrender to the executive department this high legislative prerogative which the Constitution says shall be exercised only by Congress? If not, there is no time like the present for the repeal of this law. If the propositions I have discussed are sound, the time can not come too quickly when Congress shall reassume its constitutional legislative functions, and confine the executive department within its legitimate sphere of duty and of power. I repeat, that either in our action or nonaction the responsibility for the future issuance or nonissuance of bonds is upon us, and can not be escaped by us.

Mr. President, we spend days and weeks discussing questions of appropriation and of expenditure. Shall we be silent, either in speech or in vote, when there is presented the great issue—shall any one man be invested for the future with the more than royal power, in his discretion and without limit, to burden the people with debt to untold millions, and shall the executive department be clothed with the most important legislative functions conferred by the Constitution upon Congress! Let the record show in their votes how Senators and Representatives, and how the political parties they represent, stand upon this vital question.

TO PROHIBIT THE FURTHER ISSUE OF BONDS WITHOUT THE ADVICE AND CONSENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, we have just heard from the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] a very able, timely, and patriotic speech on a very important question. His argument showing that the Secretary of the Treasury has no power under existing law to issue bonds is conclusive to my mind; but a number of Senators, or rather only a few, I trust, including the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], claim that the Secretary of the Treasury has that power. As the Senator from Georgia, however, has shown, even the President of the United States himself admits in an official document that the authority is not clear, that it is doubtful authority, and that he hesitated to issue bonds under such questionable legal authority.

But there are other points in the Senator's speech which are beyond controversy. When he proceeded to show that when Congress——

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that in each instance where I spoke of the power of issuing bonds under the bond law I qualified it by saying "as construed by the executive department."

Mr. BUTLER. Exactly. I fully concur with the argument which the Senator made upon that point, and I have no doubt his argument was conclusive; but there is controversy on that point, though there is no controversy on the point made by the Senator, to the effect that Congress is responsible for the issue of those bonds so long as we sit still and allow the Executive to use the questionable authority to issue bonds. Not only that, but the Senator from Georgia made it clear that it was the duty of every Senator upon this floor, whether he favored or opposed the issue of bonds, to take back this power and responsibility to the legislative branch of the Government in Congress, where they belong, and prohibit the Executive from piling up a limitless amount of debt upon this country to be paid by future generations. In my opinion Congress has no power under the Constitution to delegate such power to the Executive, and if it has done so we should make haste to correct such a grave and dangerous error.

Another point which the Senator made clear was that if Congress did not act, if Congress did not by positive enactment tell the Executive he should not issue further bonds, before the next session of Congress we shall have another issue of bonds of $100,000,000; and possibly $200,000,000 of bonds.

The Senator called attention to how much gold was being drawn out of the Treasury by the exercise of this "endless chain" business that has been started up. He truthfully called attention to the fact that over $1,000,000 a day is now being drawn out without anything to show for it. I have here a statement from an Associated Press dispatch, under date of May 13, which shows that over $49,000,000 has been drawn out through this endless-chain process since February 1. I will ask the Secretary to read that press dispatch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY GOLD RESERVE $114,000,000—LOSS SINCE FEBRUARY 1, $49,000,000.

WASHINGTON, May 13.

The withdrawals of gold from the Treasury to-day were $1,535,900, which reduces the Treasury gold reserve to $114,456,381. The last bond issue of $100,000,000 in February raised the reserve to $128,000,000, but since that point was touched the reserve has steadily declined. All the gold due from that bond issue—$111,000,000—with the exception of $600,000 has been paid into the Treasury. Since February 1 last the Treasury has lost $49,000,000 in gold. The loss this month has been $11,500,000, and since the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, 1895, $140,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, every Senator receives a statement issued by the Treasury Department every morning. If he will notice the first figures to the right, marked with a star, he will observe that for the last week or more there has been more than a million dollars of this gold reserve withdrawn every day, and there is every indication that that will increase. How long will it be, with this drain of gold from the Treasury, before the Executive will issue more bonds? Will Congress sit still? Shall we adjourn this session without putting some check upon the Executive in this matter? If we at least do not make some effort, as the Senator from Georgia has so ably and timely said, then every Senator who does not go on record against this monstrous business stands responsible with the Executive for such action.

The Senate has passed a resolution, introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], to investigate the last bond deals. This was proper. Now let us prohibit the further issue of bonds without the consent of Congress, so that there will be no more bond scandals to investigate.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] timely called attention to the position of the People's Party on this question. We stand ready at any hour to give six votes to either side that will stop this debt-increasing and currency-contraction infamy; and in order to test this matter, I ask now, Mr. President, that a day be fixed when this body will take up the bill which I have introduced and pass it, or at least consider it. I ask the Secretary to read the bill, so that Senators will know what it is.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 1341) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the issuance of interest-bearing bonds of the United States for any purpose whatever without further authority of Congress is hereby prohibited.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Secretary to state when that bill was introduced.

The SECRETARY. Introduced January 3, 1896, by Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. BUTLER. I gave notice that I should call up that bill for consideration on the 11th of March. At that time there were several privileged questions before the Senate, one of those being the Du Pont case, which is now before the body and will be decided this evening at 5 o'clock.

Mr. President, out of consideration for the appropriation bills and the questions of privilege before the Senate I have not called up this bill heretofore, but I wish now to ask unanimous consent to call up the bill to-morrow morning for consideration immediately after the finishing of the morning routine business.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has given notice that he will call up his joint resolution to amend the Constitution, unless prevented by the consideration of an appropriation bill. I have already given notice that at the conclusion of that matter I should bring forward a bill, which has been on our files for some time, relating to the punishment for contempts. Those are notices which have been given here, and I therefore shall object to anything else coming in between them.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the notice given by the Senator from Oregon places the consideration of his joint resolution after House bill 8109, which is the appropriation bill for fortifications and other defenses. Therefore, I ask for this bill to come up to-morrow at 2 o'clock. This will not interfere with the notice given by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HILL. I have also given notice that I should move, if there is any opportunity between appropriation bills, to take up another bill. I ask that the Secretary read my notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice given by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

May 13, 1896.—By Mr. HILL: That at the first opportunity he would call up for consideration S. 2984, in relation to contempts of court.

Mr. HILL. Therefore I shall object to the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, Mr. President, I wish to make another proposition for unanimous consent. I ask that when the pending appropriation bill——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I wish to say to the Senator that I shall be compelled to call for the regular order on which we have agreed to vote to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I will make one other request, and then I shall give way. The last appropriation bill now before the Senate is the appropriation bill providing for the expenses of the District of Columbia. The others are still in committee, and have not been reported. I ask unanimous consent that the bill I have introduced shall be taken up immediately after the disposition of the District appropriation bill. The Senator from New York will have an opportunity between now and then——

Mr. HILL. I object to farming out the time of the Senate in advance. The Senator can at some interval move to take up his bill, and test the sense of the Senate upon that proposition; but I object to a unanimous-consent agreement, which must give way to appropriation bills, and give way to other notices which have been given in advance. I shall not only object to the consideration of the Senator's bill, but to the consideration of any other bill which purports to put measures so far in advance.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when he wishes to take up the District appropriation bill, which is the next appropriation bill now before us?

Mr. TELLER. I am in charge of the District appropriation bill, and I desire to have it taken up very soon, in a few moments, if there is no objection to it.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator desire to take it up to-day?

Mr. TELLER. If I can.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, I give notice now that I shall move after——

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator that I have agreed to yield to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to call up a bill concerning gas and electric lighting in the District, because of the importance of that being disposed of before we pass the District appropriation bill. We wish to have that bill passed, because we have undertaken to deal with the matter in the District appropriation bill, and it is better that we should have that bill acted upon so as to be able to deal with the subject more intelligently on the appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, I give notice that, at the conclusion of the District appropriation bill or when that bill goes into conference, I shall move to take up for consideration and final action the bill which I have just had read.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. ALLEN. I rise for the purpose of asking a question, if the Senator from Oregon will permit me.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I yield for a moment.

Mr. ALLEN. Not particularly to ask a question, but to state a little matter of history in conjunction with the bill which has just been under discussion.

This measure is not new in this Chamber. In 1894, before the first bond issue, which was in February following, I introduced a bill in the Senate and had it referred to the Committee on Finance, to repeal the provisions of the resumption act of 1875 authorizing the issuance of bonds. The Committee on Finance at that time was in the hands of the Democratic party. The bill was never reported; it was never either reported favorably or reported unfavorably; it did not meet the dignity of a report one way or the other in that committee. I introduced before that time a resolution, and discussed it in January, 1894, with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], declaring that the resumption act of 1875 had been repealed by fulfillment, and expressly repealed by the act of May 31, 1878. No action was taken. The Democratic party then was in possession of this Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. I have read the Senator's very able argument on that question, and it seems to me it ought to have convinced the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. During this Congress, not to exceed five or six weeks ago—I do not recall the bill; it was one of the appropriation bills, however—I offered an amendment to that bill, declaring that the President or the Secretary of the Treasury should not issue bonds without Congressional action, which, of course, amounted to an implied repeal of the act of 1875, and Democrats and Republicans alike joined in voting down that amendment. Now, it is a singular discovery that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has made over two years after I pointed out in this Chamber that this system of redemption which Mr. Cleveland now calls——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon rose.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall not disturb the Senator from Oregon, as I shall be through in a moment.

As to the system which Mr. Cleveland now calls "the endless chain," I had pointed out before that time, in 1894, the consequences that would follow this system of redemption; and with the permission of the Senate, I desire to refer briefly to what was said on that occasion. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 25, 1894, page 1379, as follows:

Let me illustrate the monstrous result of such a construction—

Speaking of the construction of the resumption act of 1875—

Suppose the banks of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia should combine to deplete the Treasury of its gold, as they could and are likely to do, and each week purchase and present at the Treasury Department for redemption the entire volume of outstanding legal-tender notes. Under the construction given the law by the Secretary of the Treasury these notes are redeemable in gold. It would be the duty of the Secretary to pay the entire sum in gold, which would take $346,681,016 weekly. In one year they would be able to take out, by this weekly redemption, $18,027,413,832, and in the four years that cover the term of office of the Secretary of the Treasury they would be able to take out $72,109,651,328, and the Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled to issue interest-bearing bonds to this amount to replace the coin thus paid out. This is the position to which every Senator who espouses Mr. Carlisle's construction of the statute is driven.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I feel obliged to call for the regular order. The Senator will remember there is to be a vote at 5 o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. I will speak to the regular order just a moment, then.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There are some speeches to be made on the Du Pont case.

Mr. PLATT. I believe I have the floor on the regular order.

Mr. ALLEN. I had just a word more which I wanted to quote. However, let it go. I did not suppose the Senator from Oregon would want to chop this important history up into bits.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Of course not; but the Senator from Nebraska knows that there is an order, by unanimous consent, that we shall take an important vote or votes this evening at 5 o'clock. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has the floor on that question, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] desires to address the Senate, and perhaps there may be some other remarks. Under the circumstances stated, the Senator certainly can not object.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand. I do not need to be catechised.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am not catechising; but the Senator comes back at me as if I had been guilty of some discourtesy.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know but that I think so.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

The pending question being on the amendment of Mr. TURPIE, to insert the word "not" before the word "entitled," and to strike out the last clause of the resolution; so as to read:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I had nearly concluded last evening all that I desired to say upon the proposition which I was discussing when I was asked to yield for the consideration of pension bills. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate to any great length this morning. The importance of that proposition seems, in my own opinion at least, to justify me in stating a little more fully what I conceive to be the power and the right of the Senate of the United States to make inquiry with regard to the election of its own members.

I had said that in my opinion there was no limitation upon the right and power of the Senate to make any inquiry relating to any essential question as to whether a person claiming a seat in the Senate had been properly or legally elected. The issue which is made by the minority of the committee in this case is, stated briefly, that the Senate can make no inquiry whatever as to the right of a member of the legislature of a State in either branch to have voted for a Senator, and by implication would go so far as to hold that we can not even inquire as to whether that vote was purchased or secured by any corrupt or fraudulent means.

I had said that, although the doctrine had never been pushed so far as claimed here except in one case, which is called the Turpie case, there had been in the utterances of majority and minority members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections a tendency to concede to some extent the doctrine that there was a limitation upon the power of the Senate to investigate and inquire and judge of the election of its own members. I do not think that any election case in the Senate has turned upon that question, however, except the Turpie case, to which I have alluded, and shall allude somewhat hereafter.

I had said last evening, or started to say, that I thought this tendency to remit to the State legislature or the separate houses thereof the exclusive right to determine who might vote and who was entitled to vote for a Senator grew out of a mistaken idea which prevailed in the early history of this country with regard to what was supposed to be the sovereignty of the States; that it was an utterance of the extreme doctrine of State rights; and the case from which I read, the case of Potter vs. Robbins, and the citations which I made from the majority of the committee and also from the views of the minority of the committee show that that doctrine was placed upon that idea of the absolute sovereignty of the States and the rights of the States. Admitting that the House of Representatives might inquire into the primary capacity, into the right of suffrage, the majority of the committee in the case of Potter vs. Robbins say that—

The right of the House of Representatives to judge of the elections of its own members "opens a much wider field of inquiry and investigation than a like contest for a seat in the Senate, which is a body wholly federative in its character and organization, and whose members hold their appointments from and represent the States as political sovereignties."

Mr. President, that is no longer the doctrine of the Republic. This Government is no longer a federation. It never was, strictly speaking, a federation. The idea that a Senator represents nothing but the political sovereignty called a State is no longer the doctrine of the Senate or of the Nation. "A body wholly federative in its character." What does "federative" mean? The word "federal" is synonymous with, or at least relates to, a treaty, a league, a compact, a confederacy. In the early history of our Government it was supposed that in its constitution and character it was simply a confederacy of States, a league, a compact between States, and not a Nation; but little by little that view has been combated in the Houses of Congress, before the people, and at last by the grand arbitrament of war, so that there is no longer an opportunity to say that this is a federative body merely. This is one branch of a National Government—admitted so now—and Senators do not, in the strict sense in which it was formerly asserted, represent merely the political sovereignty of the States.

The idea may have prevailed in earlier days that Senators represented what may be called the quasi corporation named a State; the political entity as distinguished from the people of the State; but Senators represent to-day, I think it will be admitted, as truly the people of a State as the member of the House of Representatives represents the people of the district from which he is elected. When a Senator comes here from a State he becomes something more than the mouthpiece of the corporation called a State or that thing which is designated as a political sovereignty. He becomes a member of a branch, which is a part of the National Legislature, and which has to do with every interest and with every man and with every question which may arise within the bounds of a great and magnificent Nation or affecting any one of its great number of people.

So it was, while it was thought necessary in those early days to assert the absolute sovereignty of the States and the limited character of representation by Senators of those political sovereignties, that this doctrine had its start. The circumstances which gave rise to it have disappeared; and yet it is sought here, after the disappearance of the circumstances and the opinions which gave rise to it, to insist upon its application to an extent that it has never been insisted upon in the history of the Senate. Gradually that idea thus contended for and, as Senators say, adopted in the case of Potter vs. Robbins, has been broken down in other respects. For instance, the majority of the committee claimed in that case, and the minority sanctioned the claim, that to admit that the Senate had power to judge of the legality of the votes cast for Senator—

> Would also lead to investigation into the motives of members in casting their votes for the purpose of establishing a charge of bribery or corruption in particular cases.

> These matters—

Referring to bribery and corruption—

> your committee think, properly belong to the tribunals of the State, and can not constitute the basis on which the Senate could, without an infringement of State sovereignty, claim the right to declare the election of a Senator void who possessed the requisite qualifications and was chosen according to the forms of law and the Constitution.

That was insisted upon just as truly and firmly as it was insisted that the question whether votes were legal or illegal, cast by members of the legislature, must be left to the legislature itself, and, if anything was decided, just as truly decided, and yet the Senate has abandoned that doctrine. In many cases we have considered the question whether Senators were elected by bribery, notably in a case in Kansas, where we investigated the question whether Pomeroy was elected by bribery, and in many other cases.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether in that case investigation was not as to whether it was by bribery of the members of the legislature?

Mr. PLATT. Bribery of the people who cast their votes for him. There is no sanctity attaching to the phrase "member of a legislature" any more than there is to the phrase "an elector." The members of the legislature are, it is true, the electors who take part in the election of a Senator, and now, to-day, this doctrine is sought to be carried to the extent that any person who is allowed to vote in a legislature upon the election of a Senator is entitled to vote because the legislature or the branch of the legislature will allow him to do so. Boiled down, as we say, that is the position which is stated here.

The proposition may be stated thus: That when one branch of a State legislature allows a person to vote for Senator the United States Senate has no power under the Constitution to inquire whether that person was legally entitled to vote, and if one branch of a State legislature prevents any person from voting the United States Senate has no power under the Constitution to inquire whether the vote of that person ought to have been received. This makes a single branch of a State legislature the sole judge of the election of United States Senators except that the mere formalities only of an election may be inquired into by this body. All inquiry as to the essentials of an election is thus denied to the United States and committed exclusively and conclusively to a single house of the State legislature.

I think I have not overstated the proposition which is contended for here, and the mere statement of it ought to be sufficient to excuse any further argument of its unsoundness. It is a proposition so at variance with the power committed to the Senate by the Constitution of the United States that it may be thought that I have overstated the doctrine as contended for here, and I shall therefore, without detaining the Senate at any length, call attention to some phrases to be found in the views of the minority of the committee, signed by Senators TURPIE, PUGH, GRAY, and PALMER.

> We think that the senate of the State of Delaware, whereof he was member, is the sole tribunal which could either hear or determine lawfully these objections to the qualifications of Senator Watson.

> The judgment of the [Delaware] senate is a finality.

> We have no authority to originate, hear, or determine any objections to the qualifications of those who acted and voted as members of the senate of the State, or to revise or review their action or nonaction in the premises.

Speaking of the case of Clark and McGinnis vs. Sanders and Power:

> These decisions and judgment of the Senate are founded upon the principle that the States, by constitutional ordinances, have made each house of the State legislature the judges of the elections and qualifications of their own members; it is ultra vires of our powers to revise, review, consider, or pass upon any questions of this character.
> Any adjudication by the Senate of the United States upon such a subject is beyond our province. Such action upon our part would be an intrusion, an interference, an unwarrantable usurpation of power vested in another body, ruinous to the autonomy of the States, and disastrous to the character of this body, whose members purport not to be chosen by their own action, but by that of the legislatures of the States.

And in summing up:

> Second. The senate of the State of Delaware had paramount and exclusive jurisdiction to adjudge such questions, and, whether they exercised such jurisdiction or not, the Senate of the United States has no jurisdiction in the premises.

Now, is it not the first essential of an election that nobody shall have cast a vote for the man claiming his seat which affected or changed the result who had not the constitutional right, under the laws of the State, to cast a vote; and are we to be denied jurisdiction of the essential element of an election, not because it has been actually passed upon by one of the houses of the legislature, but because one house of a legislature allowed that vote to be cast? Illustrations might be adduced here to show how futile and unfounded the claim is. The constitution of the State of Delaware requires, I think, without turning to it, that members of the legislature shall not be aliens, shall be male persons, shall be of a certain age. There are three constitutional qualifications without which a man can not be a member of either branch of the legislature of Delaware, without which he can not legally vote as a member of either branch of the legislature of Delaware.

Now, suppose that in the senate of the State of Delaware there was admitted a person who was notoriously but 18 years of age, and the senate, notwithstanding that fact, known and proved and admitted, allowed that person to vote; that under the latest development of the doctrine of woman's rights a woman had been elected in one of the senatorial districts or voted for by a majority of the electors of that district and had been received and sworn in the senate of Delaware and allowed to cast a vote for Senator; and an alien, notoriously an alien, about whose foreign allegiance there was no question, no claim that he had ever been naturalized, was allowed, with full knowledge of the senate of Delaware, to cast a vote in the election of a United States Senator; and that those 3 votes decided the result. The doctrine of the minority of the committee and those who oppose Mr. Du Pont's claim to a seat is that the United States Senate, because the senate of Delaware allowed those votes to be cast, in open violation of the constitutional requirements of the State of Delaware, must accept them as constituting the election of the Senator who comes here with the credentials of the State, and that, to use the language of the report, we can not inquire; it is beyond the province of the Senate; the Senate has no jurisdiction to make such inquiry.

It is said, however, that the Senate can not inquire because it is a right reserved to the State that each house shall be the judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its members. But is it a reserved right of the State of Delaware that the senate shall not only be the judge of the qualifications of the members of the State senate of Delaware, but shall be the judge, and the sole judge, of the election of two members of this Senate? For to that extent does the claim proceed. The Constitution of the United States says that the Senate of the United States is the judge of the elections of its members. The minority of the committee and those who oppose the claim of Mr. Du Pont here insist that the senate of the State of Delaware is to determine the question whether or not Mr. Du Pont was legally elected, whether the votes cast against him and preventing his election were cast in accordance with the constitution of the State of Delaware, and that no case can exist; that neither fraud nor corruption, nor bribery, nor violence, can invest the Senate with jurisdiction to inquire into a vote, the legality of it, the honesty of it, the integrity of it, if the senate of Delaware permitted that vote to be cast.

Mr. President, that doctrine will lead us eventually into great trouble. That I do not overstate it I want to read a sentence or two from the speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. He says, in one part of his speech:

> The Senator from Oregon thinks that a small error in the State senate is binding, but a very gross error is not binding. There is no error, large or small, that we can revise.

If the senate of Delaware allows an alien to vote, a person under age to vote, a woman to vote, we can not revise that error. If the senate of Delaware allows open bribery in the senate chamber, sees a vote purchased and paid for and counts that vote, we can not inquire.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Indiana is not so contending. He made no such contention.

Mr. PLATT. Let us see what he says. Speaking of the Turpie case and upon the claim which was made by the contestants, not acknowledged to be true, of course, he says:

> Here was one person lawfully elected and sitting in actual occupancy of his seat, and another, whom they claimed not to have been elected at all, was given that seat and the lawful incumbent ousted for the express purpose of effecting the election of a person as a member of this body. Where shall relief be given if not in such a case? If relief was refused in that case where shall we grant it? Was there ever a more monstrous case, violative of every principle of morality, of propriety, than this case as made, than this case as given? Yet the Senate of the United States decided that they would not inquire into that judgment.

The report of the majority of the committee, made by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], did say that the Senate could not inquire into it; but if the facts alleged were true a monstrous crime was committed in the senate of the State of Indiana, but this body was precluded from inquiring.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me? I do not wish to interrupt him again. I may have misunderstood him. I thought the Senator from Connecticut said that the Senator from Indiana contended that the Senate had no right to inquire into a charge of gross corruption of a member of the legislature in the election of a Senator. That he did not contend for.

Mr. PLATT. Upon what ground can an inquiry into a charge of bribery be put unless the inquiry can be made where the crime has been committed, like that of ousting a member who is entitled to his seat for the purpose of controlling the election? What difference is there between the two cases? Bribery is investigated because it goes to the essentials of an election.

Mr. TURPIE. The Senate investigate the charge of bribery with a view always of affecting the Senator-elect. If it is found that they can not trace or connect the person claiming a seat here with the bribery the investigation must fall. It goes to the disqualification of the person claiming the seat.

Mr. GRAY. That was the doctrine in the Pomeroy case.

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, and it was the doctrine in the Ingalls case. It has always been the doctrine. No other ground has ever been taken. It is a disqualification of the Senator-elect. It has nothing to do with the members of the legislature unless their action is traceable to the person who is claiming a seat.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand it to be claimed that the election of a Senator is legal notwithstanding there was bribery; but that having come here by a legal election, because the legislature received and counted the votes, the Senate can then inquire into it, because it will not have a man here who has been guilty of bribing anyone?

Mr. TURPIE. That is the ground it has always been put upon, and because it can not be traced in the case named the investigation was ended.

Mr. PLATT. So the Senator holds that no matter how great may have been the bribery, the election is valid if the bribery was winked at, suffered, condoned by a branch of the legislature. He is driven to take that ground.

Mr. TURPIE. No, sir; that is not the manner in which I put it. No matter how great the bribery may have been among members of the legislature, unless it can be traced directly or indirectly to the person who is benefited by it and claiming a seat, the Senate of the United States will not make inquiry into it. That is not my holding only, but the holding of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. But still, if I understand the claim of the Senator, it is that no matter how much bribery there is, no matter how much of corruption, no matter how much of fraud or crime there is in an election, we can not inquire into it for the purpose of determining whether there was an election or not; but if we find such a man here we may then take him in hand and deal with him and expel him, because he was a very wicked man when elected.

Mr. President, that shows the absurdity—I will not use that word—but it shows the desperate straits to which Senators who claim this exclusive jurisdiction in one house of a legislature to determine all questions as to whether or not votes cast are legal, are driven.

Mr. TURPIE. It shows nothing in regard to Senators. The record has taken the form of a decision. It does not show the absurdity of any Senator nor the untenability of the position of any Senator. If it shows anything, it shows the absurdity of the decisions of the Senate of the United States in repeated cases on record as claimed by the Senator from Connecticut, but I do not think any judgment of the Senate is an absurdity.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator commented upon a word which slipped from my lips unintentionally and which I took back. He says again:

> There is no escape from this grant of absolute power to a legislature to judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members. That power is continuous. It continues with the member through his whole term; it allows no question as to the member's title to be raised in the Senate of the United States, nor in any court or tribunal, except in the house of the State legislature to which he belonged. There the question may be raised and decided. If it be decided, the decision can not be reviewed or revised, and if no question be raised, the member holds under the first adjudication when he was admitted upon his credentials.

I have only read these extracts to show to what extent this doctrine is claimed. The difficulty about the doctrine is that for all the purposes of the State the conclusions and judgment of either house are conclusive, just as for all question of the United States the judgment of the Senate or the House of Representatives is conclusive upon the question of the election of its members. But it is setting up the State above the General Government; it is setting up the State above the Nation when the claim is made that the State can allow anybody it chooses to vote, whether elected or not, whether qualified or not under its constitution, whether observing the laws of the State or not, and the Senate must accept the conclusion, the conduct, the allowance of the one branch of the State as final.

I said yesterday that it was final, so far as all questions affecting the State were concerned, but not final so far as questions concerning the United States are concerned. When the Senator claiming to be elected takes his credentials and comes and presents them at our desk, he becomes a member of one body of the National Legislature. What he does affects every individual in this great Nation, and it therefore becomes important for this body to determine for itself, under the express power committed to it by the Constitution of the United States, whether the alleged election of that person is supported by all the essentials requisite to constitute a valid election to this body. The doctrine that no matter what may have been done in either house of the legislature, so it is allowed by that house, can not be reviewed by this body will lead to trouble.

Legislatures are not immaculate. They are not exempt from the charge of acting improperly and corruptly, and year by year, I am sorry to say, under the influence of political excitement, when it runs high, when the passions of men are aroused, party spirit overrides conscience more and more, and the legislatures of the States are doing things with reference to the election of Senators which if allowed, which if held to be exclusive and conclusive will bring this body into discredit and disrepute much more than anything that has been done in the past has tended to bring it into discredit and disrepute. If you can not inquire whether a person was legally qualified under the constitution and laws of a State to cast a vote for Senator because he was allowed to do so by one branch of the legislature of the State, you can not inquire whether men who were entitled under the constitution and laws of a State to cast votes were by force prevented from casting those votes if that force is overlooked and the votes were not received by the House to which the member belonged. There are no limitations or qualifications to the doctrine as it was placed here; the action, the nonaction even, of either branch of the legislature is held to be conclusive, final, ultimate, and not subject to be reviewed by court or Senate. That no matter how faulty the election may be we have no right to inquire is not the doctrine of the Constitution.

What does the word "election" mean in the Constitution of the United States? It means and implies everything that is essential to a valid election. It means first, as I said yesterday, that a man must have received a majority of votes from the persons legally entitled to vote for him as Senator, and no person legally entitled to vote for him as Senator must have been prevented from voting if that prevention would change the result. That is the first essential of an election; and it will not do to say that any man, whether he was elected or not, whether he was a usurper or not, whether he has the constitutional qualifications required in order to become a member of one branch of a legislature, was entitled to vote simply because that branch of the legislature allowed him to vote. If that doctrine be pursued to its legitimate end, if it does not overthrow this body entirely, it will so detract from its high character, its integrity, its dignity, its honor, and its fair fame that this Senate will have little respect among the people of the United States.

It is for the dignity and the character, the integrity, the honor, and the fair fame, of this body that I insist upon it there is no limitation whatever upon the power of this body to inquire into the election of its own members and into everything which an election implies. It is not necessary to this case that I should have thus stated my views and entered my dissent to what I consider a monstrous and dangerous doctrine. The case is clear without the argument which I have made, but I have felt that it was my duty to leave upon record my views, my dissent, my denial, that the Senate can be compelled to stultify itself and admit here a man to sit in a seat beside ours whom we know was not elected by persons who were entitled under the laws and constitution of the State to vote for him or who was elected by bribery, fraud, corruption, intimidation, or violence.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the political arrangement of the State of Delaware gives a legislature of 30 members. They recognize in both houses the equality of representation of the three counties which compose that State, and thus awarding 3 senators and 7 representatives to each, the senate consists of 9 members, the house of representatives of 21. The legislature of the State of Delaware is composed of two bodies; but the Constitution of the United States has created a single Federal agency to elect Senators to represent that State in this body and has composed that Federal agency of 30 persons, the same persons who constitute the legislature of Delaware.

The constitution of that State is singular in the respect that it provides for the election of no person to take the place of a governor in case death, resignation, or other accidental occurrence shall remove the governor from his office. The theory of the State constitution is that there shall be a governor elected by the people only, and that in case of an interruption some other officer shall temporarily exercise the duties of the office of governor until the people at the next general election can supply themselves with a constitutional governor.

It happens that the governor of Delaware died while the electoral college of that State was in the vain throes of an effort to choose a Senator of the United States last year. Thereupon the constitution imposed upon the speaker of the senate the obligation to exercise the duties of the office of governor. Did it remove him thereby from the senate? That is the first question to be determined, and according to the view which I take of the law applicable to this case the determination of that question in the negative, as I think it necessarily must be determined—and the argument upon both sides of this Chamber has so established it—settles this question.

I therefore purpose to address, first, a few remarks to the proposition that Mr. Watson, a senator and the speaker of the senate of Delaware, did not lose his office as senator by reason of the accidental and temporary superimposition of the duties of the office of governor upon him, but remains, and until the expiration of his senatorial term will continue, one of the nine senators of the State, one of the three from the county of Kent.

I do not intend to go so deeply into the argument supporting that proposition as to repeat at any length what has already been so abundantly and so satisfactorily demonstrated by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and the learned and able Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who is peculiarly interested as one of the Senators entitled to represent his State. I mean rather to sum up the argument to support the primary proposition than to expand it and elaborate it.

The facts are undisputed, and therefore the proposition is determinable only from the constitution of Delaware, as all agree.

Now, we start with Mr. Watson as a senator, on every hand conceded to have been duly elected, to have been recognized by the senate of Delaware in such a way that his right to be there was unquestionable. The duty therefore lies upon them who would say that he lost his office by entrance on the performance of the duties of governor to show it from the constitution. Unless they establish that he remains senator and speaker of the senate.

The first argument to answer their claim that he lost his senatorship is a very simple one, that the constitution of Delaware does not say so. If the constitution of Delaware, when it said that the speaker of the senate should exercise the office of governor until a governor elected by the people should be duly qualified, had intended that he should thereby lose his office as senator and speaker, is it conceivable that it would have been omitted from express declaration? Consider the instrument, the constitution of a State, which was providing, as is perfectly obvious upon the mere reading of it, simply for the temporary performance of the duties of an office from which the officer had been unexpectedly and suddenly removed. Is it conceivable that when it was said some other officer shall temporarily perform those duties it would not have added, if that had been meant, and another person shall be chosen to his place, or, in some phrase, that a vacancy should be thereby created? The constitution shows that the very point was in the minds of the constitution makers, for they took the careful precaution to declare that when the speaker should exercise the office of governor the senate should choose a speaker pro tempore. Therefore it is to my mind conclusive that they did not intend that the senator who thus was called upon for a temporary duty should lose his office, because they did not say so.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is that omission any more strange than the omission of the framers of the Constitution of the United States in not declaring when the Vice-President succeeded to the office of President that he should no longer hold the former office?

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, if you take up the case of the Vice-President of the United States and reason upon it from the Constitution I think it will be found that the interpretation which prevails is the result of a practical construction quite as much as of reasoning upon the language. But I do not wish to be diverted into a discussion of that subject, for my time will be very limited—suggesting in what I have said the line which I should like to take, if time served me, to present something I think might be said upon it.

Now, observe next the practical justice, the convenience of the interpretation which I have suggested. Sir, it might easily happen that the speaker of the senate of Delaware would be called upon under this provision to exercise the office of governor during a period of no more than seventy days, and during which the legislature was not in session. Is it to be supposed that, without particular declaration, the constitution makers meant to say that if that duty fell upon a senator—whose term of office is four years—during the first year of his term, so that at a time when he was discharging no legislative duties he temporarily took the place of a deceased governor for sixty or seventy days, that therefore his office as senator, his office of speaker of the senate, was taken from him? Of course the plain inconvenience and injustice of such a contingency was enough of itself to show that they intended no consequence of that character unless they meant to express the intention in unmistakable terms. Their omission to so declare, therefore, very strongly appeals to my judgment.

Besides, it would be necessary that an election should be provided for; and it seems to me it is quite improbable that the constitution would not have made some provision or direction for that when it was so careful to provide for the election of a speaker pro tempore.

But, sir, there is another consideration which, to the mind of a lawyer, is so overwhelming in support of this interpretation that I am sure the force of it has been recognized by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], who, with such great ability, has maintained the desperate legal argument which was imposed upon him by the necessities of the case and the side he espoused, and that is the same argument which I a moment ago alluded to with reference to the Constitution of the United States, the argument of contemporaneous and continuing practical interpretation, extending in Delaware for more than a hundred years.

Mr. President, Delaware had this precise constitution in this particular adopted in 1792, and it happened that four cases like this occurred under that constitution of 1792. Five times the speaker of the senate was called upon to exercise the office of governor under the constitution of 1792. In every one of those cases the senate and all the people of Delaware considered that acting governor to be still a senator from the county from which he was originally chosen, and the senate caused no election to be held to fill the vacancy, but the acting governor himself served out the term as senator. It is true, sir, that during the time he was acting as governor he was not habitually present in the senate, perhaps not present at all——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Never.

Mr. VILAS. Although the negative of the proposition is not perfectly established as to all those cases; but I will grant it for the sake of this argument that he was not there. In four of the five cases the senatorial term extended beyond the gubernatorial service and the seat as senator was actually occupied after performance of that service.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator at that point if the fact that four of these gentlemen who succeeded to the office of governor resumed their seats in the senate at the expiration of their terms as governor is to be considered a construction that they still remained senators? Is not the fact that a single instance can not be pointed out where any person succeeding to the office of governor ever undertook to exercise the office of senator or speaker of the senate while he exercised the office of governor a construction on the other branch of our case, namely, that the two offices could not be exercised by the same person at the same time?

Mr. VILAS. The Senator states the proposition a little stronger in his concluding sentence than I am willing to admit; but I admit that, according to my opinion, the constitution of the State of Delaware did not expect the acting governor to remain in the senate, and that was the reason why they caused a speaker pro tempore to be chosen to take his place, and the fact that he did not remain is an interpretation that he was not bound to remain in the senate, and that perhaps his legislative function ought not in propriety to be exercised by him during the time he was acting as governor.

I am willing to go so far as that. I am now of the opinion, and am arguing only, that he remained both speaker and senator, neither office being taken from him. Doubtless a certain sense of official propriety besides the exaction of the duties of the office of governor would take him from the senate during the time he was acting; but the Senator from Oregon will agree that when the temporary performance was over he did not return to take his seat as senator unless he had been all the time a senator. I think, then, the Senator from Oregon will recognize that the construction placed upon that instrument of 1792 was the determination in every one of those four cases that the acting governor still remained a senator of the State. If I am not right that that is the true interpretation to be placed upon that part of it, I should like to have the Senator challenge me for the error now.

Sir, the Constitution of the United States has had an interpretation, as I remarked, and that interpretation is perfectly certain with reference to that Constitution, and the meaning of that Constitution to-day must be regarded as perfectly unchallengeable because four Vice-Presidents have become Presidents. But more instances to establish this interpretation under the constitution of Delaware of 1792 occurred while it was in force.

Let me advance one step further. With that interpretation thus grafted into every word of that instrument, as much a part of it as if it were written in as explicit terms as I have stated it, Delaware caused another constitutional convention to assemble in the year 1831, and then, in totidem verbis, reenacted the self-same provisions which had thus received that fixed and definite interpretation. It is that reenacted constitution, reenacted with this construction a determined and fixed part of it, that we are called upon again to construe; not the original one, but that one which the people have themselves accepted in that State, with all the force of contemporaneous and continuing and universal interpretation during a period of forty preceding years. Since that time this reenacted constitution, reenacted with the interpretation which it had derived from practical construction, has been itself six or seven times practically construed by the legislature in similar instances, and with precisely the same result. Thus it came down to the year 1895, perfectly determined that the constitution of Delaware did not mean a senator should lose his office because he entered upon the performance of these temporary, accidental, and extraordinary duties which were imposed upon him in some exigency.

But, Mr. President, Delaware does not stand alone in the same legislative determination of this question. A similar constitution existed in the State of Pennsylvania, and though it did not last so long there, and that State has since assimilated its constitutional arrangement more nearly to other States, yet it did happen that a similar question arose in that State, and again it was decided in the same way. There was a constitution in the State of Maine which, though slightly different, yet substantially was like this; and under that constitution a question was addressed to the judges of that State, as is there provided for, and the judges held that the senator did not lose his office, but only that he could not perform, and that by reason of peculiar words in that constitution, distinguishing it from that of Delaware, the legislative function of a senator while he also performed the gubernatorial function. In other words, there is no instance before this time in more than a hundred years of experience when anybody ever asserted that a speaker of a senate thus called upon to act as governor for the time being lost his office as senator. The novelty of decision which this Senate is asked to render is the extreme urgency of necessity from partisan demand, nothing less.

I do not need to discuss, and I shall not spend a moment of time in collating authorities as to the value and the obligation of such interpretation. Every lawyer recognizes it. So vigorous is the rule of the law that it has been held over and over again in various States of the Union that if one State adopts and enacts a statute which had previously been enacted in some other State, and had there received interpretation before it was enacted in the other State, that interpretation goes with its words and as a part of it; as obligatory as if it were correct, for the correctness of the interpretation can not be challenged any more than the plain meaning of words can be thwarted by being denied their effect.

Mr. President, there is not a particle of difficulty about this when you read that constitution in the simple way in which any man reading an instrument and seeking only with perfect honesty to extract its fair purpose should understand it. Read the language for a moment:

> Upon any vacancy happening in the office of governor, by his death, removal, resignation, or inability, the speaker of the senate shall exercise the office until a governor elected by the people shall be duly qualified. If there be no speaker of the senate * * * the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office. * * * If the person elected governor shall die or become disqualified * * * the person holding the office shall continue to exercise it until a governor shall be elected and duly qualified. If, upon a vacancy happening in the office of governor, there be no other person who can exercise said office within the provisions of the constitution, the secretary of state shall exercise the same until the next meeting of the general assembly, who shall immediately proceed to elect by j nt ballot of both houses a person to exercise the office until a governor ele ed by the people shall be duly qualified.

How simple and plain it all is, most obviously to a common intent, so that the wayfarer, though he be a fool, need not err therein. The arguments that have been urged against the proposition I am maintaining, themselves, in my mind, add force and strength to its clear, lucid interpretation. The only such arguments derived from the constitution are raised from two sections: First, section 12 of article 2, which declares that—

> No person concerned in any army or navy contracts, nor member of Congress, nor any person holding any office under this State or the United States * * * shall, during his continuance in Congress or in office, be a senator or representative.

The other one is section 5 of article 3, which says:

> No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of governor.

These were two general provisions incorporated with the constitution, the one in relation to the legislature, the other in relation to the governor, both of them preceding in point of time of expression this section which makes the particular provision for someone to act as governor when there is no governor.

Mr. President, the explicitness of the effect declared by those two sections is undeniable. The question is only whether they relate to a speaker of the senate or of the house or the secretary of state when called upon thus temporarily to perform the duties of the vacant office of governor. That is all the question for consideration.

We heard yesterday the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] spend an hour or more in refined and minute discussion upon words, mere words, for the purpose of endeavoring to establish an opposition between these two sections, which are general in nature, and the later one, which is particular. His argument was ingenious, but was purely a verbal argument. His point was that this acting governor was really governor.

Now, Mr. President, we must begin by observing that one can not exercise the office of governor without doing in it the same things which the governor himself will do when he is there. The governor exercises the office of governor, and the acting governor exercises the office of governor, but one is governor and the other is acting in the place where a governor constitutionally should be. That is the difference between the two cases.

But I wish to make another line of remark before noticing this nice weighing of words and syllables, and that is that the rules of interpretation, established as the result of much human controversy and great experience, recognize two things which human nature is incapable of obviating: First, the poverty of human language, and, next, the infirmity of human foresight. It is impossible, or fairly to be said impossible, to express within the compass in which a constitution is to be written all the various shades of meaning which may be necessary to anticipate all the possibilities of future occurrence, and human foresight is unequal to the task of that anticipation if it were within the reach of language to compass its possibilities.

Words themselves manifest this weakness; and thus we are obliged to use almost all the principal ones in our language for more than one meaning. Some words will be found in the dictionary with as many as six or eight distinctive meanings defined by the lexicographer. Therefore, at times, when a law or constitution is written, a word must be used in one place in one sense, and again the same word elsewhere in another; and it is left to the honesty and justice and fairness of interpretation to accept the word in either place in the sense in which it was obviously and fairly intended to be used. Therefore, if, as the Senator from Connecticut seemed to do yesterday, you first argue that this word "governor" should be applied to this state of things, and then say, "Therefore this state of things is identical with another in reference to which the constitution has used that word," when it is fairly obvious that different meanings were intended, it is perverting the language which perhaps human power could hardly have made more explicit than it is, in advance of controversy.

So the first rule of interpretation is, having reference to these limitations on the human intellect, that every word used in an instrument of this kind shall be read to serve the purpose obviously discernible from the whole context of the instrument. Here it is so plain from the words and the context that the language employed for this case meant that the speaker of the senate, when acting as governor, should remain a senator in the legislature, that nobody ever dreamed of the contrary for more than a hundred years.

But we find this effort on the part of Senators to establish an opposition of meaning between these two first sections that I have mentioned and this other section in relation to the particular case. Let us first grant all they ask for argument's sake. Let us grant that those two provisions do stand in opposition to the provision relating to the acting governor. Which will prevail? Why, sir, the rules of interpretation govern that subject as perfectly as the necessity should require. First, when a provision is general and it comes in contact or into opposition with one which is particular, the particular expression always governs. If, therefore, the arguments of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Oregon were successful in establishing the fact that there was a contrariety between these two sections, it would have helped their cause no more, for the contrariety being established, this particular section prevails, not those upon which their case must depend.

But, sir, there is another principle of interpretation equally established and equally decisive. It is this: When two contrary provisions are found in the same instrument, the later written prevails over the earlier, unless there be particular reasons for the contrary, such as might happen in the case I have just alluded to, if the later provision were a general one, and the former were a particular one. But here the later provision is the particular one, and, as the latest expression of the thought in the mind of the constitution makers, it governs by this particular rule.

Now, let me illustrate for a moment the curious way in which a verbal argument like that, so ingenious and subtle and so skillfully presented yesterday by the Senator from Connecticut, can create seeming opposition that would destroy the life of the spirit. It made me think of some of the old discussions reported in the time of the school men. The Senator said—and it was the whole foundation of his argument—that this acting governor becomes and is the governor, and he sought to reach in a roundabout way that conclusion which, if it had been the purpose of the constitution makers, they could have expressed by simply saying so, but which they obviously avoided by labored phrases. He argued that that was the meaning of the instrument from placing in juxtaposition different provisions in the constitution. Sir, let me put two together to show him the contrary. A speaker of the senate need be but 27 years old. The constitution requires only that a senator shall have attained the age of 27 years, and any senator may be elected speaker. But turn over the leaf, and here is section 4 of Article III, which begins thus upon the qualifications of a governor:

He shall be at least 30 years of age.

Therefore the argument of the Senator that the acting governor is governor is at once overthrown, for he need not be 30 years of age, but only 27 years of age.

This illustrates the rule which I have been drawing attention to, that in reading an instrument like a constitution, or indeed any other, the effort must be to reconcile with kindly fairness all the different provisions, not to create antagonisms, but to remove the seeming antagonisms which words might create contrary to the clear purpose; thus to read in one place the same word with a different meaning from what you give it in another place, it being obvious that from poverty of language the makers of the instrument were compelled to select that word for use in one sense here and in another sense there.

I think I have shown by familiar principles that if this antagonism existed between these sections the particular one would prevail upon which we rest. But it must be borne in mind that the interpretation of practical usage for a hundred years just as much applies to this possible antagonism as to every other part of the instrument or to the particular section. Every part of it is controlled and governed by that uniform, undeviating, unquestioned, acknowledged usage.

There is, however, little difficulty in regard to this. These two sections, relied on to affect Watson's right, have no reference to an acting governor. Let me illustrate this by the one that relates to the office of governor, for that is the only one which is really important here—"No member of Congress, nor person holding any office under the United States or this State, shall exercise the office of governor." Unless a senator of the legislature is an officer holding an office he is not within the meaning of that section. So plain has been the common popular understanding that a member of the legislature is not an officer that when this question was mooted in the Senate, and the Senator from Oregon and others were in colloquy over it, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] answered at once, according to the fact, that a senator is not considered an officer. Let me call attention to a very singular proof of that idea in this very instrument itself. Article IX says: shall be bound by oath or affirmation, etc.

Members of the general assembly and all officers, executive and judicial—

Omitting any view of legislative as possible—

It disregards a class of officers that we might call legislative. It speaks of officers as judicial and executive, illustrating that at the time when the constitution was adopted the condition and character of a senator or member of the house of representatives was esteemed to be different from what nowadays we are more inclined to regard them. Doubtless that grew out of the English system, where a member of Parliament is not a paid officer, but is a representative of the commons in one house, summoned to aid his sovereign by advice and to give money, and in the other one of the peers of the realm. In this country we have made the legislative office as distinctive an office, perhaps, as the judicial or the executive, but that was not the common idea at the time when the Delaware constitution was written; and it is not yet so freely accepted as perhaps a lawyer might regard it, as was plainly indicated by the remark of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. So that, undoubtedly, if you read the provision in that spirit of fair understanding to which I have referred, it must be recognized that the makers of the constitution did not intend to prohibit a senator or a member of the house of representatives from exercising the office of governor independently even of this particular direction, which expressly requires it in case of vacancy.

Now, sir, there was another argument advanced by the distinguished Senator from Oregon, and I need not say that it was presented with that abundance of learning, that research into all authorities which could throw a cast of light upon it from far or near, which always distinguishes his arguments of legal propositions in this body. It was that by the common law there was an incompatibility between a legislative office and the gubernatorial office; and therefore if one acted as governor he could not act as legislator. How easy it is to answer that. Is the common law superior to the constitution, or is the constitution superior to the common law?

The people of Delaware made a constitution, and by it they could as easily trample upon the common law as they could trample upon any of the preexisting systems of institutions for which they substituted a republican form of government.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me? Nobody denies that, of course; but the Senator will agree with me, I presume, that it is a proper thing to do to take into consideration what the common law is on a given subject in reference to which there is statutory law or constitutional provision, especially if there is any doubt at all in reference to the proper construction of any of those provisions.

Mr. VILAS. I recognize that it is one of the principles of interpretation that you are to consider what the law was when you are considering what changes made in it were intended to make it to be. I agree to that. To that extent it would be well enough to look into it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It was with that view that I discussed the common law.

Mr. VILAS. But that is a very feeble light to throw upon an instrument which has been construed with undeviating fixity for a hundred years, and after so long a period has passed. That light of the common law comes from too far back—from the mists of antiquity—and is refracted by too much fog.

So with this theory of the American system which the Senator has presented. The whole question is, What have the people of Delaware done for themselves? They have made their constitution; and when you attempt to declare what is the American system you must begin by looking for what that constitution is, to the extent that Delaware is one of the components of the American Government, out of which the American system may be said to have arisen; not construe the constitution to your ideas of an American system. But I do not think the Senator laid much force upon that argument. It might be addressed to a lodge of a certain kind, perhaps to a school of protection, or some company of jingoism that was striving to cry, without very definite meaning, some slogan to arouse the people. It hardly has force among a body of lawyers seeking to interpret a constitution.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to one argument more which I take from the Senator from Oregon. When he gave us the pleasure of the discussion with which this matter was opened and was dwelling upon this point I put to him this question:

I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether he is contending now that Mr. Watson was not a senator from the time he took the oath of office of governor? Is the Senator contending that he lost his office as senator?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Wisconsin will see before I conclude precisely what I am contending for upon that subject. I shall evade nothing. I have nothing to keep back in discussing this question. I have fixed opinions in regard to it, and I shall present them to the Senate as fully, fairly, and frankly as I am able, and in the course of my remarks I will answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin fully.

I have not a doubt that the Senator from Oregon expressed just what he meant and what was in his mind, and I will turn now to page 44 of his speech as printed, and afterwards to pages 60 and 61, to show how he answered that question. His sixth proposition was:

That when William T. Watson, as speaker of the Delaware senate, took the gubernatorial oaths and entered upon the exercise of the office of governor, he became the governor of the State in the full constitutional sense of that term, and not merely governor ex officio or ad interim as speaker of the senate, and his acceptance of such office was ipso facto a resignation in law, either—absolutely of his office as senator, or at least of his right to exercise the office of senator so long as he exercised the office of governor.

That was the carefully written proposition of the Senator. Later, and at page 60, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] again asked the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] a similar question, and the Senator from Oregon again made a similar answer to that he made me. Then the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] said:

It is either vacation or suspension. It can not be both.

Then the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] replied:

I say it is one or the other.
Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; all right.
Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. And, so far as this case is concerned, it does not make one particle of difference.

And then later in the answer he says:

I do not care whether you say that the seat becomes absolutely vacant or whether the right to exercise the office of senator and speaker of the senate is merely suspended.

Thus the Senator from Oregon did not at any time in his speech, and never has in my hearing in the Senate, answered the question which was propounded, or denied what I affirm as my proposition. He has never affirmed, and I give him due credit for not affirming, that Mr. Watson lost his office as senator.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think I stated more than once, perhaps two or three times, perhaps not in my opening speech, but during colloquies with other Senators, especially with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] while he was speaking, what I believe to be the true construction of the constitution of Delaware upon that point. I believe the true construction is just as stated in the first part of the proposition, that the moment Speaker Watson succeeded to the office of governor that moment ipso facto there was a resignation of the office of speaker of the senate. I believe that is the correct interpretation of the constitution.

But I claim further and with propriety, as I take it, that if I am wrong about that I am not wrong in the other proposition, namely, that there was a resignation of the right to exercise the function of senator and the function of speaker while exercising the functions of governor.

Mr. VILAS. The legislative function?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The legislative function.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator from Oregon, under the stress of debate, has advanced then to the point of assertion which his careful preparatory study and consideration of this case did not enable him to make in his first speech on the subject.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not at all. I know the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin does not wish to place me in any false position regarding the matter.

Mr. VILAS. No.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have from the first, perhaps not so distinctly in my first speech, but I certainly did on several occasions, in interlocutory remarks, state what I believed to be the true construction of the constitution of Delaware on that point, and that is that there was an absolute resignation of the office of speaker and senator upon his entering on the office of governor.

Mr. VILAS. I was very particular, because I had the argument I am now making in my mind, to put that question to the Senator from Oregon when he was making his speech, hoping to get a distinct declaration. It was again presented to him by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] at least, and with the result which I have indicated. In his first speech the Senator certainly reserved to himself at every point at which he spoke of it the right to have it either one or the other.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do yet.

Mr. VILAS. Without declaring which one or the other he considered to be the right one.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is not necessary and never has been necessary since we entered upon this debate, so far as our side of the case is concerned, to say which it is, because whichever one it is, if either, our case is made. If they are both wrong, then the Senator has the case.

Mr. VILAS. I hope to satisfy the Senator that he has to take one or the other horn of the dilemma. I am content to say that Mr. Watson was a senator and his legislative function was suspended—his function as a legislator. I will give the Senator the benefit of that proposition for the argument I am about to make.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If that is the fact, the Senator gives away his case.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, no; I do not. I am not changing any facts. I am making argument; and for myself I have no fear of it.

I start with the proposition, then, as established, that Mr. Watson is to-day a senator of the State of Delaware and will remain until the end of his senatorial term a senator of the State of Delaware. I do not care about his legislative function under the constitution of the State of Delaware, whether suspended, in abeyance, or otherwise dormant. I accept that branch of the dilemma, and give the other to the Senator from Oregon.

Watson, then, is a senator—one of the 30 members of the Delaware legislature; one of the 9 members of the senate. Now, I call the attention of Senators to this, that the function which Mr. Watson exercised in voting for a United States Senator he did not derive from the constitution of Delaware, he did not possess as a legislative function. He derived it wholly from the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution of the United States provides that the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature, and it also provides that the regulation of the time and manner of choosing Senators may be made by Congress by law. The right to choose a Senator comes wholly from the Federal Constitution. The regulation of it is wholly a matter of Federal law. What is the law?

The legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected—

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the next words—to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.

SEC. 15. Such election shall be conducted in the following manner: Each house shall openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, name one person.

And so on. If both houses choose the same person the next day the choice is recorded.

But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose—by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator, etc.

How?—

By virtue, therefore, of the law of the United States this Federal agency for the choice of Federal Senators is composed of the several persons who are members of the senate and lower house, whatever it may be called, of the State. In Delaware there were 30 persons who were members of the lower house and of the senate. Those 30 members were invested by the Constitution and the laws of the United States with the power to choose a Senator. Who can take it away from them? The constitution of Delaware did not confer it. The constitution of Delaware can not take it away. All that is allowed to the State is to choose and determine the various members who compose the senate and the house of representatives of its legislature, and when they are known, when their right properly to sit in that body as representatives of the people is settled by the State, the Constitution of the United States vests those persons with this function, which is not a State function, which does not come from the State, but from the Federal Government—the function of electors. It is not a legislative function. As legislators they exercise their power only as members of the two separate houses. As legislators they may in the house of representatives pass a law which the senate independently may veto. As members composing the senatorial electoral college, each person elected to either house is one elector entitled to exercise the privilege which is given by the Constitution of the United States to him as one of the whole number.

The only question referable to the constitution of Delaware is, was this person who claims to be an elector a senator? If he was a senator, he was an elector in that electoral college. The State of Delaware could impose no qualifications. The State of Delaware could not suspend his function given to him by the Constitution of the United States. It could suspend his function as a legislator in the State of Delaware, but it could not suspend that function of a Senatorial elector which the Constitution of the United States alone bestowed upon him. To interrupt his right to vote on bills, to interrupt his right to sit and consider bills or to make speeches, was no lawful interruption of his right to act as an elector when the electoral college convened under the authority of the Constitution and laws of the United States to perform a duty enjoined upon it by the Federal Constitution.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator holds, then, if I understand his argument, that a person may be a member of the State senate, have no right whatever to exercise any legislative function, no right to make laws, no right to vote, and yet at the same time have the right to go into the joint assembly and vote for a United States Senator.

Mr. VILAS. Yes, sir. If he is a senator of the State legislature he is one of the electoral college. It does not make any difference what, for purposes of its own internal State administration, the State constitution may have provided or the State laws may have provided. All the qualification which by the Constitution and the law of Congress is requisite to the exercise of the office of elector is that he shall be a senator or a member of the lower house. If he possesses that qualification, Delaware can impose no other. It can take nothing from his power, it can add no further qualification or disqualification. This proposition has been determined over and over again in the Senate in another aspect. We had once from my State an illustration of it. We had it in the case of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Many a State has put into its constitution the provision that no judge shall be elected a Senator of the United States during the term of his office as judge in the State. Has the Senate ever regarded it? Not the least. The very fact that he was a judge was an additional reason, perhaps, why he should be chosen to this body. And if this case is not to be decided in accordance with the firm principles of law, it might be necessary to choose more judges to sit here; for we are now considering not a political question, not a question of administration, but acting in our judicial capacity, that same capacity in which under the presidency of the Chief Justice we might sit here to try the dearest rights and determine the honor of the highest citizen of the land. We are sitting as judges, and we are as much bound by the Constitution and by our oaths to determine according to law as the judges of the Supreme Court in another part of this Capitol.

Mr. TELLER. That is correct.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; I am sure Senators will recognize it. The Senate has adjudged—beyond all question correctly—over and over again that a State can add no qualification or disqualification to any function which is given by the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution of the United States requires but one qualification for a senatorial elector, and that is that he shall be a member of the legislature. The constitution of Delaware may, if you please, declare that a senator or member of its legislature shall not vote in certain cases; that he shall refrain from speaking in certain cases; that he shall not act as a legislator in cases where he is interested, or in any other cases. The people there may impose as many such limitations as they choose and of what character they choose. They may provide that he may do certain things as a legislator which we should not regard to be a part of a legislator's duty. That is all for the people of Delaware to decide.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me a question?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the Senator to be arguing, very clearly and distinctly, that although all Governor Watson's other legislative function may have been suspended while he was governor, yet that still he might enter the legislature and vote for United States Senator, because the power and duty of electing a United States Senator is imposed upon the legislature of a State. Do I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. VILAS. Because the several members of the legislature of the State constitute an electoral college for the choice of United States Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the Senator holds (he is arguing certainly, and therefore is assumed to hold) that although Governor Watson might not have been authorized to act as a member of the legislature in any other capacity, he might still vote for United States Senator?

Mr. VILAS. Most assuredly so.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator asserts that Governor Watson may have possessed a function as legislator which was not a legislative function? Is not that the Senator's proposition?

Mr. VILAS. That he does not possess it as a legislator, but by reason of being a legislator; that he is given a function which is not legislative.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very good. Then he had a power as a legislator which was not a legislative power? He had a function as a legislator which was not a legislative function?

Mr. VILAS. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is not that the Senator's statement?

Mr. VILAS. He had this by reason of being a legislator of the State of Delaware. He had a Federal power or agency conferred upon him which was not legislative within the State of Delaware.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then he had a function as a member of the legislature, solely as a member of the legislature, which was not a legislative function.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; he had a function by reason of his being a member of the legislature which was not legislative.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, if the Senator will allow me, that is the proposition I wanted to understand, that we may know hereafter that a member of a legislature may have a power and a function solely by virtue of the fact that he is a member of the legislature, which is not the legislative function.

Mr. VILAS. Certainly. The Constitution of the United States chose to select a certain class of officers in Delaware as an electoral college for Senators. It has also created another of a single executive officer. In case that body can not act, when a vacancy occurs while that body is not in session, the Constitution gives that authority to the governor. But it is not a gubernatorial function of the State strictly.

Mr. CHANDLER. But they say the legislature——

Mr. VILAS. He does not derive it as governor from the constitution of Delaware, but because he happens to be governor; he takes it from the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. If I may be allowed at this point, in the line of what the Senator is saying, and apropos to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire, when the amendment to the Constitution proposed and advocated by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] shall have been adopted, if indeed it shall ever be, that the Senators of the United States shall no longer be elected by the legislatures, but shall be elected by the people at large, that function—not a legislative function—will be taken away from the members of the State legislature, and yet their legislative function will remain intact.

Mr. CHANDLER. By the same reasoning, then, a Senator may vote for President and exercise the functions of the people, which is not a popular function. There is the same difference. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether when Governor Watson voted he did not perform the function of a legislator?

Mr. VILAS. None whatever.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did he not perform the act by virtue of his membership of the legislature?

Mr. VILAS. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then a member of the legislature?

Mr. VILAS. By virtue or rather by reason of his membership and the investure in him by the Constitution of the United States of that agency.

Mr. CHANDLER. As a member of the legislature?

Mr. VILAS. Because he was a member of the legislature.

Mr. TELLER. He had to be a member of the legislature.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; he had to be a member of the legislature in order to receive——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, the law does not say the members of a State legislature as members, as individuals, shall elect a Senator. It says that each State shall appoint through its legislature its United States Senators. How the Senator can make it out that any person when he votes for a United States Senator (which he only does because he is a member of the legislature) is not in the exercise of the function of a member of the legislature I can not understand.

Mr. VILAS. I do not know that I can make that plain to the Senator, but let me say this: That question was one which I touched in discussing the Dubois and Claggett case. It arose there incidentally, and I made the same argument substantially that I am making now, only the case required a different application of it. There was from the beginning of this Government a question whether under the Constitution the legislature chose the Senator as a legislative act or whether the electoral college as a distinct official agency was composed and created of the several persons who had the right to sit in the legislature; and the latter interpretation of the Constitution has prevailed. It has prevailed in the Senate whenever it has been discussed, and it prevailed in the passage of the law of 1866, which is now written in the Revised Statutes, from which I read a part of section 15.

So, I repeat, the function which Mr. Watson or any other member of the Delaware legislature exerted in the choice of a Senator of the United States was not a legislative function of the State of Delaware, but it was a function given to him and each of them by the Constitution of the United States. We decided similarly in the case of Senator CALL since I have been in the Senate. It is not the two houses which elect a Senator; it is only a majority of those persons who happen to constitute the two houses. In the case of Senator CALL the legislature of Florida, in both houses, numbered 100 members, and 51 members convened. The question was whether those 51 members had a right to elect a Senator, and we held that they did.

Mr. TELLER. Why?

Mr. VILAS. Because they constituted a quorum of the senatorial electoral college, not a quorum of each house or of either house. The houses of the legislature are no longer regarded; the legislative character has nothing to do with the act. Simply the several persons who compose the legislature constitute an electoral body, of whom a majority is a quorum.

Mr. TELLER. I understand this whole controversy has gone on the question whether this man was a member of the senatorial college.

Mr. VILAS. Ah, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Colorado, with his clarity of legal perception, could not take any other ground. But he mistakes. It is contended that, although a member of the senate, his function was suspended, and he was not a member of the electoral college.

Mr. TELLER. Of course he was.

Mr. VILAS. But if he were a senator (and he was) that is all I have been arguing on this point, and there is no escape from the conclusion. You can not wabble over this question by saying he was either a resigned senator or he had resigned his function for the time being, or that he was a senator in abeyance. He was not in abeyance as an elector of a United States Senator. He was either an elector in the electoral body or he was not a senator in the legislature at all, or in any sense. You can recognize him, then, as an elector or you can take the other course and deny his being a senator. Under the stress of that necessity you can trample Delaware, her constitution, her interpretation of her own constitution for more than a hundred years unchallenged in the mire of partisanship.

Mr. President, I wanted to have added some more things possibly on this subject. They are not necessary to present the case. I have stated the points and I think I have made them clear. I think I have summed up the reasons which show Mr. Watson was a senator, and if he was, he was surely entitled to sit in that electoral body.

There is another aspect of this case, entirely independent of the one which I have been discussing, that I wish I could have argued. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] have already made so clear that it seems to me there is little need for further argument upon it, the proposition that the question of the membership of the Delaware senate was one solely for the Delaware senate to decide. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] argued that it is within the power of the Senate to inquire ad libitum into any circumstance that goes to the election or qualification of a Senator. So it is. It is in the power of the Supreme Court of the United States to decide any case that comes before them for plaintiff or defendant at their merely personal will. But it is in the rightful power neither of the Senate nor of the Supreme Court to decide any case in judgment before them except as the law requires it to be decided. The Supreme Court of the United States might just as well refuse to the supreme court of the State of Delaware the interpretation fixed by a line of decisions of that court to a State statute as the Senate of the United States sitting in this tribunal refuse to award to the judgment of the senate of Delaware the full measure of faith and credit to which it is entitled.

It might be, according to the argument of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that the Supreme Court of the United States should say that some person who is admitted here as a Senator was not a Senator, and might hold that he was not entitled to receive his pay, notwithstanding his admission here is a final judgment of his right. They have the power when two parties are before them to decide contrary to law. But it would be as unheard of in that court as anything which it is possible for the human mind to conceive. They are invested with power to decide according to the law. So is this Senate, and that law requires the recognition by the Senate of every judgment which the court of a State or either house of its legislature is authorized finally to decide.

But I wish to add another point. By virtue of that principle Mr. Watson stands before this senate de jure a senator. He has been adjudged so by the proper tribunal. But there is another principle which has not been adverted to, and that is that he was de facto a senator. There were rightfully 30 members of that electoral college; 9 members of that senate entitled to participate. He was one of them, recognized as being such. Nobody contested it. No other was excluded.

Mr. President, who ever dreamed of challenging the action of a de facto member under such circumstances until necessity made this? The Senator from Connecticut said yesterday it was one of the marvels of the age, drawing his inspiration, as he told us, from a patent-medicine advertisement, that such a case was presented. Is it not more marvelous that that whole electoral body, with a considerable majority of Republicans in it, interested to the last degree in this question, struggled through twenty-eight ballots to elect a Senator without raising a single question that that man who was sitting there as one of the 30, presiding over their assemblage, was a rightful officer there? Not until that legislature was adjourned, or on the very moment of adjournment, when the last ballot had been taken and the failure to elect had become complete, was the desperate claim asserted that an election had been made by the first ballot of the twenty-eight.

And now why is this question here? The Republicans of the State of Delaware did not elect this man. They had the power in that legislature. They were not satisfied to elect Colonel Du Pont. But 14 had voted for him until that last afternoon, when 1 more did. There was a great respect for the rights of property, or something else, which held back certain Republicans from this candidate. They could not be made to vote for Mr. Du Pont, or for but one candidate. But here, now, because the Republicans of the State of Delaware failed to exercise the power which they possessed, because they could not agree, they come here asking the United States Senate to seat a man who had only half of the Delaware legislature and not a majority, and therefore to absolutely nullify the vote of Mr. Watson, acting in his place as one of the 30 lawfully entitled to be there, de facto one of a rightful 30, whether he himself was entitled or not, if there had been a contestant. Would an act of the legislature have been invalid because he had so acted in legislation, though his vote had passed the bill through the senate? No. Like every officer acting de facto he is to be recognized as a valid officer, not to be challenged but by the only authority which was entitled to demand his place if he were wrongfully in it, the State of Delaware.

Mr. President, I regret that I have been detained quite so long with this discussion. I have been greatly hurried in making it, and I hoped to have given way fifteen minutes ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 5 o'clock p. m.). The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to the resolution reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let the resolution and the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be read.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "entitled" insert the word "not," and strike out the last clause of the resolution; so as to read:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. ALDRICH's name was called). I am authorized to state that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. PASCO (when Mr. CALL's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CALL], as already announced, is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I presume he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea" upon this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. That it may not be overlooked, I desire to state that if the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] were present, he would vote "nay."

I desire further to state that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired on this vote with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. If the Senator from Maine were present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is absent from the Senate in consequence of sickness, and is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If the Senator from North Dakota were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. BURROWS (when Mr. MCMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. MORRILL's name was called). The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber, desired me to announce that he is paired on this vote with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. The pair has already been announced.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is paired. His regular pair is with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. I understand that his pair has been transferred to the Senator from

Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I do not know how that was done. It has been done, I understand. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. Having charge of the pairs upon this side on this vote, I desire simply to state that no information has come to me concerning the transfer of the pair of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], but I presume it has been done upon authority. I have no information on the point.

Mr. ALLISON. On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] at his special request. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. That pair is transferred to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is absent, and is paired on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. CHANDLER. On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. I suggest to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] that the pair of his colleague be transferred to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], so that the Senator from New York and myself can vote.

Mr. HILL. That is satisfactory.

Mr. CHANDLER. I vote "nay."

Mr. HILL. I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I think I should state further, in view of what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has just said, that my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] was made at his special request, and I think in conversation he stated to me—in fact, I remember he did—that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] was paired with some other Senator.

Mr. PASCO. I will state that before the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] left he told me of the special arrangement which had been made with reference to his pair; that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] would vote on this proposition against the seating of Mr. Du Pont; and that he had accordingly transferred his pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I take it for granted that the Senator in charge of the pairs on the other side of the Chamber has consent directly from the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] that he should be paired in favor of the pending amendment.

Mr. PASCO. I had it upon the authority of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. He notified me of the pair and stated that it had been made.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] I believe announced a pair with some Senator on this side.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HARRIS. If agreeable to the Senator from Idaho, as I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], we will transfer our respective pairs and record our votes.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. I vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 30; as follows:

Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,	Voorhees,
Gear,	Lodge,	Pugh,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). I rise, Mr. President, to announce the pair of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If the Senator from Rhode Island were present, he would vote "nay" and I presume the Senator from Florida would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I desire to repeat that on this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I ask to repeat the announcement heretofore made, that my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] has been transferred to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAFFERY (when Mr. BLANCHARD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). By arrangement with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], he and I have transferred our pairs, so that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am paired, will stand paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who was paired with the Senator from Tennessee. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). I will again announce that on this vote the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. HANSBROUGH'S name was called). I will announce again that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] stands paired on this vote with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). My pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] having been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], I record my vote "yea."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but that pair has been transferred by arrangement with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to my colleague [Mr. MURPHY], and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS (when Mr. MCMILLAN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] has a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. PRITCHARD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PRITCHARD] is absent, paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allen,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Bacon,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Roach,

So the resolution as amended was agreed to.

MERCHANT MARINE ENGINEER SERVICE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following conference report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In the second and third lines of section 2 strike out the word "three" where it occurs in each of said lines and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

After the word "renewal," at the end of the first paragraph in section 2, insert the following:

"And in all cases where the issue is the suspension or revocation of such licenses, whether before the local boards of inspectors, as provided for in section 4450 of the Revised Statutes, or before the supervising inspector, as provided for in section 4452 of the Revised Statutes, the accused shall be allowed to appear by counsel and to testify in his own behalf."

WILLIAM P. FRYE,
WATSON C. SQUIRE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. E. PAYNE,
A. J. HOPKINS,
C. M. COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

DES MOINES RIVER LAND SETTLERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act of August 18, 1894, the report of Robert L. Berner, special commissioner to investigate the claims of the so-called Des Moines River land settlers; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that 500 extra copies of that document may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Colorado will yield to me for the purpose I have in view, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. FAULKNER. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the appropriation bill been taken up?

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the motion of the Senator from Colorado prevailed, and the bill indicated by him to make appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia has been taken up and is now before the Senate?

Mr. TELLER. I understood the bill had been taken up.

Mr. HARRIS. Unquestionably.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The Senator from Colorado made the motion, and it was agreed to without objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I only wanted to know whether the bill was before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. The bill is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 16, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL], I desire to make a brief statement. On the 8th day of May I voted for the House resolution to pay clerks to members during vacation. I am also announced in the RECORD as paired with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCCALL], I being in favor of the resolution and he against it. I recollect now having agreed to pair with him and the announcement was properly made, but I am so rarely paired that it did not occur to me at the time, and I voted. I make this statement in justice to the gentleman from Tennessee.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. It refers to charges made by members of the press gallery about three months ago, and I will read an extract from the St. Louis Republic, as it contains perhaps the most dastardly and willfully false statement to be found in any of the papers on this subject. This is the extract:

> On the 3d of March, 1895, Senator Riddleberger, a Virginia Republican, being drunk and disorderly in the Senate of the United States, was, by direction of the President pro tempore, Ingalls, forcibly ejected from the Senate Chamber. Not for many years before and not since then has such a spectacle presented itself of national disgrace as the taking of HOWARD from the House of Representatives to-day. HOWARD, it seems, has been on a spree for four or five days, and to-day entered the Chamber and went to sleep on a lounge back of the seats, in plain sight of the galleries. He had not changed his linen in several days, and his appearance was that of a disreputable tramp. A couple of the House porters were instructed to lift him up and take him out. This was done by two colored men, who half lifted and half led him out in the presence of the House and a large concourse of disgusted spectators.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not before attempted to trespass upon the time of this House, nor would I to-day, sir, but for the fact that I feel it is due to the people whom I represent, due to the children who bear my name, to brand this lie and slander here. It is well known by members on this floor and has been testified to by my physician and by Dr. Stafford, one of the most eminent ministers of this city, who was in constant attendance by my bedside, that at the very time these cowardly words were penned I was hovering between this shore and that bourn from whence no traveler has ever returned. And, sir, I am informed that the correspondent of the St. Louis Republic sent a private message to a gentleman in my district on the same evening making this same charge against me. Sir, he—

> Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
> 'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
> But he that filches from me my good name
> Robs me of that which not enriches him
> And makes me poor indeed.

Sir, no matter what feeling may exist against me, no matter what political party I may belong to, I am a member of this House, and so long as I am a member I am entitled to its protection. The attack made upon me by the press of this country is outrageous and should be stamped with condemnation. Gentlemen on this floor, members of the press, who made this charge, knew that I was lying at death's door, and for a month I was unable to leave my bed; and only day before yesterday was I able to come here and resume my duties.

Some of the papers have charged, sir, that there is a great feeling against the members of the Populist party on the part of Southern Democrats. I do not know whether this be true or false; but, sir, if my party and if the principles and ideas I represent are wrong, abuse and vilification and vituperation will never get the deluded people back into the right fold. Why, gentlemen, the very name "Democrat" was first given to your party as a name of reproach, yet that party gave to this country an Andrew Jackson. And the Abolition party, hated and despised and maligned, sowed the seed from which sprang the greatest patriot, the best friend of the poor man the world ever saw, Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.] It may be, sir, that this People's Party has "fanatics" in it; it may be that we are "wild-eyed lunatics." But the free-silver Democrats and the free-silver Republicans are also classed as "wild-eyed lunatics," except that they are harmless, and we are not. [Laughter.] Sir, I do not feel that in this body there should be such a distinction made. And I am here to say, further, that no member of the People's Party has ever been seen on this floor under the influence of whisky, and you can publish that to the world.

With these remarks, sir, I have nothing more to say. I deny the charge most specifically. It is absolutely unfounded and false; and the men who made it knew that it was untrue.

I will add the remark (suggested to me by a friend near me) that I came here to vote for the silver bill. I came against the wishes of my physician. Friends on the floor saw, when I came here, my feeble condition. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], who sat by my side, saw that I was extremely and desperately ill and advised me to return to my hotel. I do think, sir, in the name of justice, in the name of all that is fair and right, this House ought to protect members when they are sick against such charges as these. [Applause.]

But I do not fear the consequences. Already the reaction has come. The newspapers said, "Here comes the end of the career of HOWARD." The wish was father to the thought. Sir, that will never be, so long as I stand by the common people of this country; and I have nothing to fear, because—

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again—
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among his worshipers.

[Applause.]

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2936) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River, in the town of Lewiston, in the county of Niagara, State of New York.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I reserve the right to object. There was so much confusion during the reading of the bill that I could not hear distinctly its provisions. I should like to know whether the bill carries any appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir. It is a bill which has been passed by the Senate, and reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce of this House.

Mr. TALBERT. And it makes no appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to make a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MUSKOGEE, OKLAHOMA AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (S. 1741) to authorize the Muskogee, Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a line of railway through Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAHON (before the reading was concluded) called for the regular order.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. SCRANTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I gave notice yesterday that to-day I would call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 3826) to provide for the election of a Delegate from Alaska was defeated on its third reading. It has since been suggested to me that, this being private-bill day, the consideration of such a motion as I indicated would not be in order. I should like to have the opinion of the Chair on that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order to-day, as it is not private business.

Mr. SCRANTON. Then I give notice that I will call up the motion to reconsider at the first opportunity.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of order on this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PERKINS. On the 1st day of May the House had under consideration the bill No. 3826, and after discussion rejected it. The following evening, just before adjournment, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] entered a motion——

The SPEAKER. The bill is not up now.

Mr. PERKINS. I know. He entered a motion for reconsideration. My point is as to whether the gentleman from Massachusetts, having acted and voted with the minority, is competent to enter a motion for reconsideration or whether in fact——

The SPEAKER. The question is not now before the House. The Chair will state, however, that the uniform decisions are, where there is no record vote, that a gentleman entering such motion is assumed to have acted with the prevailing side.

Mr. PERKINS. But the gentleman made a record on the floor——

Mr. KNOX. Evidence can not be introduced on that question.

The SPEAKER. The matter is not now before the House.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the regular order.

ADA J. SCHWATKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, with House amendment, disagreed to by the Senate, and a request for a conference thereon.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This bill, Mr. Speaker, was passed by the House at $17 a month. The Senate bill fixed it at thirty.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move that the House insist on its amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. One moment before action is taken. Did the House cut the amount down?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes; the Senate passed the bill for $30 a month and the House committee recommended seventeen.

Mr. DINGLEY. So the House cut down the pension to $17 a month?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the object of the conference?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. To insist on the House amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well; if that is the object, all right.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is the object.

The motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7671) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and cannon balls to U. S. Grant Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, Ind., Department of Indiana, with amendments by the Senate.

The amendments were read at length and concurred in.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8012) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire, if there is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs here this morning, in regard to what action the committee has taken, if any, upon the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in regard to the distribution of these condemned cannon?

I think it must be nearly two or three months ago when, during a discussion of one of these bills here, the gentleman from Ohio suggested that this matter had better be referred to that committee with instructions, or an indication, at least, of a desire on the part of the House that a general bill should be reported on this subject. I have not heard anything from that committee, although I have heard a number of the members inquiring about what had become of that bill. If there is a member of the committee present, I would like to know what action they have taken or contemplate taking with reference to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I introduced that resolution, or motion, referred to by the gentleman from South Dakota, by reason of the expression of opinion made in the House, and I myself am somewhat at a loss to know why that general proposition seems not to have been acted upon, or is wholly ignored, while all of these little matters of special bills have been very rapidly introduced into the House and passed. I think the expression of the House is decidedly in favor of having some general distribution of these matters.

I see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK] is present, a member of the Naval Committee, and I would like to inquire of him whether any action has been taken upon the general proposition in regard to the disposition of these condemned cannon in some systematic manner?

Mr. HULICK. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry I will state that a bill of that kind was before the committee, and referred to the subcommittee, but no action was taken by that subcommittee. The matter has been discussed generally, but no report has been made. I think it is the sentiment of the committee, however, that a general bill should be reported, and when private bills have been referred to the committee they have discouraged the introduction and reporting of them for the reason that they favor a general bill. Nevertheless the committee have not as yet reported that general bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is any remedy for it, except that if anybody desires to obstruct and object to the passage of these local bills or special bills he may do so. I have no feeling about it. I want to get two or three cannon in my district for a special purpose, but I withheld my local matter simply for the purpose of having this general proposition acted upon.

Mr. HULICK. I will state further to the gentleman that I think, in view of the expressions which have already been made in the committee, that a general bill will be reported, and I will bring the matter before the committee myself at the next meeting.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. SPALDING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHARLES K. JENREE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6298) to correct the military record of Charles K. Jenree, etc., with Senate amendments thereto.

The amendments of the Senate were read and concurred in.

CONDEMNED CANNON, ELMWOOD, ILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4324) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to deliver one condemned cannon to the city of Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to offer an amendment to that bill, substituting a Senate bill of a general character, which has already passed the Senate and been favorably reported from the Military Committee of the House. Otherwise I shall not consent to pass these single bills, because they are a complete reversal of the order of the House upon that question. I have sent for the Senate bill, and I ask that this bill may be laid aside long enough for me to get the bill that I want to substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the amendment to substitute a general bill would be in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the question that has troubled me. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not think I ought to oppose this bill under the circumstances, but I hope it will be laid aside and that some general arrangement will be made about this matter. The first thing we know these bills that go through without any consideration will have absorbed all of these cannon, probably a large portion of them in one or two States. I think there ought to be a fair and equitable distribution of these cannon.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman if the Senate has not already passed some general bill, which will soon be here?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They have passed such a bill and it is here, and I am trying to see if it is in order to substitute that bill for this.

Mr. DOCKERY. For a private bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is not a private bill necessarily.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would not be in order. I should like to act in harmony with the views of the gentleman, but I do not see how he can accomplish his purpose on this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I do not know myself. [Laughter.] I hope the bill will not pass. I hope the House will take interest enough in this matter to suspend the consideration of these single bills.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why not ask unanimous consent that the bill lie on the Speaker's table?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill lie on the Speaker's table without losing its place until the matter can be investigated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] asks unanimous consent that the bill before the House be laid aside and retain its place on the Speaker's table until the further order of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BENJAMIN F. JONES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7161) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM H. MAHONY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 900) to provide for the payment of the claim of William H. Mahoney, with Senate amendments changing the spelling of the name of the beneficiary in the body of the bill and title.

The Senate amendments were read and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. BARHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

MARIA E. WILSON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1181) for the relief of Maria E. Wilson, with a Senate amendment.

The bill and the Senate amendment were read.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, let the words to be stricken out be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that her pension be rated from the date of the soldier's death as the widow of a captain instead of first lieutenant.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

EUGENIA R. SWEENY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3426) granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeney, widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Sweeney, deceased.

The bill and Senate amendments were read, changing the spelling of the word "Sweeney" in body of bill and title to "Sweeny."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 2698, which passed the Senate with amendments, and ask the House to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and that a committee of conference be appointed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the title of the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like an explanation of the Senate amendments before that is acted upon.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. The material amendment of the bill of the Senate is by placing a three-quarter-mile limit in the bill. The bill provides that the location shall be left to river engineers, and for that purpose we desire a conference.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is, three-quarters of a mile from the other bridges.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. That is it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about the merits of this bill, but I want to say that the unanimous consents allowed appear to me to be distributed very unfairly. The regular order is usually called against the requests from this side.

Mr. CANNON. This is merely to put the bill in conference.

Mr. McRAE. I know; but there are a great many bills of like character not so far advanced as this which are desired to be passed by members on the Democratic side. We have been unable from some cause to get anything like a just proportion of consideration for bills of this character or other usually passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Allow me to explain to you——

Mr. McRAE. Now, let me say to the gentleman that I do not know anything about his bill, and I have no objection to its consideration; but there must also be some consideration given to those of us on this side of the Chamber who want to secure for our constituents legislation to which there can be no reasonable objection. The regular order is not often demanded when consents are asked for on your side, but the call is quite frequent when we obtain recognition for such purpose upon this side. Now, almost all of the legislation of this Congress has been passed by unanimous consent and the committees have not been called more than once or twice. There has been no unreasonable objection to legislation which has been favorably reported by a committee——

Mr. MAHON. Regular order.

Mr. McRAE (continuing). Such as bridge bills and rights-of-way bills, of which there are many in our sections of the country. This morning one bill of that character was passed on the motion of a Republican, when immediately following it, at the request of my colleague [Mr. DINSMORE], who is in bed sick, I asked for the consideration of a Senate right-of-way bill which has been favorably reported to the House, and to which there can not be any reasonable objection, the regular order was demanded from that side.

Mr. PICKLER. Was not that a very long bill?

Mr. McRAE. It would be no longer than this bill if this is read in full, as it might be.

Mr. CANNON. This will not require to be read.

Mr. McRAE. It will not require to be read if the House consents to dispense with it. I do not know of any objection to the bill and I do not want to assume any unfriendly attitude toward it, but I do want to give you notice that from now on unanimous consent must be fairly distributed between the two sides or the regular order will be called and the business transacted under the rules.

Mr. PICKLER. I think you have had your full share of recognitions.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this a lecture to the gentleman from Illinois or to the presiding officer of the House?

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois (to Mr. MCRAE). After I get this bill through I will have leisure to help the gentleman.

Mr. MCRAE. I say I have no objection to this bill, and shall not interpose an objection to its consideration, but I do insist that the treatment of this side this morning and for several days within the last two weeks has been unfair. You all know that this morning unanimous consent was given for the consideration of a bridge bill for a railroad company, and when I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a right-of-way bill on behalf of my colleague [Mr. DINSMORE] the regular order was promptly demanded. These right-of-way bills are formal, but often are very important, equally as much so as bridges.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know if there is any record kept, so as to know whether the assertions made by the gentleman are backed up by facts?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has caused a record to be made, but has no recollection about the number, and he has not examined with reference to this class of bills; but his memory is that a full proportion has been allowed. In fact, he has never failed to allow a bridge bill to have an opportunity to be brought up before the House, and he regards that as business eminently suitable for unanimous consent, because it is business to which there can be no objection. It is formal in its character and absolutely necessary for the improvement of the country.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, the Chair misapprehends the complaint that I made. It was not that recognition had not been accorded by the Chair. There may have been some discrimination in that regard, but the criticism I made was that the regular order has been demanded against your recognitions given to this side or just before they expect to secure them, and that it has not been demanded when recognition was given to the other side. I insist that common fairness requires that if members of the majority, who are responsible for legislation, think it proper to demand the regular order, they should do so before any bills have been passed for their political friends and not wait until the Speaker had given recognition to this side, as was the case this morning.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know, further, if it is not a fact that the Democratic side has had as many unanimous consents and has had as many bills passed in that way, in proportion to the number of members on that side, as we have had, or more than we have had?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is so. The Chair has endeavored to apportion recognitions in proportion to the number of members on each side, which, of course, is accurate and proper, because the number of members represents, in a general way, the business of the country.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think there has been any disposition at all to discriminate against that side.

Mr. MCRAE. I remember two occasions within the last ten days when on one day I think there were four recognitions and on another six on the Republican side and only one on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, moreover, that there have not been so many demands for recognition on the Democratic side. On some days the Chair has looked over there and has found nobody rising; and therefore, of course, could not give recognition.

Mr. MCRAE. Well, I sit away back in the Hall, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps the Chair did not always see me when I rose; but we will try to make the demand if that is the reason we have not gotten more than we have.

The SPEAKER. Possibly. Is there objection to the present consideration of the proposition?

Mr. MAHON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the regular order, which covers this question.

Mr. HENDERSON (to Mr. PICKLER). Now, go ahead with your pension business.

HOGE VS. OTEY.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Elections No. 3 to call up for action by the House the resolutions submitted unanimously by the committee in the contested-election case of Hoge vs. Otey.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That J. Hampton Hoge was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in the House as the Representative in Congress from the Sixth district of Virginia.

Resolved, That Peter J. Otey was duly elected and is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives as the Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixth district of Virginia.

The resolutions were adopted.

On motion of Mr. DE ARMOND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The order is the unfinished business. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 986) for the relief of Hiram P. Pauley.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understood the Chair to call for the unfinished business. I would inquire of the Chair by what order this bill comes up as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair intended to call for the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, of which the Chair understands this to be one.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This being Friday, private-bill day, would not bills on the Private Calendar be in order if the motion were made to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. A motion can be made for that purpose after the unfinished business is disposed of.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When was this bill reported from the committee? Is it a bill that has been considered at a Friday night session?

The SPEAKER. It is the first bill on the unfinished Calendar.

Mr. PICKLER. The first unfinished business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When did it receive consideration in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PICKLER. On Friday, May 8.

The SPEAKER. It appears to have been considered at a Friday night session.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it the opinion of the Chair that measures so reported would take precedence over the Private Calendar on Friday?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. This is the Private Calendar. But, in the opinion of the Chair, this bill takes precedence of the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the rule.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether there are not a good many of these bills?

The SPEAKER. There is a large number of them——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was going to make this suggestion: The House, out of kindness and charity toward the old soldier, sets apart every Friday night for the consideration of pension bills. It has been the custom until recently to dispose of such bills on Friday night; but I submit to the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee that if we pursue the course now proposed—I am inclined to think the Chair has ruled correctly as to the business entitled to take precedence; I am not making any complaint of the ruling in that regard, for, though the question has been ruled both ways, the weight of authority is probably with the Chair—but if the course now proposed be pursued, I submit to the gentleman who has charge of this class of business, the result will be that if pension bills are not finished up at the Friday evening session by the action of the House upon them, if the whole of the evening session is consumed in considering bills in Committee of the Whole and reporting them to the House, business of that character will be piled up to such an extent as to take the whole of each succeeding Friday to dispose of it. I submit to the gentleman whether he thinks it fair that the whole Private Calendar, including numbers of different classes of claims, should stand in abeyance on account of the kindly order which has been made giving Friday nights to these pension claims.

Mr. PICKLER. In the regular course of business the Committee of the Whole on Friday nights would rise, and the bills acted on in Committee of the Whole would be passed; but we have been unable to have bills passed on Friday nights, because gentlemen have raised the point of no quorum. The bills passed on Friday night would not ordinarily occupy on the succeeding Friday more than thirty minutes of the time of the House to pass them; and then, of course, the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the regular business on the Private Calendar would be in order. But as we have had pension bills under consideration for two days, the list of bills requiring the action of the House is longer to-day than usual and the disposition of those bills will necessarily take up a little more time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why were not these bills disposed of during those two days which were given by the House for the consideration of this class of business?

The SPEAKER. The two days were given for the consideration of pension business in Committee of the Whole; and it is somewhat questionable whether——

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no complaint to make except to call the attention of the House to the fact that by this method of proceeding, Friday night being given to the consideration of pension cases, the business coming over from that session comes in and consumes practically the next Friday, the result of which must be that no consideration can be given to any other class of claims. This I regard as wholly unjust. I would not do injustice to the soldier, but I do not think that the whole of the time appropriated to private business ought to be given to this class of legislation.

Mr. PICKLER. I think that both the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. RICHARDSON] will bear me out in the statement that I have never antagonized private-bill day for the consideration of ordinary claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all. I have no complaint to make of the gentleman in that regard. But I understood that bills considered on Friday evenings—pension bills considered in Committee of the Whole and reported therefrom—were not in order on a succeeding day unless the previous question had been ordered upon them at the Friday night meeting, in which case they would be considered at the next session of the House. But I understand in these cases the previous question has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. It has not been; but these bills remain on the Calendar as unfinished business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would they not be unfinished business for Friday evening?

The SPEAKER. Unfinished business for Friday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How could that be? They are not in order on Friday, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled on that point once or twice this session; and ruled on it in the Fifty-first Congress in the same way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was not aware of the fact that this particular question had been ruled on by the Chair. I would not undertake to argue against the ruling which the Chair has made; but I do not remember that in the Fifty-first Congress bills of this kind were ever brought over where the previous question had not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The fact that so large a number of these bills are brought forward to-day is owing, as the Chair understands, to two circumstances. In the first place there has been difficulty at the night sessions in procuring a quorum—a House quorum—to pass the bills. Another difficulty has arisen from the fact that two days have recently been given under a special resolution of the House for the consideration of pension business in Committee of the Whole. That is what has caused the accumulation of these bills at the present time. The result of these various causes is that the whole session's work on bills of this character, or at least a large portion of it, has been crowded into to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to ask whether the language of the special rule giving the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions two days for the consideration of their bills provided only for the consideration of such bills in the Committee of the Whole? Did it not mean, at least by implication, that such bills, after being considered in Committee of the Whole, should be brought up in the House—not that the entire day should be used for the consideration of such bills in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, perhaps, is the way the order ought to have been drawn, but upon examination it seems that it was not so drawn.

The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The bill was read at length, and also the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the engrossed bill is not present. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to make this statement now to save time——

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered, no statement can be made now.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

HATTIE A. BEACH.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the same point on this bill—that it has not been engrossed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I do.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to recur to House bill No. 4903. I want to state that when I objected on the ground of its not being engrossed my impression was that it was a bill for the removal of a charge of desertion. I find on examination that it is a bill for pension to the child of Erastus D. Beach, and I ask unanimous consent that the question be taken upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The objection of the gentleman from South Carolina is withdrawn. Is there further objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was read the third time, and passed.

LAMBERT L. MULFORD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4753) reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendments.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the previous question.

MRS. VIRGINIA TURTLE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3264) to increase the pension of Mrs. Virginia Turtle, of the District of Columbia, reported with amendments.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH W. SUTHERLAND.

The next business was the bill (S. 1420) granting a pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. WILLIAM LORING SPENCER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4020) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. William Loring Spencer, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was recommended at $30 a month by the Committee of the Whole on Wednesday a week ago. On yesterday a Senate bill for the same beneficiary was passed at $50 a month. I am at a loss to know just what to do. Can the last act of the committee be substituted for the first.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman can amend this bill if desired so as to conform to the Senate bill.
Mr. PICKLER. Individually this bill at $30 a month is my judgment and was the original judgment of the committee; but on yesterday the Senate bill at $50 a month was passed.
The SPEAKER. When that bill comes up the Chair thinks it can be substituted by consent.
Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman interested in this bill does not seem to be here, and I do not want to take any advantage of his absence. Could the Senate bill by unanimous consent be substituted for this bill now?
The SPEAKER. It could by unanimous consent.
Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside.
Mr. PICKLER. I think that would be better, until the gentleman is present.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside. It will go to the foot of the Calendar.
Mr. HEPBURN. I will withdraw the request.
Mr. PICKLER. Then I demand the previous question.
The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
The SPEAKER. Without objection the title will be amended to conform to the amendment incorporated in the body of the bill.
There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill lie on the table?

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

SARAH WEEDON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1178) to pension Sarah Weedon.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rise to a question of order. The point of order is that this bill has been improperly reported from the Committee of the Whole. It is one of the bills considered in one Committee of the Whole, under certain rules, regulations, and restrictions, and reported by that committee on a different occasion. I make the point of order, at this time, that the bill has been improperly reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

Mr. PICKLER. If the statesman from Pennsylvania is going to demand the reading of the engrossed bills in all these cases, we might as well quit. It takes a man of great ability to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania please withdraw his objection to this bill? The woman is 84 years of age, and is now lying upon what will in all probability prove to be her deathbed. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, is this question open to debate? If it is, I am willing to debate it or any other question with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CROWTHER. This is in accordance with the action of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on other occasions, which is a disgrace to the State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the reading of the engrossed bill. It will be laid aside for engrossment.

Subsequently

The SPEAKER said: The Chair understands that the objection in regard to the engrossed bill H. R. 3890 not being here is withdrawn. Is that correct?

Mr. ERDMAN. I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman consents. The question is on the passage of that bill.
The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SARAH A. BOYD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6808) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd.
On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered.
The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] to the fact that the Senate bill covering the same ground has been passed. Does the gentleman desire to pass this bill also?
Mr. PICKLER. I ask to substitute the Senate bill for this bill.
The SPEAKER. The Senate bill has already passed, so the Chair is informed.
Mr. PICKLER. That the bill has passed the House?
The SPEAKER. The Chair is so informed by the Clerk.
Mr. PICKLER. Then I ask that this bill lie upon the table.
The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will lie on the table.
There was no objection.

THEODORE V. PURDY.

Mr. PICKLER. I move the previous question on this bill to its passage.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota demands the previous question. Without objection, it will be considered as ordered.
Mr. TALBERT. I object, and demand a vote.
The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 111, noes 2.
Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker. A parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TALBERT. My object in making the point of no quorum here is to get an opportunity to offer an amendment. I ask if that will be in order? I am willing to withdraw the point of no quorum if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will consent, or if it is in order to entertain a motion to amend. I ask if it will be in order?
The SPEAKER. It would not be in order, pending the demand for the previous question.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman says he has no objection to the offering of an amendment.
Mr. TALBERT. With that understanding I will withdraw the point of no quorum.
The SPEAKER. The point is withdrawn.
Mr. PICKLER. That is, that the previous question shall be considered as ordered?
Mr. TALBERT. The previous question may be considered as ordered, and I withdraw the point of no quorum with that understanding.
Mr. PICKLER. Offer your amendment.
Mr. TALBERT. I move to amend by striking out "$75" and inserting "$50."
The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.
Mr. TALBERT. Division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 38.
So the amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is an amendment to the committee amendment, which will, as amended, be reported to the House.
The Clerk read as follows:
In line 7, strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."
Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that bill be laid aside, as my colleague [Mr. BLACK], who has it in charge, is out of town.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside. Is there objection?
Mr. TALBERT. I object.
The amendment as amended was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.
The SPEAKER. The question is on its passage.
Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.
The bill was passed.

DELIA A. MARSH.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4283) granting a pension to Delia A. Marsh.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota demands the previous question on the bill to its passage.
The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORLEINA J. CLARK.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4721) granting an increase of pension to Orleina J. Clark, of Louisville, Ky.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to offer an amendment.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is ordered, and an amendment is not in order. [Cries of "Vote!"] The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TALBERT. I demand a division upon that. I move to amend by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would not be in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent to offer that amendment.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TALBERT. Division.

Mr. EVANS. What is the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been reported once.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 3.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. TALBERT (during the count). A parliamentary inquiry. I want to state that my object is not to block legislation. My only object is to offer an amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I desire to say that if I can accomplish that I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object to any debate.

Mr. TALBERT. My friend can not manage me quite as well as he manages the McKinley vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has demanded a quorum; now wait until a quorum is here.

Mr. TALBERT. Now crack your whip! I only desired to make a statement, and I got my statement in notwithstanding Mr. Santa Claus.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). One hundred and seventy-nine gentlemen are present, a quorum; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. I move to recommit the bill, with instructions that the committee bring it in amended, reducing the amount from $75 to $50.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order yet. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill as amended was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on its passage.

Mr. TALBERT. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Knocked out again!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage.

Mr. TALBERT. I now move to recommit the bill——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had put the question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I rose in time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman rose some time ago, and did not repeat his motion at the proper time.

Mr. HOPKINS. I submit that the gentleman signified to the Chair that he desired to make a motion to recommit, and it is but fair that he should have the opportunity.

Mr. LAYTON. And then he made another motion.

Mr. TALBERT. I know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not be critical about the matter.

Mr. TALBERT. I now move to recommit the bill with instructions to bring it in for $50 instead of $75 a month.

Mr. LAYTON. I make the point of order that it is too late to make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With the statement that is made by the gentleman, that he rose in season for the purpose, the Chair will accept it and put the motion.

The question was taken on recommitting the bill; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 65.

Mr. TALBERT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eight gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). One hundred and eighty-six gentlemen are present, a quorum; the noes have it, and the motion to recommit is rejected. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the ayes are 94, the noes 16. The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point that the point came too late. The Chair had announced that the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has just counted a quorum on this vote. A quorum is present; and the bill is passed.

WILLIAM H. NESBITT.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, recently, when the House had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4361) to pension William H. Nesbitt, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] objected to the consideration of it because the bill had not been engrossed. The gentleman is now willing to withdraw his objection, and I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. ERDMAN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TALBERT. I object. [After a pause.] I withdraw the objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLOTTE A. WELTON.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 3152) granting a pension to Charlotte A. Welton, which was laid aside a while ago because of its not being engrossed. I understand that my friend from Pennsylvania will withdraw the objection which he made on that ground.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARDY] that the bill indicated by him be now taken up?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, this is taking up a great deal of time, and, besides, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no right to dictate that one member's bill shall pass while another's shall not pass. I do not want to object in this case, but this method is occupying a good deal of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 3152) granting a pension to Charlotte A. Welton was passed.

LUCINDA RICKARDS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago when the bill (H. R. 5393) was under consideration objection was made to its passage. The objection is withdrawn, and I ask that it be now passed.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the passage of the bill H. R. 5393. Is there objection?
Mr. TALBERT. I object.

OSCAR A. BULETTE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5407) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Oscar A. Bulette, late private in Company E, Fifty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, during the late war, with an amendment.
Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question will be considered as ordered.
Mr. TALBERT. I object. I demand a vote.
The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. TALBERT. Division!
The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 1.
Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point. The Chair has just counted the House.
Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.
The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.
Mr. TALBERT. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

RHODA AUGUSTA THOMPSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6826) granting a pension to Rhoda Augusta Thompson, daughter of the late Thaddeus Thompson, a private in the Revolutionary war.
Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill to its passage.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question will be considered as ordered.
There was no objection.
Under the operation of the previous question the bill was ordered to be engrossed; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF GEN. JOHN NEWTON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1508) granting a pension to the widow of Gen. John Newton, with an amendment.
Mr. TALBERT. I will ask the gentleman if he will withhold his demand for the previous question until I can offer an amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I think we can vote the amendment down, and I yield for an amendment.

Mr. TALBERT. I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, can that be done without unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman demands the previous question on the bill and amendment to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, which is an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks a quorum is present.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from South Carolina ought not to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. TALBERT. I make the point that the bill has not been engrossed, and demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside for engrossment.

The SPEAKER (during the reading of the report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills). The Chair desires the consent of the House to sit until this report be finished, and until one or two other matters necessary for the business of the House shall be disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask consent that the remaining bills on the Unfinished Business Calendar——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition made by the Chair?

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the remaining bills on this Calendar, with ten minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. TALBERT. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills as above.

HOUSE CONFEREES APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the bill S. 710, Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. COLSON, and Mr. STALLINGS.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STAHLE, for four days, on account of business.

Mr. WALSH, by unanimous consent, was excused from attending the evening session.

MITCHELL VS. WALSH.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the report of the Committee on Elections No. 2 in the contested-election case of Mitchell vs. Walsh.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority of the committee, we ask five days in which to present the views of the minority.

Mr. LONG. That is until Wednesday next?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Until and including Wednesday of next week.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House is now in recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DALZELL, will please act as Speaker at the evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 p. m. Mr. DALZELL took the chair as Speaker pro tempore, and directed the reading of paragraph 2 of Rule XXVI; which was read by the Clerk, as follows:

> The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes none.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is perfectly apparent that at this time there is no quorum present, but the Chair hopes that within a short time there will be a quorum.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement, if I may be permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can make a statement by unanimous consent.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion and for the correction of military records be passed over to-night and take their place at the foot of the Calendar, where they belong. With that request granted I would be willing to withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that bills relating to the removal of charges of desertion and the correction of military records be passed over to-night and put at the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the gentleman to let them retain their places.

Mr. TALBERT. They ought to be at the foot of the Calendar, and then when we have disposed of meritorious pension bills we can see whether there is any merit in any of these cases. There may be merit in some exceptional instances. I think that is a reasonable request.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina, it is not to put those bills at the foot of the Calendar, but to pass them over, leaving them in their places.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was not the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I think my friend from South Carolina would be satisfied to have them passed over, retaining their places.

Mr. TALBERT. No, sir. My request is that they be put at the foot of the Calendar, where they belong.

Mr. LACEY. Of course the gentleman's request is for this evening's session only, and I do not see that there is any serious objection to that. Those bills would go to the foot of the Calendar only for this evening. We are of course making an arrangement for only one night's business.

Mr. HALTERMAN. I shall object to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BROMWELL. I shall object to the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina, unless he agrees that these bills for the removal of charges of desertion shall retain their places on the Calendar. I do this, not being interested in a single one of them, simply to secure justice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the House that if the request of the gentleman from South Carolina is granted, these bills will go to the foot of the Calendar, not for this evening only, but generally. There ought to be no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. STRONG. Then I must object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to consent to modify his request, so that these bills shall be simply passed over for this night only, retaining their places.

Mr. TALBERT. I make the request only for to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wants to understand distinctly what the request of the gentleman from South Carolina is.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I will state again my request and my reason for making it. I ask unanimous consent that to-night all bills of this character which we may reach—I do not mean all such bills on the Calendar, but all which we may reach to-night—be passed over and take their places at the foot of the Calendar. Let me state my object. I do not make the point of no quorum for the purpose of blocking pension legislation; but I do submit that these cases are not deserving. There are other cases on the Calendar that ought to be considered, and to put these measures continually in the front is wrong. For that reason I make this request, and I hope it will be granted. Then, and not till then, shall I be willing to withdraw the point of no quorum. As a matter of course, you can get a quorum, but you must do as you please; then the responsibility will rest with you. I am always governed by the majority without kicking.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The gentleman is willing, I presume, that worthy cases shall be considered.

Mr. TALBERT. After we have considered the other cases we can take up these and sift them, and if any are deserving they can be passed. But I do not think these bills ought to be placed in front of the claims of true, loyal, brave soldiers.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman insist on his point as against the worthy cases of this class?

Mr. TALBERT. We can not tell which are worthy until we consider them.

Mr. BISHOP. I shall certainly object to the making of this arrangement. There are just as worthy bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs as from any other committee of the House.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not withdraw the point of no quorum unless that request be granted.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the members of the Military Committee, and I think if the House will hear me for a very short time I can satisfy my friend from South Carolina, whose attention I desire, that he ought to modify his request.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not think I am unreasonable.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I trust the gentleman will listen to what I have to say.

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly I will, with pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I am sure no one will complain that the Committee on Military Affairs have not exercised care and industry in the consideration of the bills which have been referred to them. Each and every bill so referred has been considered with great care, first by a subcommittee, and secondly by the whole committee. We have reported to the House for its favorable consideration bills which we regard as meritorious. Upon the passage of those bills depends the pensions of widows and orphans. If my friend from South Carolina had full knowledge of the labor which has been bestowed by our committee upon these bills, I do not think he would take the position he now occupies. But if he insists that this discrimination shall be made against our committee, let him at least so modify his request as to meet the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that bills of the character that he objects to be merely passed over, not placed at the foot of the Calendar. That is asking too much. Let them merely be passed over when reached and let this night, if the gentleman so insists, be given to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions.

This arrangement, if made, will be a great concession to the power which our friend from South Carolina is able to exercise over the House by making the demand he has made for a quorum. I am sure that a moment's reflection, taking into consideration the merits of these bills and the desire of the House to have them acted on promptly in view of the early adjournment of Congress, will satisfy my friend that he should modify his request and consent that bills from the Military Committee be passed over without prejudice, in order to consider exclusively to-night bills from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. TALBERT. Of course I do not wish to be considered unreasonable. I am not unreasonable. My record here in regard to pensions and other subjects will not justify anyone in saying that I have been unreasonable. But, Mr. Speaker, last Friday night I made this same request. I thought it would be acceded to in good faith. But to-day the very first bills that were taken up were bills of this character, laid aside on last Friday night. I did not think that was right. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I can not yield anything further. My request is a reasonable one. There are not many bills of this class that we can possibly reach. I do not include in my request all bills on the Calendar—only those that we may reach to-night. I make this request. Gentlemen can either agree to it or not. I do not entreat gentlemen to accept it. I do not beg. I simply assert and demand my just rights and privileges. If they are not granted, I accept the consequences, and go along my way the best that I can.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. My happy and genial friend stands up here and says that he "begs" nothing; yet he knows that the simple words which he has pronounced are a veto upon all business to-night; and that is the position he takes in the face of every member of the House.

Mr. TALBERT. Oh, no, my friend; I only wish to object to the consideration of those matters which I have been fighting since I have been a member of this House.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Then why not accept the proposition that they be passed over?

Mr. TALBERT. I have made my request. The gentlemen can accept it or not as they see fit. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HALTERMAN. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, on looking over the Calendar, that there is but one bill which will lead to discussion, which came from the Committee on Military Affairs, of the character to which the gentleman from South Corolina refers, and I notice that the man to whom it refers is a man who died on the battlefield thirty-three years ago, and his family and his son request to have his military record corrected. There is no doubt that this bill will be passed.

The gentleman from South Carolina will admit it is a proper bill and advocate it when the report is read. This is the only bill of that character which will be reached to-night.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I do not share the views expressed by the gentleman from South Carolina. The gentleman asserts that these bills in regard to the removal of the charges of desertion and for the correction of military records have no merit. I believe that there are no more meritorious cases on the Calendar than some of the cases coming from the Committee on Military Affairs to remove charges of desertion. I have several such cases in my own mind now, and one in particular, where the man undoubtedly was shot dead on the field of battle, and yet is borne on the rolls as a deserter. He had written affectionate letters to his wife up to the very date and hour of the battle, and I have seen the letters myself; but suddenly he disappeared—it was impossible to find out what had become of him, although there can be no doubt in the world that he was left dead on the battle-field, and he is borne on the rolls of the War Department as a deserter. I do not believe there can be any doubt from the testimony that he was killed in battle at the hands of the enemy. However, the facts can not be established by proof, but the Committee on Military Affairs, looking over the whole matter, after a careful investigation, believe that the charge of desertion ought to be removed; and hence, I repeat, I do not share the sentiments of the gentleman that these bills are unfair and unjust and that they ought not to be passed, and that the charges of desertion should not be removed.

I trust the condition made by the gentleman from South Carolina, that these bills should take their place at the foot of the Calendar, will not be accepted. I submit that consent ought not to be given to such an arrangement, because if it is given he will probably raise another objection in some other way and defeat the passage of bills.

Mr. PICKLER. I object, Mr. Speaker, to further debate. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. Let us determine the point one way or the other now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the modified request of the gentleman from South Carolina. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all bills relating to desertion that are reached during the consideration of business this evening shall be passed over and go to the foot of the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHANY, Mr. MORSE, Mr. BROMWELL, and others objected.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire a moment to appeal to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but there is nothing before the House.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to say a few words to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that debate is proceeding only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HERMANN. I so understand, Mr. Speaker.

I desire the attention of my friend from South Carolina for a moment. I thought that perhaps the gentleman did not hear the very convincing few words uttered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALTERMAN], who stated to the House that among the 30 or 40 bills on the first part of the Calendar, which will probably be reached this evening—and 40 bills will be probably more than we can consider at the session to-night—there is but one bill, I think, for the removal of the charge of desertion, and that bill is to remove the charge of desertion from a soldier's record who died on the field of battle thirty-odd years ago.

Now, the gentleman assures us that the testimony is convincing that he died on the field of battle, and his widow and his children are asking the American Congress to remove that stain of dishonor from the memory of a beloved husband and father. I ask my friend from South Carolina whether he will block legislation all this evening by making the objection he does in view of that fact?

Mr. TALBERT. My friend, I am not blocking the way of legislation. I have suggested a very easy way to prevent its being blocked. It is the gentlemen who make objection to my request. If they want to block it, they can take the responsibility. It is not upon me, but upon them.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman, in the face of the representation I have made, continue to block legislation as to these 40 cases to-night? I ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether, in the face of this statement, he will continue to urge the suggestion he has made?

Mr. TALBERT. I maintain I am not blocking legislation—it is the other fellows.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will not consent, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to withdraw his objection, I do not think that anything can induce him to do it.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew the request of the gentleman from South Carolina. I wish to call the attention of the House to this one fact: There is not a bill to remove the charge of desertion that will be reached to-night.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. WOOD. There is one to correct a military record, but not a bill to remove the charge of desertion. There is nothing in this bill to which any objection can be made. I read the title:

A bill to complete the military record of Caleb L. Jackson.

Under the rules that could not be taken up to-night. That has been held. So I hope, as it will do no harm to consent to it, that the request which I now renew——

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the request?

Mr. WOOD. That all such cases may go to the foot of the Calendar may be consented to. We shall not reach any such case at all to-night, and hence it does not become a practical question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand there is but one case——

Mr. WOOD. There is not one.

Mr. DOCKERY. But one case involving a charge of desertion.

Mr. WOOD. It is to complete a military record.

Mr. DOCKERY. I most heartily concur in the request of the gentleman from Illinois. This is a practical question, and it seems to me that it would be better to accept the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]. The gentleman in charge of that one bill can reach consideration of it in some other way at some other time.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the Chair to submit the request of the gentleman from South Carolina again; and if it is objected to, we might just as well adjourn. I hope that the request of the gentleman from South Carolina will again be submitted, and I hope gentlemen will not object. The point is just here: It makes little difference where these bills go so far as the Calendar is concerned. When we have a quorum here in the House in the daytime, at any time, the House can do as it pleases with these bills.

Mr. BROMWELL. By unanimous consent.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Or by suspension of the rules.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for one moment, I do not think we shall have any trouble about this——

Mr. PICKLER. We are having a good deal of trouble.

Mr. COX. Let us get out of it.

Mr. PICKLER. We have lost twenty minutes of time now.

Mr. COX. I make this request for unanimous consent, that any bill that is on the Calendar to be reached to-night which embraces the charge of desertion be passed over for to-night and let the pension claims be considered. I am satisfied that my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has no motive in the world except to do what he thinks is his duty, and if this is done there will be no trouble, because we can take up the pension bills to-night and go back to these other bills afterwards.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] again.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the request submitted which I have made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is substantially the same thing.

Mr. PICKLER (to Mr. COX). Will the gentleman from South Carolina accept your request?

Mr. TRACEY. He tells me that he will not.

Mr. COX. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. LACEY. There is but one bill that can possibly be affected by the order asked by the gentleman from South Carolina. If that is a meritorious bill, I think there will be no trouble at all for the Committee on Rules to take care of that bill. So let us accept his proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] asks unanimous consent that all bills relating to the charge of desertion reached during this evening session shall be passed over and go to the foot of the Calendar. The Chair understands that there is only one such bill within reach to-night. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. PICKLER. It is too late.

Mr. BROMWELL. I think not. I rose to object, and I have objected.

Now, I want to be heard on this, Mr. Speaker. I have not a single case of military record correction upon this Calendar, so that I am not personally interested in this question at all.

Mr. TAYLER. But the rest of us have cases which we want to have considered.

Mr. BROMWELL. But I want to say that I have got tired of coming here every Friday night and having the business of this House, with over a hundred men here who ought to have manhood enough to assert their manhood, dictated to by one member. [Applause.]

I want to say that to my mind these cases of removal of charges of desertion and the correction of military records are just as important as any pension cases that we pass upon. There is something that is higher, something that appeals more to us, in the case of an unjust charge of desertion against a man, which has been hanging over him and blighting his record and his fair name, and that has been a disgrace and a shame to his family for thirty years, than there is in the mere question of whether we shall vote eight or ten or twelve dollars per month to maintain a man who has suffered injuries in the Army.

The injury to his fair name and reputation is as much to him as the dollars and cents that we so lavishly and profusely bestow on pensions. I want to say, much as it will disappoint me to stand in the way of legislation, I propose to assert my manhood and my right to stand here and say that I will object, and continue my objection, to any such resolution as this gentleman offers. If he will agree to allow the bills relating to military desertion cases to keep their places on the Calendar, so that they may be considered at some other proper time, I would not object; but when he undertakes to pick out these particular cases that have been carefully examined by the Committee on Military Affairs, and favorably reported, I for one will not submit to such dictation. You may do so, but I, too, can block such proceedings, and the responsibility will rest with him and not with me. [Applause.]

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to my friend here—and he is my friend—that while it is asserted by the gentleman that he does not intend to do anything unreasonable, and I do not think he deliberately does intend to do anything unreasonable, yet he is doing what is unreasonable when the facts are taken into consideration. I am satisfied he does not deliberately intend to do that; but in a case to which he objected to-day, in which I happen to know the facts, the charge of desertion is as absolutely false as it is possible to assert a falsehood; yet the charge of desertion appears of record against the soldier, and it ought to be removed. It appears to me impossible that a gentleman should oppose the consideration of a case of this sort and yet say that he is not unreasonable. There may be cases—but no such case has been reported to the House by the present Committee on Military Affairs—in which a man would be reasonable in making objection to their present consideration, or to any consideration except at the foot of the Calendar.

The Committee on Military Affairs of the present House has taken great pains in the consideration of every case that has come before it in which they have made a favorable report. I am able to say to the House, and to the gentleman from South Carolina, that no case has been reported to this House favorably unless the testimony warranted the conclusion that the charge had been improperly made against the soldier. We have made no other sort of report to the House. Therefore it is wrong to the soldier, whose character is at stake, as it is wrong to the committee, that has spent its time investigating these cases. Therefore I sincerely trust that my friend will see how unreasonable he is to pursue this course, and I hope he will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House under the special order.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to say a word or two.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is still pending.

Mr. PICKLER. But a large number of members have come in since.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will consider that fact, too.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House, but I wish to say——

Mr. HARDY. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman from South Carolina made a motion that all bills upon the Calendar for consideration this evening that had anything to do with desertion should go to the foot of the Calendar. That required unanimous consent. Objection has been made, and I believe after objection has been made debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order except by unanimous consent, and debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARDY. I object to further debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the situation. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum, but agrees to withdraw that point upon a certain proposition, which has been submitted to the House, and to that objection has been made. The Chair will therefore count those present. [After a count.] One hundred and twenty-nine gentlemen are present; not a quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PICKLER (during the call). Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, under conditions which have been suggested to me by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and without withdrawing from my view or my position in this matter, I understand that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] is willing to accept the suggestion that has been made if I will withdraw my objection to his request. If my understanding of the suggestion is correct, I will withdraw my objection; otherwise I will renew it.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman is mistaken about my withdrawing anything. I stated that if the gentleman would withdraw his objection to my request, I would then withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. BROMWELL. It is as broad as it is long. I will do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from South Dakota insist upon his motion to dispense with the call?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not withdraw my request at all, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PICKLER, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for a division. [Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call. I desire to say, by unanimous consent, that I suppose gentlemen who voted against the motion just now understand that when the roll is called and the record is closed with no quorum present we are "out" for this night session. Now, I want to avoid that. If you want not to do any business this evening, gentlemen, and to have your record show no quorum present, then vote down my motion.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PICKLER, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 9.

So the motion of Mr. PICKLER was agreed to, and further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that the House has been found without a quorum. I have made the point of no quorum. You have not ascertained that there is a quorum present; and therefore I submit that the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I misunderstood what the gentleman from South Carolina had said. I move a call of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. POWERS, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BISHOP. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 70.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PICKLER. I move a call of the House. [Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Chair again state to the House the request for unanimous consent made by the gentleman from South Carolina. I think an arrangement can be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota has moved a call of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, information was brought to me by gentlemen who had been advising and consulting with the gentleman from South Carolina that if I would withdraw my objection to his request he on his part would withdraw his request that the cases indicated by him be put at the foot of the Calendar. That is all I have been contending against, and with that understanding I will and I do withdraw my objection to his request. But if the gentleman insists upon his original request, then I shall renew the objection.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman still misunderstands what I told his friends. What I said was this: They stated to me that the man my friend from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] had spoken of had been killed on the battlefield and that his case was a meritorious one, and I told them to say to the gentleman that if he would withdraw his objection and let me have unanimous consent, then, when we got to that case, I would make an exception of it and would ask that it be considered and passed. That was my proposition. That is what I stated; that if the gentleman would withdraw his objection I would make that agreement. I do not wish to block pension legislation. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that one man has been blocking pension legislation here. I deny that I have been blocking legislation. No gentleman can point to a single instance where I have done it during this session of Congress or at any time.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I renew my suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all cases relating to desertion and to the correction of military records that are reached at this evening's session be passed over and go to the foot of the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BROMWELL. I object.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I move a call of the House.

The motion of Mr. PICKLER was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALTERMAN] will be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. HALTERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in regard to the only bill that can be reached——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House has been ordered, and no debate is in order.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman who is interested in this bill proposes to withdraw it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the roll call be resumed where it was left off——

Mr. PICKLER. No; that will not do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that there being no quorum present, and the point being insisted on, nothing is in order but to proceed with the call of the House pursuant to the motion just adopted.

Mr. LACEY. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is in charge of the only bill which will be affected by the proposed order, has been trying for some time to get an opportunity to make a statement by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that in the absence of a quorum no business of any kind can be done while the point is insisted upon.

Mr. LACEY. Can not the gentleman make a statement of the situation for the benefit of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He can, by unanimous consent.

Mr. LACEY. His bill is the only one involved, and I suggest that he have an opportunity to explain, so that an arrangement may be made about that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing now in order except to proceed with the call of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The roll was called; and the following-named members failed to answer:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call has been completed, and discloses the lack of a quorum. The doors will now be closed——

Mr. HARDY. A number of gentlemen are here ready to answer to their names.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, gentlemen who come in after this call has been completed can report their names to the Clerk. The doors will now be closed, and the names of the absentees will be called for the presentation of excuses. Gentlemen desiring to offer excuses for absent members will please pay attention.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll of absentees.

Mr. TATE (when the name of Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia was called). Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, is unwell to-night. I ask that he be excused on account of sickness.

There being no objection, Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia was excused.

Mr. POOLE (when the name of Mr. BROSIUS was called). Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BROSIUS, was taken sick this afternoon, and is unavoidably absent to-night. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. BROSIUS was excused.

Mr. TATE (when the name of Mr. CRISP was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. CRISP, be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE] asks that his colleague, Mr. CRISP, be excused on account of sickness. Is there objection?

Mr. CROWTHER. I object. I am tired of this thing of excusing these gentlemen who avoid these Friday night sessions.

Mr. TATE. It is well known to this House that my colleague, Mr. CRISP, has been unwell for some time, and that is the reason I have asked that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE (when the name of Mr. DINSMORE was called). I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. DINSMORE, is confined to his room and unable to attend the sessions of the House. I believe he has already been excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. DINSMORE, has leave of absence.

Mr. HICKS (when the name of Mr. HUFF was called). Mr. Speaker, my colleague is absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He does not require an excuse.

Mr. KEM. I ask that Mr. HOWARD of Alabama be excused on account of ill health.

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman from Illinois who sits near me [Mr. HITT] is not yet in very robust health, and it is imprudent for him to be out at night. I ask that he be excused also.

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Mr. BAKER of Maryland and Mr. COFFIN, have been called out of the city. I ask that they be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. KIEFER (when the name of Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota was called). Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MCCLEARY, was very ill this afternoon with a severe headache. I walked part of the way home with him and know he was suffering severely. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHANY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. CHICKERING, who has been called out of the city, be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. KULP. I ask that my colleague, Mr. LEISENRING, be excused, as he is out of the city.

There was no objection.

Mr. PUGH. My colleague, Mr. LEWIS, is detained at his home in Kentucky attending a session of court on very important legal business. He expected to have been here before now, but was detained. I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman already has leave of absence.

Mr. WRIGHT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD] has been suddenly called out of town, and I ask that he be excused.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Now, here is an illustration of the way this thing works: The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] was excused in the early part of the session to-night, but must have been cured by electricity, for he is here now. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think the House ought to give thanks for the miraculous restoration to health of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. I simply ask that we do so by proceeding at once to business. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the gentleman from California means. I know this, that when I left the House this afternoon I requested my colleague [Mr. TATE] to represent me in a matter that I thought might come up, as I was not feeling very well. I did not come out to the night session, not being well enough, but having received information that there was a call of the House proceeding, and that no quorum was here, in order to help to make a quorum as far as I could, and at very great inconvenience and discomfort to myself, I came, believing it to be my duty to do so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state to the House that Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia is marked present on the first call. The Chair has no recollection of anybody asking that he be excused. So it seems that the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Missouri are both in error.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE] did ask that his colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, be excused on account of illness to-night. I know Mr. BARTLETT to be a gentleman who would come here if he could in the performance of his duties, and I am satisfied that everything that he has said is absolutely correct. He has set a first-class example to the Republicans of this House about attending these sessions. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts, who has been called home on account of important business, may be excused.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. PITNEY of New Jersey, be excused. He is absent from the city, in New Jersey. I think he has leave of absence, although I am not sure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman has leave of absence.

Mr. GARDNER. And I ask, also, that Mr. MCEWAN and Mr. HOWELL, my colleagues, who are both out of the city, be excused.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the names of the absentees.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WILSON] has leave of absence, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has leave of absence already, and needs no excuse.

Mr. MAHANY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MCCORMICK, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHANY. I also ask that my colleague, Mr. WILBER, be excused. He is out of the city.

There was no objection.

Mr. WANGER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MAHON, be excused. As is well known, he is one of the most constant in attendance on these Friday night sessions. He was in attendance here this afternoon, and left here suffering with a severe headache. I have no doubt that is the cause of his absence this evening.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELKNAP. My colleague, Mr. LORIMER, is absent on account of serious illness in his family. I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is already excused, as the Chair is advised.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] be excused, on account of important business. This is the only night session during the present Congress from which he has been absent.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. I ask that my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut, be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. HURLEY, be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. FARIS. I do not know whether my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, is excused or not. It is well known that he is absent from the city, sick.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands he has leave of absence.

Mr. POOLE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. FAIRCHILD, be excused.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the roll and the responses of those who came in after the roll call show that there are 166 gentlemen present. The Chair is ready to entertain any motion.

Mr. PICKLER. I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms is hereby authorized and directed to arrest and bring to the bar of the House all members absent without leave of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I wish to ask as to how short a time is probably the least time in which absent members may be found and be brought here, and at what expense per member?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has propounded a conundrum which the Chair is utterly unable to answer.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I think in the last session——

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing now in order except a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call, or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that we can not get a warrant issued before the time at which we are compelled to adjourn. Therefore I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is the regular order. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILNES) there were—ayes 39, noes 78.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was rejected.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, if the House will permit just a word, I understand the record shows that these proceedings in the last eight years have never resulted in bringing in more than nine members. In view of the lateness of the hour and the expense of the proceedings under a call, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point of order that there has been no business done since that motion was made before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that no business can be done in a House that is without a quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. But there has been no other motion made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to dispense with further proceedings——

Mr. PICKLER. The last business was a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the last motion was to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. DOCKERY. The motion to adjourn is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken.

Mr. NORTHWAY demanded a division.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the call for the yeas and nays there were—ayes 30, noes 51.

Accordingly (one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House having ordered the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn, the gentleman from South Dakota moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. BISHOP. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BISHOP. The motion of the gentleman from South Dakota is not in order. It is the privilege of the minority to demand the yeas and nays, and it can not be taken away from them.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; it can.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, under the practice the majority can reconsider a vote——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will please be in order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Under the uniform practice, as I recollect it, the majority can reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered; but then on reconsideration one-fifth of those present can again demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MILNES. The regular order is to lay your motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that a motion is pending to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered is in order.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Constitution provides that one-fifth of those present can demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. PICKLER. He has not risen to a point of order. The gentleman from Iowa has not stated that he rose to a point of order.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I rise to a question of order; and my point of order is that the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota, to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, is not in order. The taking of the yeas and nays is a mere form of counting the vote, and after the yeas and nays have been ordered no motion of that sort is pertinent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POWERS. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that that demand is not in order. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The question is——

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TERRY. I just want to suggest a parliamentary inquiry along here. A call for the yeas and nays has been made and was sustained by thirty-odd members. There were 60 on the other side. Now, if you can reconsider a vote of that kind, 60 can deny to 30 the constitutional right to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that the decisions are clear on the subject as they appear at the desk. The Chair will now state the parliamentary situation. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] moves to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] moves to lay that motion on the table. Those in favor of the latter motion will say "aye."

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK and others. Division!

The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 48, the nays 48; and the motion is lost.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order!

Mr. POWERS. On that question I demand the yeas and nays, and I insist that that is in order. If it is competent for this House to divide and take a vote with no quorum present, it is entirely competent under the circumstances for one-fifth of those present to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had already decided that the motion was lost. The Chair understands that the demand of the gentleman from Vermont now is that the yeas and nays be taken on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. POWERS. On either question.

Mr. PICKLER. It is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already decided the other question, and has seen no reason to change that decision.

Mr. POWERS. Then I will ask for the yeas and nays on the original motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Vermont that this is a mere question of the method of taking a vote in the House in which there is no quorum, and the Chair is of the opinion that the yeas and nays are not properly demanded.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

Mr. POWERS. I do not want to embarrass the situation, so I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded by several members.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 56.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers on this motion.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I move that all the absentees be now excused.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, or ought to have it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILNES. The gentleman from South Dakota thinks he ought always to have the floor.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 39 members voting in favor thereof; and Mr. PICKLER and Mr. TALBERT were appointed.

Mr. MILES (during the count by tellers). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing, and the gentleman is not in order.

The House having again divided, the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 48.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House decides to reconsider the motion whereby the yeas and nays were ordered, and the question now recurs on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. McRAE. Is not that the pending question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PUGH. While we are laboring here with closed doors in this dense atmosphere in the presence of this magnificent assemblage of ladies who grace with their presence this kindergarten performance in the national schoolhouse, I would like to know whether a call of the House suspends the rule against smoking in the Hall?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not. If any gentleman smokes in the Hall he infringes the rule.

Mr. PUGH. Not only one, but quite a number of those present have been infringing the rule, and while it may be fun for the boys on the floor, it must be very disagreeable to the ladies and other visitors in the galleries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES], who has just made a motion to adjourn, that the question before the House is on the motion to adjourn, and the pending question is whether the House will order the yeas and nays on that motion.

The question being taken, the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that motion to be out of order. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. PICKLER. From that decision of the Chair I appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal. [Applause.]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 27, nays 119, not voting 209; as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7083) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1831); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CURTIS of New York, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 7) authorizing the issue of duplicate medals where the originals have been lost or destroyed, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1834); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4985) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Colorado, etc., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1847); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 91) providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee, and certain claims of Tennessee against the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1848); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. TRACEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

The bill (S. 506) entitled "An act to correct the military record of John Fox, of Albany, Oreg." (Report No. 1826.)

The bill (H. R. 2995) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Willoughby, of Washington, Kans., and grant him an honorable discharge. (Report No. 1827.)

The bill (H. R. 6557) for the relief of Daniel Martin. (Report No. 1828.)

The bill (S. 65) entitled "An act for the relief of J. E. Gillingwaters." (Report No. 1829.)

By Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

The bill (H. R. 4093) for the relief of Samuel D. Hubbard. (Report No. 1830.)

By Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on the Public Lands: The bill (S. 1320) entitled "An act to confirm the title to certain lands in William Morgan and Harrison Moore, and to require the issue of patents therefor." (Report No. 1835.)

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 8788) granting a pension to Mary A. Widdores. (Report No. 1836.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 8451) granting an increase of pension to Samuel McConaughey. (Report No. 1837.)

By Mr. CROWTHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 8162) to increase the pension of William H. Dyer. (Report No. 1838.)

By Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 6535) granting a pension to Lovezila L. Patterson. (Report No. 1839.)

By Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 7153) increasing the pension of George W. Peters, Company I, Twelfth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry. (Report No. 1840.)

By Mr. POOLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 3691) granting a pension to Catharine Kelley, widow of John Kelley. (Report No. 1841.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4967) granting an increase of pension to Joseph P. Harmon, late private in Company K, Fifth Maine Volunteers, and Company B, Seventh Maine Volunteers. (Report No. 1842.)

By Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 7582) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha A. Avery. (Report No. 1843.)

By Mr. WILSON of New York, from the Committee on Naval Affairs: The bill (H. R. 8197) for the relief of John T. Guerin. (Report No. 1844.)

By Mr. COLSON, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 5409) for the relief of J. T. Taylor. (Report No. 1845.)

By Mr. ALLEN of Utah, from the Committee on the Public Lands: The bill (H. R. 6260) to provide compensation for a bridge and for buildings and other improvements constructed by certain persons upon public lands afterwards set apart and reserved as the Yellowstone National Park. (Report No. 1846.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SOUTHWICK: A bill (H. R. 8998) to establish a dollar-and-a-half-a-day standard of wages for labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. SKINNER: A bill (H. R. 8999) to prohibit the further issuance of interest-bearing bonds without the consent of Congress—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 9000) for the erection of a monument to Gen. U. S. Grant in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SPALDING: A bill (H. R. 9001) to regulate the payment of import duties—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 9023) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California: A joint resolution (H. Res. 185) declaratory of the intent and meaning of a certain act named therein—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A concurrent resolution (House Con. Res. No. 48) for the printing of copies of the report of the Joint Committee on the Dedication of Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. DRAPER: A resolution (House Res. No. 338) requesting the Committee on Rules to fix an early date for the consideration of the bills reported by the Committee on Patents—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A memorial of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the navigation of the Connecticut River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of Mrs. Celia Ford, late a laundress in Battery F, Second Regiment, United States Artillery; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROSIUS: A bill (H. R. 9002) for the relief of the heirs of H. E. Muhlenberg, late collector of the Ninth United States internal-revenue district of Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DOOLITTLE: A bill (H. R. 9003) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of John M. R. Scott—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DOWNING: A bill (H. R. 9004) to place the name of Charles S. Devine on the pension roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALL: A bill (H. R. 9005) to pay J. E. Blue for grain and stock taken from him by United States troops in July, 1864—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUBBARD: A bill (H. R. 9006) to pay to James E. Blue for grain and stock taken from him by United States troops in July, 1864—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KULP: A bill (H. R. 9007) granting a pension to William Ogden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAYTON: A bill (H. R. 9008) for the relief of Dieterick Glander—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A bill (H. R. 9009) granting a pension to William Barrett—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCALL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9010) for the relief of the estate of Dr. J. M. Walker, deceased, late of Madison County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9011) for the relief of the estate of Samuel Hayes, deceased, late of Madison County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9012) for the relief of T. M. D. Coln, of McNairy County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 9013) granting an increase of pension to J. F. Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NOONAN: A bill (H. R. 9014) granting a pension to Elise Marsteller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUGH: A bill (H. R. 9015) for the relief of T. P. Salyer, of Lawrence County, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SORG: A bill (H. R. 9016) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Frank Miller, Company K, Fifth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9017) to pension Mrs. Mary A. Tupper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, in response to a resolution of the 9th instant, calling for a careful and thorough inquiry to be made regarding the number of aliens employed in the Department of Justice, stating that there are no aliens employed in that Department; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1365) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut; and

An act (S. 2870) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington.

IMPROVEMENTS IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2540) to provide compensation for a bridge and for buildings and other improvements constructed by certain persons upon public lands afterwards set apart and reserved as the Yellowstone National Park.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "one"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named the several sums mentioned herein, to be received and accepted in each case as full and final compensation for a certain bridge, buildings, and other improvements constructed and made by said persons upon public lands afterwards reserved and set apart as the Yellowstone National Park by the act of March 1, 1872, namely:

To C. J. Baronett, of Gardiner, Mont., for the bridge known as "Baronett's Bridge," over the Yellowstone River, and the approaches thereto, $5,000.

To James C. McCartney, of Gardiner, Mont., for certain buildings at or near Mammoth Hot Springs taken and used by the United States, $3,000.

To Matthew McGuirk, of Los Angeles, Cal., for certain buildings at or near Mammoth Hot Springs taken and used by the United States, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DENVER, CRIPPLE CREEK AND SOUTHWESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way for a railroad through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado, to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is a local bill, I ask that it may be put upon its passage now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK LARKIN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1381) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Patrick Larkin. It is a bill of only a few lines and will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Patrick Larkin, late a private in Company K, Fourth Regiment of Vermont Infantry Volunteers, and to issue an honorable discharge as of date February 17, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS IN DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to the resolution of the Senate dated the 9th instant and addressed to the Secretary of State, a report of that officer, accompanied by copies of printed documents containing the information desired respecting the historical archives deposited in the Department of State.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, May 16, 1896.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT M'KEESPORT, PA.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent to call up a brief public building bill, the bill (S. 3105) to provide for the erection of a public building at McKeesport, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices at McKeesport, State of Pennsylvania, the cost of site and building, including the vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $200,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRIAL OF CITIZENS ARRESTED IN CUBA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask leave to call up the resolution of instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations, relative to the trial of citizens arrested in Cuba, which I submitted yesterday morning.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make a report from a committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will not the Senator allow morning business to be transacted?

Mr. MORGAN. I merely want to take the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that the Senator from Alabama be allowed to call up the resolution, and then he will yield.

Mr. TURPIE. I should like to call up a bill. I do not think it will lead to any debate.

Mr. MORGAN. I have submitted a resolution of instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations upon a matter that is of vital importance to this country. It will take me but a little while to express my views upon it and inform the Senate of the grounds upon which I proceed and the necessity for it. I have not had even the opportunity of disturbing the Senate or annoying it for a long while, and I trust I shall not be deprived of a very brief moment in which to express my views on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The resolution indicated by the Senator from Alabama will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is directed to inquire and report to the Senate what are the rights of the United States, under our treaties with Spain, as to the trial of our citizens arrested in Cuba and now under condemnation and sentenced to death by the Spanish military tribunals for alleged offenses of a political or other character against the Spanish laws or Government, and to report on that subject by bill or otherwise.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State is directed to send to the Senate literal copies of the original text of a protocol of conference and declarations concerning judicial procedure, signed by Caleb Cushing, as minister of the United States, and Señor Don Fernando Y. Collantes, minister of the King of Spain, on January 12, 1877, as the same was executed and interchanged, both in the English and Spanish languages; and that he will inform the Senate whether the established or agreed original text of said protocol is in the English or the Spanish language.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of State is further directed, if it is not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to the Senate copies of any correspondence that has taken place between the Governments of Spain and the United States respecting the said protocol and its bearing or effect upon the trial and condemnation of citizens of the United States who were recently captured on or near the vessel called the Competitor, which was seized under Spanish authority in Cuban waters, or near to that island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the recent action of Congress relating to the civil war in the Island of Cuba has not been received by the Government or people of Spain as a rightful declaration of the attitude of the Government and people of the United States upon this subject, in which the rights and welfare of our country are vitally concerned.

In that declaration of our opinions as to the existence of public war in Cuba, and that the parties engaged in it should be recognized as belligerents, there is no just cause of complaint on the part of the Government of Spain that Congress has in any act or declaration either overstepped their plain rights or that they have exhibited an unfriendly disposition toward that Government.

And in the further and more decisive step proposed to be taken under the resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations that I offered in the Senate, if it is adopted by Congress, there can be no just deduction or inference of our unfriendliness to Spain as a nation.

It is the right of the Government of the United States to declare the status and define the duties of its citizens as they relate to and are affected by the existence of a state of war in any foreign country. If the motive is just, no nation can be called in question for such a declaration. This duty becomes imperative when the rights of our people demand that such a formal declaration shall be made to define their international status, for their own regulation and protection in their intercourse with a country in which war is flagrant. We are not fixing the status of Cuba, but of our own people. Our proximity to the Island of Cuba, our important commercial relations with those people, the ownership of valuable property that our people have acquired in Cuba under the sanction of treaty agreements with Spain, the actual residence of many of our people in Cuba, and the resort of a great number of Cubans to the United States seeking hospitality, create relations of such an intimate nature with that island that we are compelled to examine into the condition of their people and to determine for ourselves whether they are at peace or engaged in war. Our extradition treaties with Spain make such an inquiry an unavoidable duty.

In the performance of this duty we regret that a long series of events in Cuba that it would not be profitable to enumerate, but are extremely painful to our conceptions of humanity, has so excited the sympathies of our people that our action as a Government, however impartial, will be attributed by Spain to an inimical feeling on the part of the United States. We do not disavow our share in that state of feeling that animates the people of the United States, but we base our proposed action upon our strict right under the laws of nations, and solely upon the duty that the Government owes to the people of the United States.

The laws of nations clearly establish the right of any neutral power to define its neutrality and the duties thereby enjoined under those laws by declaring that, as to its government and people, it will recognize the existence of a state of war in a foreign country and will accord equal rights to both belligerents.

The instances in which this right has been exercised are so numerous as to remove the subject of its legitimacy from the field of discussion, and its honest exercise is no just cause of offense to any nation. If Spain denies us this right, it can only be upon the ground that it is not honestly exercised. In the case that is quite analogous in principle and in the facts, of the recognition by Spain of the belligerency of the Confederate States government, before any of the great battles of our civil war had been fought, the United States did not assume that the action of Spain was influenced by any unfriendly spirit or purpose of hostility, and did not dispute the right of Spain to perform that important act.

It was then conceded to Spain that the proximity of Cuba to the Southern States and the existence of negro slavery in both the neighboring countries was a just cause for her precaution in declaring that public war existed in the United States, that the parties engaged were lawful belligerents, and that she would maintain a strict neutrality between them. If the United States had known that Spain was then contemplating the invasion of Santo Domingo and had formed a league with other powers to execute that purpose on the pretext that the United States had designs upon that island, intending to acquire a right to the Bay of Samona, her recognition of the belligerency of the Confederate States would have been justly regarded as being unfriendly to the United States.

When the designs as to the Bay of Samona, so attributed by Spain to the United States, were found to be untrue, and Spain still pushed the occupation of Santo Domingo with the purpose of conquest, and was moved to this invasion by the ulterior design of establishing in that island a military occupancy that would hold the United States in check and endanger her frontiers, the unfriendly act of Spain was manifest.

Allusion is made to these facts, not to justify the future action of the United States with reference to Cuba by a spirit of retaliation for the past, but to present a contrast which, at least, is not disparaging to the United States in her attitude toward the Cuban people. The United States, chiefly for the purpose of avoiding difficulties with Governments whose colonies are near us and whose subjects are under monarchic rule, to which our people and their institutions are opposed, in the early days of the Republic enacted very stringent laws, added to the laws of nations, for preventing our people from interfering in the local affairs of neighboring States.

At great cost and under circumstances of a most trying character we have carefully performed this self-imposed task. No just charge of indifference or delinquency has been made by any of these neighboring powers against the United States respecting the faithful execution of our own laws on this subject.

For reasons that relate exclusively to the dissatisfaction of the Cubans with Spanish rule under the Spanish monarchy, which we have in no way incited or promoted, insurrection, attended with violence, war, and rapine, has, on several occasions, spread through the island, and has included in its disastrous progress every interest and every human being in Cuba. Not one of these commotions has failed to draw into its vortex many citizens of the United States, and very important rights of persons and property have been frequently exposed to serious danger. At the close of each of these outbreaks the United States have been compelled to present to Spain many large and just claims for compensation for very heavy losses sustained by our people. Some of the most important of these claims have been the price of the blood of our people that was shed, oftentimes under circumstances of cruelty that were shocking to humanity, and by the order of the Spanish authorities in Cuba.

It has been and is still a most trying and difficult task to restrain the wrath of our people when they have seen their own Government, restrained by the supposed duty of nonintervention, stand by while these unchristian barbarities were being perpetrated. Our people have been naturally impatient while their Government has been deliberately waiting for the opportunity to measure the worth of these wrongs in dollars, at the end of protracted delays and finessing by the diplomatic agents of the Spanish Government. The American people have been the anxious witnesses of this terrible series of wrongs for many years, and have the record of them stored up in their memory. They are written in the indignant declarations of every American President and statesman who has ever made an official utterance on the subject, and yet these wrongs have been repeated and endured until our right to resent them is scornfully disputed by Spain. None of our representatives have expressed either an opinion or a doubt to the contrary in the past, and whatever doubts are now expressed, the facts will forever remain unchanged. They can not be changed until Spain changes her harsh policy. Our just pride in the principles of our Government, which embody the essence of human liberty and encourage the aspirations of all who crave that element and condition of responsible manhood, and our recollections of the price at which this great blessing has been obtained, alike impel us to indulge our active sympathy for all men who are engaged in a struggle for the right of local self-government. But the people of the United States, while they are conscious of the claims of our system of government upon the hearts of all enlightened people, are not propagandists of their free institutions. They respect the right of every people to settle for themselves all matters that relate to their internal affairs. This sacred duty has held them in check in every case where wars in foreign states have occurred, unless in the conduct of such wars the rights of humanity, as they are recognized in Christian countries, are flagrantly violated by the belligerents.

It is not incumbent on them, nor do they feel or admit that it is their duty, to witness at their doors the use of barbarous means for the repression of the demand of a people for liberty and for stifling the outcries of the victims of arrogant and cruel despotism, whoever may be the despot or however ancient may be his title. If the dealing of the Spanish Government with the people of Cuba was such as to challenge the approval of the public opinion of the world there could be no need for the suppression of information as to the conduct of hostilities and the results of conflicts of arms after their occurrence, such as is practiced by that Government with such rigid energy. Other nations from which the truth is excluded are not the enemies of Spain, nor are they spies upon her military operations. The island is guarded along the entire coast with numerous and powerful war vessels, so that there is little opportunity for access to the interior, and a strict censorship of the press and mails and telegraphic communications excludes the world from knowledge of the truth in respect of current events in Cuba. American newspaper correspondents who write anything that is not derogatory to the Cuban army or people are expelled from the island. This close censorship is only an imputation upon the people of the United States, and is based upon the assumption that they are Spain's secret enemies. Our people are incapable of disguising their opinions or sentiments, either through fear or for the sake of secret advantage.

Notwithstanding these difficulties and the vigilance of the Spaniards, enough has transpired to prove beyond denial that a great civil war has been waged in Cuba since the autumn of 1894 that has increased in magnitude with startling rapidity and strength.

The remotest and least informed nations of Christendom know that public civil war exists in Cuba and that it is conducted by armies in the field, regularly organized, equipped, and commanded by commissioned officers, in which are enlisted 150,000 Spanish troops, and more than 50 war vessels, and not less than 50,000 Cuban troops.

It is utterly preposterous to assert that a state of war does not exist in Cuba in the face of such facts and when there is not an important town or village where the Spaniards have possession that is not held as a military camp or post. Yet it is upon this denial by Spain that a state of war exists in Cuba that she is demanding of the United States that we shall assume the false attitude that we have no right, even for the protection of the rights of our own people, to assert the truth and act upon that assertion. It is required of us that we shall recognize a state of perfect peace as existing in Cuba, when every human life in the island is in constant peril and no place there that is not exposed constantly to deadly warfare with torch and sword. We are warned by Spain that if we formally acknowledge the fact that war exists in Cuba, and regulate the conduct of our people accordingly, she will consider such a declaration as an unfriendly act and, at her option, a just cause of war.

If we were a Spanish dependency or province our position would scarcely be assigned to us with a more exacting assertion of royal authority than Spain sets up, as her right, to compel us to deny the truth of the situation as it is in Cuba. Our Government is required by Spain to ignore or deny the truth as to the war in Cuba. The recognition of the existence of open, public war in any country or between any two countries can not be made in accordance with the laws of nations without the necessary predicate that there are at least two belligerent parties.

If the collision and struggle of arms is a riot or insurrection, it is not a state of war. But no nation can arrogate to itself the exclusive right, by its mere affirmation and contrary to the fact, to say that a strife that begun in insurrection, and continues without abatement for more than a year, has not assumed the proportions of a public war, when that fact concerns the rights or interests of the people of a foreign government.

It is no breach of the peace of nations for such a foreign government to know, acknowledge, and declare the truth.

If the strife originated in open rebellion, with an organized provisional government that declares its right to political autonomy and independence, and is not a mere insurrection intended to secure a redress of grievances from a government whose authority is acknowledged, the state of public war will be attributed to such an outbreak when it has assumed the phase of de facto government, and it should be so recognized when it has attained to the power and authority of a government de facto over the region that it assumes to govern. In either of these cases, however, any foreign government may, when its interests are affected, recognize such a government as being rightful while its power continues, although it is an insurrection, without giving just ground of offense to the mother government. In the case of Cuba there has not been a day since Spain lost her other American possessions that a large number of native Cubans have not felt deeply the desire and the necessity, as they view their condition, of entire independence of the Spanish Crown.

This spirit and motive have alone caused the frequent attempts at revolution that have made Cuba a battle ground, consecrated to liberty, and the common cemetery of worthy patriots.

While grievances, political and personal, and the domination of greedy despoilers set over them in authority by a power that was foreign to them in every interest and sympathy have aroused the native Cubans to violent resistance, in the wars that have ensued the aspiration for freedom and independence has been the great moving impulse in all these numerous attempts at revolutions. More distinctly than ever before the present war in Cuba is a war for independence and a determined purpose to establish a republican form of government.

The fact of the existence of such a war in Cuba may escape the vision of men in authority or elude their recognition of the truth, but it shocks the common sense of mankind that we are to be compelled, by some diplomatic oversight or deception, to admit as a nation that peace prevails in Cuba. This diplomatic fallacy has for its support several technical apologies and excuses that only make its allowance less agreeable to a truth-loving people. Among these diplomatic evasions is the alleged fact that the Cubans have no fortified towns or military defenses in their occupation. This grave suggestion is answered by the military saying that "Forts are strongholds that are made to be taken," and the Cubans do not choose to build them for that purpose; but more fully by the fact that the wise strategy of Cuban generalship causes them to avoid such situations and thereby deprive the enemy of the advantages of his superiority in artillery.

It is further alleged as a reason why the Republic of Cuba can not be a lawful belligerent that she has no seaports and no fleet. The attempt to hold a seaport without heavy artillery and strong defenses would only be an invitation to the entire Spanish navy to beleaguer the place. Such folly may be chivalric and charming to dilettante warriors and carpet knights, but it can not mislead a Cuban general. To a diplomat such a situation in Cuba would dispense with the loneliness of feeling that afflicts him when precedents can not be found to settle his doubts, but to a sensible military leader it would be the climax of absurdity. It is not the lines of precedent that Cuba is trying to establish, but independence. Another supposed impediment to a recognition of the belligerency of Cuba is that she has no ship or flag on the seas.

If Spain, with the support of the United States and other powers, can lawfully hold such armed vessels to be pirates, and that Cuban merchantmen are confiscable for sailing under Cuban registry or commissions, the assertion that they have no ships is equivalent to the declaration that the Republic of Cuba will not be permitted to have ships that may navigate the ocean under her own flag. If she is not a belligerent power, her war ships are pirates and her merchantmen are contraband of the seas. This is the condition that we are helping Spain to fix, irrevocably, on Cuba. If war exists, the rights of war are of the same nature on the sea as on the land, and that fact being established, no honorable nation can refuse to Cuba the rights of war on sea or land if the decision of the question becomes material. If, for this reason, we deny belligerent rights to Cuba, it is not because she has no ships, but because we will not permit her to sail them. If war actually exists between Spain and a body of people in Cuba the United States is bound by the laws of nations to impartial neutrality as to each belligerent. If, under such conditions, a Cuban vessel, duly documented, should enter the port of New York on a commercial errand the United States could not refuse to protect her without assuming the rôle of an ally of Spain. We are not bound in honor or duty to aid Spain in putting down the Cuban struggle for liberty, and the people of the United States who are so severely censured by the Queen Regent for their alleged difference in sentiment and opinion from our President as to Cuba, would refuse to support him if, in any way, he should become the virtual ally and helper of that cruel monarchy.

While none of our Presidents have been influenced by such a purpose, and all of them who have dealt with this subject have only been controlled by a sense of duty, it is still true that, in their zeal to do right, they have often been the most potent force in aiding Spain in her persistent course of cruelty and bloodshed toward the people of Cuba. And in this mistaken zeal they have often inflicted severe and unnecessary wrongs upon our own people by failing to use their power to prevent them. If Spain had understood three years ago that, under the exact conditions that now exist in Cuba, the United States would recognize the belligerency of both parties, the Cubans would have been at least as free today as the Canadians are. But Spain has regarded the United States as being so far committed in the opposite direction that now she becomes insolently arrogant in denying to us that right.

Our zealous efforts to prevent our people from expressing, in their conduct, the sympathy for Cuba that is honorable to them and responsive to their most cherished principles has met with no other recognition from Spain than a demand that we shall continue in that rôle, as a duty we owe to her, without regard to any cruelties she may choose to inflict, even upon our citizens, when they fall into her hands as prisoners of war and are massacred by her relentless and unchristian agents as traitors and pirates. Our people have not forgotten the Virginius tragedy.

If it were possible to suppose that a condition of affairs could exist in Canada similar to that which is frequently recurring and now exists in Cuba, the United States would hasten to vindicate the Anglo-Saxon race from the dishonoring stigma, and the whole world would applaud our intervention. But Canada is a happy colony because the Anglo-Saxon rules with justice, and the Crown of Great Britain honors and loves its subjects. The United States have not at any time proposed a single step in the direction of actual intervention in Cuban affairs except by a tender of friendly offices between Spain and Cuba. These overtures having been repelled as an insulting interference, we now propose to take care of our own people by defining our attitude toward the contending forces in Cuba as that of absolute neutrality between belligerent powers. We have not heretofore been actually or properly neutral in these long-continued and frequently occurring wars in Cuba.

All our power as a Government has been exerted with extraordinary vigilance in the direction of preventing the Cubans from all opportunity to supply themselves with arms and war material and even hospital stores from the United States. At this time the objection that Spain urges against our recognition of Cuban belligerency is based upon the fact that it would open our markets equally to Cuba and Spain for the purchase of munitions of war. We are required to deny to suffering patriots what we gladly supply to Weyler and Spain. Spain can purchase in our markets whatever arms and munitions she desires with the full knowledge of our Government that they are to be used in making war against her own people under the thin pretext of suppressing insurrection, and no opposition is made to the cruel work.

Spain can send her ships to New York and load them with boxes of guns and ammunition and label them there as being intended to slay Cubans who are fighting for liberty in organized armies, while a Cuban general would be seized and tried in our courts if he dared to purchase like munitions for making war in defense of his native land. Spain threatens us with her serious displeasure if we accord to the Cubans such privileges.

If an American sends powder or dynamite to his own iron mines in Cuba to be used in his business, Spain limits the quantity until the work must be abandoned, or entirely forbids the importation, if that Government has a fear or apprehension that possibly these explosives may fall into the hands of the Cubans. If an American merchant should ship arms or cartridges to his agent or consignee in Habana for sale in the general market, it would be seized as contraband of war in the absence of a special permit. It is the frequent practice in Cuba to declare articles imported as being contraband, while Spain is declaiming with indignation that no war exists in Cuba. What laws, except the laws of war, exclude contraband goods from commerce?

If, for any just cause, the United States should be compelled to declare war against Spain, as the situation is now that declaration would make of every Cuban our national enemy, although the cause of such a declaration might be the cruelty of Spain toward the Cuban people, or some interference with the rights of some Cuban ship in our ports, or a demand for the extradition of a Cuban charged with being engaged in a riot, which we know to be a political offense, because it was a participation in a public civil war.

If our people are captured or are held liable to capture by Spain for landing military supplies in the ports or on the coasts of Cuba, and are claimed to be liable to the death penalty as pirates or insurgents or rebels, either under the municipal laws of Spain or under the international law, as has been done during the present war and also in the former ten years' war in Cuba, it is a national shame that such a condition of affairs is permitted by the United States out of friendly deference to a power that insists that peace prevails in that island, when all the world knows and Congress has declared that open public war is flagrant there. When these dangers that are practically unavoidable and beyond the power of the Government are a constantly impending peril to the peace of the country, and when they can be removed by our just declaration that the laws of war apply to such conduct and not the laws of treason, piracy, insurrection, or rebellion, it is almost inconceivable that our Government should be so derelict in its duty to our own people as to refuse to them this protection.

Some of our citizens are now in Spanish prisons, condemned to death for an offense that is no more than mere smuggling under the laws of nations, if Cuba is now in a state of peace. If war exists in Cuba, the offense is no more than a futile effort to run a blockade.

Under our treaties with Spain these people, whatever may be the grade of their alleged offense, are not amenable to trial by a military tribunal. Such a court can have no jurisdiction of them in respect of the offense with which they are charged.

No decent government can demand or accept a pardon for its citizens as a satisfaction of their wrongs, or for the national insult, when the tribunal that sentences them to death has no jurisdiction to arraign and try them. Especially is this true where it is agreed between the powers, in express treaty stipulations, that such a tribunal shall not exercise jurisdiction over our people in such cases.

When wrongs so flagrant are inflicted upon our people, the demand should be peremptory that the parties so convicted should first be discharged from arrest under such a sentence and then a demand for a civil trial if Spain desires their further prosecution. Until that sentence is set aside upon the disclaimer on the part of Spain of any right to impose it as the judgment of a court-martial the United States can not, in duty or honor, enter into any discussion with Spain as to a trial of the accused before any other tribunal. Until it is set aside every day that these men suffer imprisonment is a day of national humiliation to us as a people. All this complication would have been avoided if the United States had been as prompt in declaring the belligerent rights of Cuba as Spain was in declaring the belligerent rights of the Confederate States in 1862.

The comparison of the action of the two Governments on these occasions is more to the credit of Spain's courageous sense of national right and duty than it is to our supposed magnanimity. Spain's conduct did not forfeit our friendship toward that nation in 1862. Why should our recognition of Cuban belligerency be now regarded by Spain as an unfriendly act? It can only be for the reason that it disappoints the expectation of Spain that the United States will always be, as they have been, Spain's most efficient ally in the suppression of Cuba's struggle for independence.

The rights of citizens of the United States in Cuba are at this time dependent, in almost every way, upon the attitude of their Government on the question whether that island is in a state of peace or war. As the Government of the United States regards this question, so must their conduct be regulated while in Cuba. If insurrection exists in Cuba, our people must not take part in it against the Government of Spain. They may assist Spain in its repression. If their property is destroyed or damaged by insurrectionists that Spain has the power to repress, but neglects or fails to do so, they may claim damages from that Government and, if they are fortunate, the damages may be compensated at a future time.

If the insurrection is so powerful that Spain is unable to prevent the damage done to our people resident in Cuba, their losses stand credited to the chances that occur in a state of imperfect war, and reason demands the sacrifice under the international law. So that, in a war of such magnitude as that which now prevails, although Spain may declare that it is peace, disturbed by insurrection, the claim for damages suffered by our people is, in like manner, relegated to very doubtful prospects of future recognition or payment.

It would be morally intolerable that, after this terrible struggle for the dominion of Cuba, the United States should make war upon Spain for her inability to pay or her refusal to recognize the claims of our people who have suffered in the throes of so great a convulsion. No friendly state would be likely ever to press such demands upon so unfortunate a country. Our own experience in making such reclamations must inform us of the extreme improbability of success in making such demands, even when the injuries are inflicted, under such trying circumstances, by the direct act of Spanish officials.

If, however, as is the case in Cuba, the insurrectionists embody almost the entire rural population of the island, and occupy it, except in towns, cities, and military camps actually held by Spanish troops, and thus possess, hold, and control two-thirds of the area of the island, and if the large majority of the native population are engaged in the military control and defense of that area, and their country thus held is invaded by armies imported from Spain, there arises a presumption—such as arose in the Revolutionary struggle of 1776 in the United States—which has the sanction of the laws of nations and the cordial approval of mankind, that the Spaniards have become the invaders and the Cubans are the true defenders of their native land.

Can we so far forget the history of our own struggle for liberty, justice, honor, duty, life, and humanity in our Revolutionary war as to be indifferent to the heroic struggles and sufferings of the Cuban people who are fighting with organized armies and marvelous success in a cause so nearly identical with that cause which in its triumph has been rewarded with results that now comprise the chief glory of the world?

Massachusetts from 1675 to 1730 was in almost every respect as much insulated as Cuba is. With powerful tribes of hostile Indians in the midst of the white settlements and occupying the continent to the west, she had little support from her feeble colonial neighbors. With resources of war that consisted of the powder horns, shot bags, and hunting knives that belonged to her men individually, and with scant stores of provisions even for the families of the colonists, they protected themselves at once against King Philip and the King of England.

In 1684 the high court of chancery in England declared the charter of Massachusetts forfeited, and Joseph Dudley was appointed governor. He was quickly succeeded by Sir Edward Andros. This governor and his council decreed tax laws against the people that were arbitrary and oppressive, just as Spain has done in Cuba, only that the burden laid upon the people of Massachusetts bears no comparison with the enormous exactions laid upon the people of Cuba.

Andros was submitted to for two years, while Cuba has been ground down for nearly a century. In April, 1689, the people of Massachusetts rose in arms, and "the men of Boston," aided by the men with the powderhorns and hunting knives from the back settlements, seized Andros and imprisoned him, seized the frigate Rose, stormed the British fortifications and took them, restored the old magistrates to office, and mended the seal of the old charter, which Andros had broken, and restored their ancient liberties.

That was insurrection. It was successful, but it was a battle for restoration of just government and not a war for independence. Great Britain had the good sense and the self-respect to give heed and due consideration to the will of the people, expressed even in acts of violent resistance to oppression. That was not a case for the recognition of the rights of belligerency in favor of the people of Massachusetts, because they were not waging war for independence, but for their rights under the British constitution. This insurrection gave peace and harmony to the relations between the Crown and the colony for nearly one hundred years. A later occupant of the throne, surrounded by an arbitrary ministry, undertook to repeat these aggressions in a different and milder form, and claimed the right to tax the colonies to pay the expenses of the war with France for the sovereignty of the Continent. These and other forms of asserting absolute power over the colonies in violation of their chartered rights created the fixed conviction among the people—not all of them, but the great majority—that independence of the British Crown was their only hope for justice, liberty, honor, and peace.

In this progress also Cuba is only repeating the history of our deliverance, with this difference in the surrounding conditions—that our wrongs were mere scratches on the surface as compared with those which mutilate the vitals of Cuba.

Our next arousing was with arms in the hands of the people who, without a general government and in scattered detachments, opened the war for independence and fought battles, led by colonels and captains, before independence had been declared by the thirteen colonies and before they had a general in the field. Again Cuba is found following painfully in the pathway to glorious liberty that our fathers marked out. Again Massachusetts came to the front and drove Hutchinson, the governor of the colony, into disgraceful retirement, rebelled against his government, but failed to overthrow it.

General Gage, with the British army and navy to support his authority, succeeded him as governor and maintained in theory, as Spain is doing in Cuba, the sovereign supremacy of the Crown. This time it was open rebellion, not insurrection. Boston was closed to all commerce as a seaport, and Marblehead was made the seaport of the colony.

But Gage was driven out, and Massachusetts took control of her own affairs and joined the general congress of the colonies. At that time her population, exclusive of slaves, did not exceed 250,000 souls.

The nations of the earth were so impressed with the heroism of the struggle and the grand purpose of independence for which these scattered peoples were fighting, that several of the leading powers hastened to recognize, not their belligerency merely, but their independence. Those powers did not stop to compare the battles that had been lost or won by the rebels, nor the number and equipment of the armies in the field, nor the ships on the sea, nor the size of the town that gave temporary shelter to their fugitive civil authorities, nor did they wait for the rebels to win some decisive battle, nor to feel the pulse of European monarchs to ascertain their wishes or to consult with them as to diplomatic precedent or propriety.

Men lived and acted in those days with a sense of duty toward God and a feeling of sympathy for the oppressed. If Cuba could find a race or nation in which such honest manhood has a courageous recognition, the fetters of Spain, now ready to fall from her limbs, would no longer offend against all humanity and the sacred cause of liberty and independence. While we dare to remember the history of Massachusetts, Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, and their sister colonies without a feeling of self-reproach, we will not be found engaged in the humiliating task of searching for technical and frivolous excuses for debarring Cuba, by our action, from the power of self-defense against tyrants such as Weyler.

A citizen of the United States residing in a rural district of Cuba would deserve the regard and care of his own Government if he should refuse to espouse the divine right of the Spanish monarchy to conduct such a war as is flagrant there, under the false pretense that it is only a legitimate effort to suppress insurrection. If he should witness, as he does and is compelled to do, the most inhuman butcheries of innocent noncombatants—old men, women, and children—by the Spanish invaders and the death penalty or other infamous punishment inflicted upon enlisted men who are captured in battle, he would have the right to insist that his Government, for his protection, should declare that he was living in the presence of war, instead of licensed rapine and murder under the pretext of suppressing insurrection. And his country would be derelict if it refused to listen to his plea under such circumstances.

If the Cubans, under such conditions, should take his property, or compel him to pay tribute or taxes, or should compel him to enlist in their army, he would only yield, as every man may lawfully do, to the vis major, and his justification would be perfect. Even if captured in battle, after such an enlistment, the power of the United States under the laws of nations would, if it were exerted in time, be rightfully sufficient to save him from a felons' death or imprisonment for life at the hands of the Spaniards.

Just at this point, and to meet such emergencies, this citizen of the United States should find the law of protection that all men and all nations are bound to respect. It is the right and duty that is all pervading, which shelters those from the crime of treason, rebellion, piracy, or insurrection, who yield to the authority of a government de facto, and are not officially connected with its conduct.

Nations are bound by this law, and must respect it for the sake of humanity.

If there can be any legal test by which to determine when a body of people engaged in hostilities in a given area of country are entitled to the rights of belligerency, to exempt them from personal exposure to the penalties of insurrection, it is this test: "Does the government they are conducting, whether it is civil or military or both, in fact exclude the former government from its dominion over a region of country that is capable of demarcation by boundaries with reasonable certainty, or an area that corresponds with a known political or geographical division or district?"

If such a government exists, while it continues in authority, it is a lawful belligerent under the laws of nations, and may be so recognized without offense to the opposing party.

When a government is so lawfully entitled to a belligerent character, it is because of the rights of the people within its jurisdiction to protection, and not because of any element of legitimacy that its rulers may assume or possess. From whatever source its power may come, it is only the existence of the power and not the method or plan of its administration that entitles it to recognition.

The people it controls must obey a de facto government, because they can not resist it, or because they are under no obligation to do so.

It can not be denied that the Cuban organization, now engaged in war with Spain, exercises jurisdiction, either military or civil or both, over much the larger area of the island, and that it exercises authority over the great body of native Cubans in the rural districts of the island. Nor can it be denied that our citizens in that area, or enlisted in those armies, are subject to that de facto government.

It is their right to have their home government recognize the belligerency of the de facto government in that part of Cuba, because they can not otherwise escape the penalties of insurrection against Spanish authority if Spain chooses to enforce them. If we declare that war exists between Spain and the de facto government that commands the obedience of our people in Cuba who are within its power, the laws of war, as they are defined in the laws of nations, become applicable to them, and forbid Spain to treat them as insurrectionists.

As between Cuba and Spain and the United States, considered as Governments, the demand for such recognition is a matter of mere policy, in which our course is purely discretionary, but when the rights of our citizens are involved the question that we must settle is whether a state of public war exists in that island. If such is the fact neither of the belligerents can insist that our people there, who fight in either army, and their property may be treated as being subject to punishment or forfeiture for the offense of insurrection or rebellion against either Government.

Nothing could be more cruel than that the Government of the United States should say to a citizen enlisted in the Cuban army that he must wait until Cuba has won her independence before we can interpose to save his life or property if he is captured in war. If war exists in Cuba the American citizen residing there within the military command of the Cuban armies should not be required to remain subject to the laws of Spain and liable to its heavy penalties until the Cuban government de facto has become the government de jure by the success of its arms nor until it has a fixed capital, fortified posts, open ports under its authority, and ships bearing its flag on the seas.

If open, public war exists in Cuba, the fluctuations of success in battles furnish no reason for delaying the declaration of the fact and placing our people within the control and protection afforded by the laws of war.

If war exists in Cuba, Spain has no right to compel the United States to aid in blockading the ports and coasts of Cuba against our own people and subjecting them to the penalty of death under Spanish law if they are captured in the attempt to smuggle arms into Cuba. If Spain is involved in actual war with opposing armies in Cuba, she must conform her conduct to the laws of war and guard her coasts against those who would enter with their commerce, and such persons when captured must be treated as prisoners of war.

The war in Cuba is political, as contradistinguished from a riot or insurrection not having in contemplation the change of the sovereign dominion of the island from a government by the monarch to a republic in which the people are soverign. This distinction, with all its consequences, is admitted by both Governments in the treaty of extradition concluded between them in 1877, which provides that—

> The provisions of this convention shall not import claim of extradition for any crime or offense of a political character, nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses.

The Government of the United States, on a demand of Spain for the extradition of a soldier enlisted in the Cuban army who is charged with the murder of a Spanish soldier slain by him in battle, would act without hesitancy and without the proof of any specific facts to prove the existence of a public, political war in Cuba, and would refuse extradition upon the undeniable facts that are known in every country in Christendom. She would not wait to count the respective forces, or the ships, or the fortified posts, or the size of the capitols to ascertain if war exists in Cuba and is conducted by governments. If the crime charged is piracy, incendiarism, robbery, or the destruction of property, and is shown to be "connected with any crime or offense of a political character," the demand for extradition would be refused under the terms of that treaty. After providing this sort of hospitality for political refugees from Cuba to our shores, only 90 miles distant, we can not refuse them the protection to which we invite the Cubans when they fly to us for shelter in order to escape death, inflicted as a penalty for the breach of Spanish laws against treason and insurrection, when they have engaged in open, public, political war against Spain. This treaty of extradition was concluded on the 5th of January, 1877, and the Cushing-Collantes protocol "as to the effect of existing treaties in certain matters of judicial procedure" was signed on January 12, 1877, both Governments being represented by the same ministers in each instance.

These agreements were made at the close of the ten years of civil war in Cuba, in which we had many serious controversies with Spain—such as the Virginius affair—the future provision for which, by regular judicial proceedings in the civil courts, was a sine qua non in the preservation of peace between the treaty powers whenever in the future there might be war or insurrection in Cuba.

This protocol applied to the same classes of persons found in either country who are accused of crime and included them, with a single exception, in the enjoyment of the same rights of trial in all respects by the civil courts that are applied to the citizens of the locality in which the proceeding is had. The exception is in respect of citizens of the United States who are taken with arms in hand.

In section 1 of the Spanish concession in this protocol the words used are: "No citizen of the United States residing in Spain," etc., shall be subject to trial, etc., while in the fourth article of the American concession like immunities are granted under the laws of the United States, to "extend to and comprehend all Spaniards residing or being in the United States."

The intent to shelter the same classes of persons under both concessions is clear, and it is essential to the mutuality and equality of the provision for the security of the citizens or subjects of each Government. The discrepancy in the language of these concessions, if it is real and not merely accidental, must be the result of a mistranslation or the imperfect expression in the Spanish idiom of the words "residing or being." It is incredible and absurd to suppose that the United States intended to expose a mere visitor to the Island of Cuba to trial by court-martial for an alleged offense, while its citizens who are resident in Cuba should have a trial by the civil courts with many important rights that are denied to one who is arrested while visiting the Island of Cuba. Spain, however, sticks in the bark in construing this treaty as a stipulation on our part that she may condemn visitors to death by the judgment of a court-martial for offenses that are not military in character.

If such is the true construction of this protocol, it can not be too soon repealed, nor can we be in too great haste to demand that the laws of war shall apply in favor of human life to our people who are captured on suspicion of treason or insurrection while visiting Cuba.

A declaration of belligerency in invitum—as such a declaration is not possible to be made otherwise—can not be the subject of diplomatic intercourse between the United States and Spain. It is not a matter that can be accomplished through a treaty, and can not, therefore, be included in that category of powers.

The Senate can not act upon a mere declaration of belligerency that the President might make by an agreement with Spain, or upon his own executive authority. This subject is not, therefore, among the diplomatic powers of the President. He has no other powers derived from the Constitution in which the function of declaring belligerence is included as a separate or exclusive executive power. If he can touch the subject except as he is empowered by Congress to do, it can only be through his concurrent action with Congress in considering and approving a bill or resolution that has passed the Houses or in returning it with his objections, to the House in which it originated. It would be a dangerous absurdity, if the fact should ever occur, that the President would not be bound by a statute enacted, notwithstanding his veto, that declared the existence of a state of war in this country or in any foreign country, or the existence of a legal state of peace, notwithstanding the occurrence of hostilities, as was once the case in our experience with France.

Our Constitution requires that Congress shall present to the President "every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate before it becomes a law." It also requires that "every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States."

In case of his disapproval of any such "bill, order, resolution, or vote he shall return it to the House in which it shall have originated" with his objections, "who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it." No such action can have the effect of law in such a case until it has been reconsidered; and if "approved" by two-thirds of each House "it shall become a law." Such proceedings are merely imperfect legislation and are still pending for final action, after a veto by the President, until the Houses have reconsidered their vote. If upon such reconsideration the measure is passed by a two-thirds vote, "it shall become a law."

In our country the President is oath bound and conscience bound to obey the laws and to execute them. It is inconceivable that he would refuse to execute a law that is passed over his veto, unless it is such an enactment as Congress has no right or power to make. In a case of disputed power between the Executive and Congress the Supreme Court could settle the question, unless it is merely a political question. In that category the Supreme Court would decide whether the President or Congress is the political department of the Government, and has declared that it will follow that department, and thus possibly the Government would be saved from wreck by such a declaration in the case supposed.

This difficulty is capable of being avoided, so far as Congress is concerned, by tendering to the President the opportunity of coinciding with or vetoing the act of Congress. If he exercises the power to force a reconsideration by the use of his veto power, he participates in the legislation and thereby concedes the power of Congress, under the Constitution, to legislate upon the subject.

If he denies such power and refuses to consider the question, he removes the question practically from the decision of the Supreme Court and assumes to reject their arbitrament. That this course would unsettle the foundations of the Government is a proposition that is scarcely open to discussion.

It is, therefore, the proper course for Congress to observe, to send a joint resolution to the President declaring that a state of public war exists in Cuba and that parties engaged in that war are belligerents, to each of whom the laws of nations equally apply, if such is the opinion of Congress.

This is a duty of wise and sincere patriotism, although it may not be otherwise imperative, for the reason that such a declaration is not a legislative act, and is not, therefore, required to be sent to the President for his approval. Congress can waive that question, and should not raise it in a matter that does not necessarily involve the status of the constitutional distribution of the powers of our own Government, whether it is in a state of war or peace, but only concerns a duty we owe to our own people in determining for ourselves whether a state of war or a condition of peace exists in Cuba.

It was for these reasons and upon this view of the duty of the Senate, as I consider it, that I had the honor to offer the resolution to submit to the President of the United States the joint declaration of the two Houses as to the rights of Cuba, touching the question of belligerency and neutrality. If the President, acting on the assumption that a declaration of the existence of war in Cuba and a recognition of the rights of the parties engaged in that war as belligerents falls within his exclusive constitutional powers in conducting diplomatic intercourse with foreign governments, should choose to ignore the existence of such a war, Congress, after the almost unanimous expression of opinion on that subject, owes it to the honor of the body to devolve the responsibility upon the President. Under existing circumstances some department of the Government must become responsible to our own people and to the judgment of mankind for continuing to permit the falsehood to remain unrebuked that peace prevails in Cuba and that war does not exist there. Whether it is Congress or the President that denies the facts and repudiates the appeal to the sentiments of our people and the honorable duty of our Government, there will be a just account to render in the end for the blood that patriots are shedding every hour in the cause of human liberty that a word from Congress or the President would stop.

I therefore, Mr. President, ask the adoption of this resolution of instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so that we may have the judgment of that committee, after an examination of the original text of the treaty, both in the English and in the Spanish languages, as to what is the meaning of the protocol entered into between Mr. Cushing and the minister from Spain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that merely a resolution of reference?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; it is a resolution of instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations to make thorough inquiry as to the text of the treaty and the protocol and what may be the meaning of them.

Mr. CULLOM. The chairman of the committee is not present, and I do not know whether the Senator from Alabama and he have an understanding about the resolution or not.

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the resolution lie upon the table until the chairman of the committee comes in.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to taking the resolution up later, but if this matter goes over the country is going to be in trouble about it.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the chairman of the committee will be in the Chamber in a few moments, and I shall then call his attention to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois regarding the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest that it lie on the table until the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM subsequently said: The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, is now in the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations having come in, and the resolution having been changed to suit his views, I ask its adoption. Let the modification I have made of the resolution be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The resolution has been modified in section 3, line 1, after the words "That the," by striking out "Secretary of State is further directed" and inserting "President is requested."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

Mr. HILL. Let the text of the section be read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President is requested, if it is not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to the Senate copies of any correspondence that has taken place between the Governments of Spain and the United States respecting the said protocol and its bearing or effect upon the trial and condemnation of citizens of the United States who were recently captured on or near the vessel called the Competitor, which was seized under Spanish authority in Cuban waters, or near to that island.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution merely requests the President to communicate certain information.

Mr. HILL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

JOHN VEELEY.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1335) for the relief of John Veeley.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 8, after the words "to wit," to strike out:

United States note No. 85953, Series A, dated March 10, 1863; United States note No. 99331, Series C, dated March 10, 1863; one year 5 per cent note No. 22310, Series D, dated February 23, 1864; three years 6 per cent note No. 27128, Series A, dated December 15, 1864, and three years 6 per cent note No. 27229, Series C, dated December 15, 1864, each for the sum of $100.

And insert:

United States note, March 10, 1862, No. 85953, check letter A; United States note, March 10, 1862, No. 99331, check letter C, both of the foregoing bearing no interest; compound-interest note, August 15, 1864, No. 27128, check letter A; compound-interest note, August 15, 1864, No. 27229, check letter C, both of last named bearing interest at the rate of 7.3 per cent per annum and redeemable three years after date; one year 5 per cent note, act of March 3, 1863, No. 22310, check letter D, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum and redeemable one year from date, according to the description of said notes set forth in the letter of the assistant treasurer dated March 28, 1896, each of the said five notes being of the denomination of $100: Provided, That in ascertaining the value of the notes there shall be added to the principal of those bearing interest all unpaid interest thereon, according to their terms, to the date when said notes became redeemable, and such amount shall be paid and received in full satisfaction of the claim of the said John Veeley.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Veeley, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the value of five certain Treasury notes found by said Veeley and forwarded to and now in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States, to wit: United States note, March 10, 1862, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why have those notes not been paid?

Mr. TURPIE. Because the Treasurer of the United States declined to pay them on the ground that they were mutilated. Since then, however, they have found the numbers and check letters of the notes and are ready and willing to pay them. The Secretary of the Treasury reports that it is a just claim. It is not a large one, only for five notes of $100 each, with three years' interest on them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a memorial of the National Association of Military Surgeons, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1552, relating to vivisection; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHOUP presented a petition of typographical union No. 271, of Boise City, Idaho, praying for the Government ownership and control of the telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union, No. 271, of Boise City, Idaho, praying for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for international agreement; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Honeybrook, Pa., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union, No. 295, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Scranton, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Lodge immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Grocers and Importers' Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which I ask to have read from the Secretary's desk and then printed for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The letter was read, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1896.

SIR: The law authorizes the distribution by the Secretary of Agriculture of one-third of the seed purchased "to those who apply for the same" directly to the Department. Owing to the lateness of the season it is desirable that all the seed be distributed immediately in those more northern districts where they may still be used, or wherever they may be sought for by the people.

A careful inventory completed to-day shows that there will be, of the Secretary's quota, about 2,000,000 packets of vegetable seed and 100,000 packets of flower seed remaining undistributed on the 20th instant, after all regular orders have been filled.

In order that these seeds may be promptly forwarded to such districts as need them, I have the honor to request that you inform each member of the Senate that 1,000 mail packages of vegetable seed and 40 mail packages of flower seed have been allotted to each one of them as an additional quota, and that they are respectfully requested to cause to be sent to this Department immediately addressed franks to be attached thereto.

Since the 1st of May is the limit for the distribution of the regular quota, and it is important that these seeds be immediately distributed in order to be used this season, this present allotment will hold until the 21st instant, on which date the entire surplus of 400,000 mail packages will be sent out in accordance with existing law to those persons "whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the Department." In case, then, some members do not take their additional quotas, there will be an opportunity for others to get an additional supply. These will be forwarded in the order in which the franks are received until the entire surplus is exhausted. For these reasons it will be necessary to receive all franks for the additional allotments before the close of business on Wednesday, May 20.

Very respectfully, yours, CHAS. W. DABNEY, JR.,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2384) for the relief of David O. Burleigh, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate adopted February 4, 1896, to inquire into the propriety of purchasing Analostan Island for the erection of a contagious hospital, and for such other purposes as the Government may require, etc., submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HILL on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, the amendment providing for the settlement with James M. Willbur for excess in weight of material, etc., on and around the New York City post-office, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3656) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2753) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon to the Lake Madison Veteran Association, Grand Army of the Republic, of the State of South Dakota, reported it without amendment.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to ask that the bill (S. 2017) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon to the Allen M. Harmon Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Northville, Mich., be taken from the Calendar and postponed indefinitely, as the object the bill desires to obtain has already been reached by the passage of a House bill by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3159) granting a pension to Hannah McDaniel; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3160) for the relief of the heirs of Lemuel J. Bowden, late a Senator from the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3161) amending and extending the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act approving with amendments the funding act of Arizona," approved June 25, 1890, and the act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, approved August 3, 1894; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. R. 124) to facilitate the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; to secure to actual settlers the right to purchase at a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre the agricultural lands within its grant, and to prohibit said company or any successor company from giving by consolidation, sale, or other corporate action control of its railroad to any corporation, company, person, or association of persons owning, operating, or controlling a parallel or competing railroad; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CHAPELL, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. COLSON, and Mr. STALLINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 144) granting an increase of pension to T. Clarkson Ingalls;

[The above-named bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.]

SALE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent for the resent consideration of the bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia.

I will state that this is a bill involving the question of the price of gas, which has been fully considered by the committee, and passed upon by the Senate almost to the point of taking final action upon it.

I desire to state further, before the question is submitted by the Chair, that it is really necessary to pass upon this bill, as the whole subject-matter involved in the bill is partially involved in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which is really now before the Senate; and this matter ought to be decided by the Senate before the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia is reached. I therefore ask that it be taken up for consideration. I will state that the bill has been read, all the amendments proposed by the committee have been adopted, and the bill is still as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GEORGE. I was going to state that the bill is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KYLE. There will certainly be objection to the bill. We all understand that there will be precipitated upon this bill the discussion upon the price of gas, which otherwise would occur later upon the District appropriation bill when that item is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. ALLEN, in section 5, on page 5, line 13, after the words "may be," to strike out "or one of them"; so as to read:

Also if either of the said corporations shall desire hereafter to issue bonds upon their property, secured by mortgage or otherwise, upon petition therefor to said court, setting forth the necessity thereof and the amount of stock issued and outstanding, it may and shall be lawful for said court, or the chief justice and justices thereof, as the case may be, upon public notice, to be prescribed by the rules of said court, to permit the issuance of such bonds and mortgage as desired.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. There are several amendments of the committee which were adopted the other day without any debate, which I desire to have amended. I move to reconsider the amendments reported by the committee on pages 1 and 2. They are all about the same thing.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, though I have been interested for many years in the subjects committed to and considered by that committee, notably the subject of municipal ownership and control of some of our public enterprises.

I have been led to take a deep interest in the gas question in the District, and have become thoroughly convinced by my investigations that there should be a lowering of the price and an improvement of the quality of the gas. Complaints have been made to Congress for some twenty years, both as to the price and quality of gas, that the price was exorbitant, that very few, only the well to-do-classes, could afford to use it, and that the quality was such as to be at once injurious to the sight of those who were compelled to read by it at night and destructive to furniture and house fittings.

These complaints have crystallized into various forms. Resolutions have been passed by several organizations and societies throughout the District of Columbia. Here is one clipped from a newspaper February 28, 1896, representing the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association of the city of Washington:

THE CITIZENS' VOICE—MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP DEMANDED—THE ONLY WAY TO SECURE CHEAP GAS AND TELEPHONE SERVICE.

At the last meeting of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association the only real solution of the illumination problem in this city lies in the direction of municipal ownership of the source of supply; that all attempts to regulate gas and electric light monopolies are failures; that alleged reductions in price do not result in reductions in the size of the bills, and that competing companies, so called, instead of competing, combine.

"Resolved, That this association most cordially indorses the position taken by the District Commissioners in their proposal that the District shall furnish its citizens with cheap and good illumination, honestly measured, and control the conduits for an efficient and cheap telephone service.

"Resolved, That we invite the other citizens' associations, and particularly the press of the District, to an active and persistent agitation of this subject, with the end in view of securing municipal ownership of the gas and electric light supply and municipal control of the telephone service.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the chairmen of the two District Committees in Congress and sent to the press."

A resolution embodying the same idea has been passed by the East Washington Citizens' Association, and by various others.

These complaints, Mr. President, are well founded. They were considered well founded by the Senate fully ten years ago, and a special committee was then appointed to investigate the gas question. Upon that committee were the late Senator from Nebraska, Mr. Van Wyck, the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. Spooner, then a Senator from Wisconsin. After summoning expert witnesses from various quarters and giving the subject very careful consideration, and after a full investigation of the methods of the gas company, the committee made a report that "the people are certainly entitled to have put in operation in this city for their benefit the best and most approved appliances and methods for making gas cheap and pure, whatever revolution that may require in the methods now here in use. Economy and the public health alike demand it."

Though the report was presented here some ten years ago, nothing so far has been done by Congress in the way of relief for the people, although we are the board of aldermen for this District, and it is our duty as that board to act when the citizens of the District call upon us for an investigation of this kind. Bills have been introduced, to be sure, from time to time since 1886 and have been referred to the District Committee—bills that provided for a cheaper and a better gas, and bills like the one introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], providing for municipal ownership of the gas plant. But those measures to-day sleep the sleep of the just in the District Committee.

A year ago a new company was organized for the purpose of furnishing gas to the District of Columbia. It was a responsible company. The members of the company were willing to place themselves under $200,000 bonds to furnish a better quality of gas, 22 candlepower as against 16 candlepower that we get at the present time, and instead of $1.50 the price to be 75 cents to the citizens and 60 cents to the city at large. That bill also went to the committee, and after receiving some discussion, I believe, it was allowed to sleep. During the present year I reintroduced the bill. It was considered in the committee and a short time since was reported adversely. I believe this was done because the present bill had passed the House, and the committee thought it possible to effect a compromise, the provisions of which we now have before us in House bill 6994 as amended.

Mr. President, I believe that the proper solution of the question lies in municipal ownership. This is entirely a business proposition, and should be settled by the same principles which men adopt in the conduct of their private business. A business man would be considered foolish to farm out his business by private contract when he could do it better himself. Merchants, farmers, bankers, railroad men, mine operators, all adopt business methods as being the best economic methods. Europe has taken up the question as an economical proposition. Our own cities are being forced to that position by the results of their investigation in European cities.

I recognize that there are some objections, but the chief objection in the mind of many people to-day is a political one. The objection upon the part of the Senators and Members is largely political. We have got it into our heads that the moment we yield a jot or tittle to the question of municipal ownership we are traveling in the direction of paternalism and socialism, and all you have to do to scare some legislators is to hold up before them the red flag of paternalism or socialism. The Populist party is now accused of adopting these ideas because they are in line with paternalism and socialism.

THE PEOPLE'S PARTY AND SOCIALISM.

I grant, Mr. President, that municipal ownership is in the line of socialism; but the Republican party, the Democratic party, the Populist party, and all good citizens are in favor of a modified form of paternalism and socialism. Populism is not socialism. The adoption of a modified system of socialism such as we have under consideration does not brand us as socialists. Our insane asylums are socialistic. Our system of public schools in the United States is socialistic. Our standing armies, our system of post-offices—all these are socialistic. Socialism, in the modified sense of the word, as applied to great American enterprises, means that the American people can better do these things than they can be done by private corporations. In that sense the Republican and Democratic parties are socialistic in kind, as well as the Populist party. We differ only in degree. The Republican party is a little more socialistic than the Democratic party, which believes that all things should be done by the States or by individuals as far as possible.

The Republican party to-day is responsible for a large number of so-called socialistic enterprises which have been of great benefit to the people of the United States. Now, the Populist party merely aims to add to the list a few more of these public functions or enterprises, in order that the people shall be relieved from the burdens of taxation and extortion. The Populist party in their St. Louis platform declared for individualism, but asked that the Government ownership of public enterprises be extended to the railroads and telegraphs, and to municipal ownership of gas, electric-light, and water works.

It is very easy for Senators to charge the Populist party with running at a headlong gait toward socialism. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], whom I do not see in his seat, mounted his high horse a few days ago and charged roughshod into the Populist camp, declaring to the world that he was willing to stand by the record of the Republican party, come what would in the next convention at St. Louis. He was not willing to go to the Populist party. He would go anywhere rather than to that party, because they were the exponents of socialism.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado and other Senators misjudge the Populist party by making certain extremists the exponents of our doctrine. Governor Waite, of Colorado, and other men of like views do not represent the solid sentiment of the Populist party of the United States.

The Populist party as a body believes in the fundamental principles as taught in the Republican party as far as the preservation of individualism is concerned. We believe through and through, heart and soul, in individualism, and we number in our ranks the honest, hardy yeomanry of the nation.

I have taken the trouble, Mr. President, to make inquiry of some of the prominent socialists of the United States as to what is meant by a particular plank in their platform. I have done this in order to set the Populist party right before the people in regard to the question of socialism, and to show the people that socialism is no part of the fundamental planks of the Omaha platform. I have a letter from James Seldon Cowdon, a prominent member of the Socialistic Labor party of the United States, a resident of the city of Washington, in reply to my question as to what was meant by "Plank No. 10," so called, of the Chicago Socialistic platform, which declared for the "Government ownership of all means of production and distribution." I have had my ideas for some time as to what was meant by this plank, but I wished to have it from the pen of their own leaders to see whether they held doctrines in common with the declarations of the Omaha platform.

Mr. Cowdon says:

ROOM 17, 524 TENTH STREET NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Your inquiry of this date as to my interpretation of the famous plank 10 of the Socialist platform is at hand.

In reply would say that "we kickers" want the public to own and operate "public industries" coextensive and contemporaneously, if not to the ultimate exclusion of all legitimate "private industries."

He winds up by saying:

In further explanation of my interpretation of the legislation that will be needed to interpret our plan 10 you are very respectfully referred to plans 5 to 41 of my own book on Public Cooperation, herewith handed your private secretary.

Very respectfully, JAMES SELDON COWDON.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate may proceed with the bill that has been under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. KYLE. I have here Mr. Cowdon's book upon Public Cooperation. Mind you, these men do not claim to be advocates of pure socialism or communism. They call themselves the "Socialistic Labor party" of the United States. His plans 5 to 41 are bills, so to speak, for the reconstruction of the Government upon the lines of the Socialistic Labor party.

The first bill that he proposes to have introduced is a bill to establish an executive department of public labor; second, a department of public land; third, a department of public transportation; fourth, a department of public communication; fifth, a department of public education; then a department of public insurance; next, a department of public printing; then a department of public periodicals—that the Government shall publish all the periodicals. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] asks me what I am reading from. It is a book representing the plans of the Socialistic Labor party of the United States for public cooperation; something that we think does not belong to the Populist party. I am trying at the present time to eliminate this from the Populist doctrine.

Mr. PEFFER. It has never been there.

Mr. KYLE. No; it has never been there.

Next a department of public documents, a department of public elections, a department of public roads, a department of public farms, a bill for a department of public fisheries, a bill to establish an executive department of public forests, a department of public fluids, a department of public forces, a department of public mines, a department of public manufactures—that the Government shall do all the manufacturing; next for public products. In this he states:

First, to establish as many classes of public stores, shops, and places of merchandising as may be necessary to supply the wants of the people.

It is proposed that the Government shall manage all the stores; next a department of public works, a department of public methods, a department of public statistics, a department of public surveying, a department of public measures, a department of public inventions, a department of public science, a department of public fairs, a department of public libraries, a department of public lectures—that the Government shall furnish all the lectures for the people; next a department of public amusements, a department of public comfort—the Government shall furnish all the comforts possible; next a department of public health, a department of public hotels, a department of public baths—that the Government shall give everybody a bath; next a department of public laundries—that the Government shall do the laundry work of the people of the United States; next is a department of public records, and the last one is a department of public buildings.

This, Mr. President, represents the views of the practical men of the Socialistic Labor party of the United States; but in order to be perfectly sure as to the doctrines taught by this organization I addressed a letter to the leader of the party in the United States, Mr. De Leon. Mr. De Leon is the editor of The People, the Socialistic Labor organ published in New York. I asked him the same question, namely, what was his interpretation of the so-called plank No. 10 of the Chicago platform, which declared for the "Government ownership of the means of production," and he replied as follows:

NEW YORK, May 8, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I have yours of yesterday.

By this mail I forward to you copy of this paper, on the fourth page of which you will find the national platform of the Socialist Labor party.

"Plank 10" is no part of our platform, as such. The Chicago organization of socialists is affiliated with our national executive organization. Its platform is ours and ours is its.

His interpretation, of course, would be considered good.

The history of "plank 10" is this: At the Chicago convention (December, 1895) of the American Federation of Labor a delegate presented a platform of several planks. The tenth demanded the national ownership of the means of production and distribution. This, generally speaking, condenses the socialist demands.

The Socialist Labor party aims at bringing under public ownership, control, and operation the whole land of the country on which and the whole capital (machinery, factories, shops) with which to produce the necessities of life, understanding under necessities all that civilized man needs.

This programme embraces the bulk of the industries, agriculture included.

Very truly, yours,

D. DE LEON, Editor The People.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE,
Washington, D. C.

Such men, Mr. President, will not find a home in the Populist party. They have hoped to use the party as a stepping-stone for the attainment of their plans and schemes, but they will fail. It is true they have made a call for a convention of their followers at St. Louis at about the time of our national convention. Perhaps it may not be known to my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that there is a call for a national cooperative congress to be held at St. Louis July 24, 1896. They ask all who believe in any form of cooperation to join with them, and state:

All who believe in the practicability of federating existing cooperative institutions, in the desirability of a large expansion of municipal and national cooperation, and are prepared to engage in such other work as may be necessary to the ultimate establishment of the cooperative commonwealth are cordially invited to attend. All socialist, nationalist, and cooperative societies in the United States, whether State, county, district, or general in their nature, are earnestly requested and invited to send delegates. Cooperative societies in Canada and foreign countries are also urged to send fraternal representatives.

This is signed by a large number of prominent socialistic labor men of the United States, only two or three of whom I know personally—Alonzo Wardell, of Kansas, and H. L. Loucks, of South Dakota.

Mr. President, this, let me say, is not Populism. It has nothing in common with Populism. In my judgment, and in the judgment of all who may listen to the reading of these declarations, it means the destruction of individualism. It means the destruction of private enterprises, and the people of the United States are not ready for such an innovation.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP THE BEST BUSINESS METHOD.

But, Mr. President, municipal ownership of gas, electric-light, and water works and street railways is not socialism to the extent of destroying individualism. It is merely the application of business sense and business methods to these great public functions and enterprises for the purpose of serving the people economically and well along these lines.

I have before me an editorial from the Twentieth Century, a very strong editorial, putting the whole question upon a purely business basis. The editor, after commending the scheme of municipal ownership, goes on to state that Berlin, in Germany, has had the advantage of municipal ownership for a number of years. They own their electric-light and water works and their gas and street railways and telephones; in fact, all public improvements. The city makes a profit of 5,000,000 marks, or $1,250,000, per year above all expenses, and that is turned into the city treasury. Paris has turned $40,000,000 into the treasury in ten years by the same means.

The writer goes on to state that in consequence of municipal ownership of the street railways in the city of Berlin a laboring man can ride three hundred and sixty-five days in the year back and forth as many times as he chooses for the sum of $4.50, while in the city of New York to ride once a day to his work and back again upon the street cars will cost him $36 a year. Further, that in the city of Glasgow, Scotland, the railroad fare is but 2 cents per passenger; that the city of Denver does its own street cleaning at an expense of $8.75 per mile per day, while it costs the city of Chicago for the same sort of enterprise $22 per mile per day; that in the city of Staunton, Va., which owns its own electric-light plant, they burn every night during the year for $24 per light per annum, while it costs the city of Peoria, Ill., $145 under private ownership. He states further that in the city of Bloomington, Ill., which has 240 lights burning all night, without regard to the moon, and where they own their own plant, the cost is but $20 per light per year, and that the city of Dunkirk, N. Y., which owns its own plant, furnishes light all night and every night for $28.50 each per year.

The average price paid to private parties by the various cities is $105.13 per light per year, while the average where the municipalities own these great public enterprises is $52.12½. Boston pays a private corporation the enormous sum of $180 per lamp, but Chicago, which owns its own plant, pays for the same service $65 per year, a good deal less than one-half. So he goes on through a list of cities, making the comparison, and he closes up his article by saying:

A report of the New York senate shows that the people of New York City, under private ownership, have been bled in the last ten years to the extent of $30,074,715.27 above what they ought to have paid. Municipal ownership in the United States shows a net saving of 40 per cent. City ownership of all public utilities is a necessity.—Twentieth Century.

I have here an article of the same kind from the Star, an editorial of April 20, 1893. They take up the city of Peabody, Mass., and discover the same sort of economy from municipal ownership, and wonder why we can not have this introduced in the city of Washington.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me a few moments?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to call attention in this connection to the fact that the position of the People's Party with reference to monopolies is precisely the position taken by the founders of our Government and the framers of our Constitution, neither more nor less. The framers of our Constitution, the patriots whose names will be honored and reverenced as long as the Republic endures, took exactly the position with reference to monopolies that the People's Party takes. The People's Party stands to-day as the defender of the people and the supporters of the Constitution on that question. The People's Party came into existence to protest against the action of the old parties in deserting the position of the founders of our Government and framers of the Constitution. It came into existence because there was a demand for a party to stand for the principles advocated and represented by Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln. It stands between the people and the rule of monopolies and trusts.

Mr. KYLE. That is as I understand it.

Mr. BUTLER. The only natural monopoly in existence when our Government was formed, the only natural monopoly that appeared to the framers of the Constitution, was what? The Post-Office Department. What was the position of the framers of our Constitution? They said here is a natural monopoly, here is a monopoly per se, a monopoly by nature, here is a monopoly that must be used by the agent of the people for the benefit of all the people and for the public good at cost, for if allowed to go into private hands it would be used by private individuals for private gain and to the detriment of the public. What position did they take? They laid it down in the Constitution as a fundamental law that the Post-Office Department, being a natural monopoly, was a public function, a function of Government, and should be used by the Government for the public good. Henry Clay took the same position in 1844, when the question was raised as to whether electricity should be used by the Post-Office Department as a function of the Government to facilitate the postal service; and Hon. Cave Johnson, the Postmaster-General under President Polk, a strict construction Administration, took the same position; and John C. Calhoun, another strict constructionist, a Democrat of Democrats (not the modern kind, thank God, but the good old original Jefferson kind), took the position that it should be used, not by private corporations, but as a part of the Post-Office Department as a public function, according to the Constitution.

The Ways and Means Committee of Congress in 1845 took the same position in an able argument reported to this body. That is the position of the People's Party on this question, and if the other natural monopolies we have to-day had been in existence when the Constitution was formed the framers of that instrument would have laid it down as a part of the written fundamental law that those natural monopolies should be used for the public good as a government function, and every man who is a true American, who sincerely believes in a republican form of government, must take that position with reference to all natural monopolies.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me?

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me. Just one word further. I think it is important to get this matter straight since the subject is up, with the Senator's permission.

The position of the People's Party is simply the position of Thomas Jefferson. He feared the danger of natural monopolies, those functions which are by nature monopolies, going into the hands of private individuals. That is where the People's Party stands to-day; and any man who does not stand with the People's Party for that doctrine is a monopolist. He is a monarchist; he is opposed to the fundamental principles of free government and republican institutions. He is an enemy to the welfare and prosperity of our people. If there is a Senator on this floor who will stand in his place and say he is opposed to that doctrine, opposed to that fundamental principle on which our Government is founded, then he is antagonistic to our form of government; he is out of line with the Constitution and the spirit of the Constitution. That is where the People's Party stands. It does not go one step further nor recede one step from it. That is what its platform calls for, simply a strict adherence to the Constitution in letter and spirit.

Any man who is opposed to the position of the People's Party on this fundamental question would to-day, if he had his way, put our Post-Office Department in the hands of the telegraph monopoly, or express company, or railroad combine. Let the people beware of such men. Next to an agent of the British gold trust, the most dangerous enemy to a republican form of government and to the welfare and prosperity of the people is the monopolist. And when the gold trust and the monopolies combine, as they have now, they are the arch enemies of the liberty and happiness of the human race. The People's Party is the only organization that can be trusted to defend the rights of the people and fight these curses of humanity and civilization.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the municipal ownership of these public enterprises is no untried theory. I stated a moment ago that it has been adopted in many countries in Europe and in many American cities. I have a list before me of some cities in England which own their own plants—Birmingham, Bolton, Carlisle, Leicester, Manchester, Nottingham, Oldham, Salford, etc.

Two-thirds of all the municipalities in Great Britain own their gas plants, and the revenue derived from them, according to statistics, is from one hundred to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum, and they sell pure coal gas at from 50 to 55 cents per thousand feet.

The same is true of Germany. In the United States we have cities like Henderson, Ky.; Huntsville, Mo.; Bellefontaine, Ohio; Hamilton, Ohio; Philadelphia, Pa.; Alexandria, Va.; Charlottesville, Va.; Danville, Va.; Fredericksburg, Va.; Wheeling, W. Va., and so on, which have adopted the principle, and it has proved, let me say, a great source of revenue to the treasuries of those respective cities. I have some facts before me showing this.

In 1893, of the 44 largest towns in Germany 29 owned their own gas works. Leipsic owns its own gas works and returns annually into the treasury the sum of $280,000. Breslau turns into the treasury $100,000 per annum. Berlin turned in in that year $1,793,518. Berlin from the waterworks turned in $380,000. Paris from the gas works in 1892 turned into the treasury $2,260,000; Birmingham, England, $150,000; Dresden, $187,000; Bolton, England, $140,000; Manchester, $250,000; Salford, $187,000; Leicester, $135,000; Nottingham, $125,000.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to ask him for information, because I really do not know, whether the amounts turned into the treasury purport to be profits in that particular business or simply the amounts collected from private consumers, irrespective of what it cost the government to run those various enterprises?

Mr. KYLE. They represent the profits.

Mr. HARRIS. The net profit?

Mr. KYLE. The net profit.

Mr. HARRIS. Over and above the cost of production?

Mr. KYLE. Yes, sir; and turned into the treasury.

I have here the report of the mayor of the city of Philadelphia. I wish to read a short statement showing the profit in that city from the city's ownership of the gas works, which is right in line with the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. This is from the report of the mayor of Philadelphia for 1895, Edwin S. Stuart. On page 12 of the report, speaking of the bureau of gas, he says:

> The total expenditures of the bureau of gas from 1891 to 1894, inclusive, for material, maintenance, labor, supplies, coal, etc., were $10,858,910.58, and for extensions and permanent improvements $1,050,248.81; a total of $11,909,159.39. During the past four years there have been turned into the city treasury as receipts from this bureau $14,790,404.25, or very nearly $3,000,000 in excess of the entire expenditures.

"In excess of the entire expenditures."

> This is in the face of the fact that the price of gas in 1894 was reduced from $1.50 to $1 per thousand feet, a decrease of 33⅓ per cent in the price.

Mr. FAULKNER. What city does the Senator refer to?

Mr. KYLE. Philadelphia. I read from the mayor's report. He goes on to state:

> It is but just to the bureau of gas to state clearly that the money received by the city for its operation during the past four years not only equaled the entire sum appropriated to it during that period, including the cost of permanent improvements, but that it returned a profit over and above these expenditures of nearly $3,000,000.

He gives the number of gas lamps for 1891 as 16,649, and making the computation at $1 per thousand for these lamps, the amount saved by furnishing their own city street lamps would be $3,299,122, making the total as follows:

Receipts over expenses for furnishing to the city	$3,931,594
From gas supplied for public use	3,299,122
Making a total profit to the city of Philadelphia in four years of	7,230,716
Or an annual profit of	1,807,679

The same is true with reference to municipal ownership of electric lights.

From Advance Club Leaflets No. 2, published at Providence, R. I., by the Advance Club, I find a list of 139 cities of the United States given which are furnished electric lights by private companies for street purposes. The price charged is on the average $110.98 for 2,000-candlepower arcs and $55.49 for 1,000-candlepower arcs. Following this is given a list of 24 cities where electricity is furnished by the municipality, and the price charged for 2,000-candlepower arcs (average) is $52.40, and for 1,000-candlepower arcs $26.20 Washington pays a private company, I believe, $146 for 1,000 candlepower. Here is another list of cities furnished electricity by private companies and a list furnished by municipal control. This confirms the statements made in the club leaflet just referred to:

These facts, Mr. President, seem to me to be conclusive evidence as to the expediency and wisdom of a municipality owning such enterprises.

MUST BE CONTENT WITH PRIVATE CORPORATION.

But I realize that at the present time, probably, we must confine ourselves to the control of the present private corporation in this city. I do not know whether the good sense of the American Congress can be aroused to such a point that they will enact into law what they feel and know to be for the general good of the people of this city. Though we might show them figures from 100 European cities, though we might show them such figures as

I have read from the report of the mayor of Philadelphia, and from many prominent cities even larger than Washington, yet they will not believe, and we shall go on year after year voting our subsidies or our privileges to these private corporations.

I do not know why it is. I do not know why the gas company in the District of Columbia and the street-railway companies should have such a hold upon the United States Congress. Sometimes I feel charitable and say it is because of our neglect. What is everybody's business seems to be nobody's business, and so the corporations get what they please. But at the same time I do know that lobbyists are abroad in the land, that lobbyists are around the House and around the Senate corridors every day during the consideration of these bills; that stockholders in these companies, stockholders in the Washington Gas Company, have been lobbying with members of the House and Senate and appealing to them in the name of the widows and orphans of this city who hold the stock not to deprive them of their bread. One man appealed to a member of Congress, so the member told me this morning, and said, "I own $20,000 worth of gas stock in this city, which is paying 20 per cent per annum—$4,000 per year," and when asked if the 20 per cent was not rather exorbitant, he said he did not think it was any more than he ought to have.

The Board of Trade, I understand, has taken up this question. I have before me here an editorial from one of the city papers of March 10, 1896, which states that the Board of Trade did consider the matter at that time. They appointed a committee to investigate the question of gas and electric-light, etc. The committee made the investigation, and reported that both forms of illumination were retailed at exorbitant rates, and advised in favor of a campaign which should have for its object municipal ownership and conduct of the gas and electric light plants in the District of Columbia. Mind you, Mr. President, that report is not by a few disgruntled citizens in the District who feel that their gas bills are too high, but by a representative body—the Board of Trade of the city:

> Since then the House has enacted legislation cheapening the price and improving the quality of the gas, and the District appropriation bill, which is fixed so far as these items are concerned, contains such legislation in respect both to gas and electric lighting.
> Congress has indicated a disposition to furnish a measure of relief to the people by directly regulating the existing companies, and the practical common-sense present action on the part of this community is to back up vigorously the procedure which has found favor with the House. Municipal ownership of illuminating plants may well be viewed as the ideal condition; but in view of the heavy initial expense which it will involve and the extent of education on the subject which our legislation would require before there was any possibility of the enactment of this radical legislation, the project is not a practical one for this year or the immediate future. We should not neglect the opportunity to obtain immediate though partial relief through excessive and exclusive devotion to the brilliant but remote project of municipal ownership. The House has declared in favor of cheaper gas and electric light, an improved quality of gas, and more thorough inspection. The Board of Trade and its special committee can do good work in impressing upon the Senate the wisdom of speedy concurrence in the House propositions.

Therefore the editor goes on to argue in favor of the dollar-gas bill. I feel just about the same way; that it will be impossible at the present time to secure municipal ownership. Therefore I advocate with all my heart the reduction of gas by the present company to the lowest possible figure. At the same time I do not wish to cut it down to a point where the company can not make a legitimate profit. I am willing that the corporation shall be allowed a legitimate percentage upon its investment.

We are to-day living under corporation rule in the District, and for that reason I am afraid we can not accomplish a great deal even now in reducing the price of gas. The present gas company has got to be an octopus. It reaches out by its officers and by its stockholders, and has taken in many influential men hereabouts who have become interested in the question of gas. The company was organized in the year 1848, I believe.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask the Senator, when he speaks about the company taking in a number of prominent men in Congress——

Mr. KYLE. I did not say in Congress.

Mr. FAULKNER. Ah, well; the Senator did not. I want to ask the direct question, then, whether the Senator has information that any member of the District Committee is in any way directly or indirectly interested in the stock or other securities of the Washington Gas Light Company?

Mr. KYLE. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that I do not think any member of the District Committee is interested in the stock of the gas company.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, these are very interesting facts which the Senator from South Dakota is now putting before the Senate, and this is a very important question. There should be a full Senate. I suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Senator from Mississippi suggests the want of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Chilton,	Harris,	Pettigrew,
Allison,	Clark,	Hawley,	Platt,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,
Baker,	Cullom,	Kyle,	Pugh,
Bate,	Davis,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Berry,	Dubois,	Martin,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Elkins,	Mills,	Sherman,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Squire,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Teller,
Caffery,	Gear,	Nelson,	Turpie,
Carter,	George,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present..

Mr. KYLE. In regard to the question put to me by the Senator from West Virginia, I will state that I have not made inquiry as to whether or not Senators or Members of Congress are holders of stock in this company, but there are prominent men in the city and the cities hereabouts who are stockholders and who are men of influence.

THE WASHINGTON GAS LIGHT COMPANY.

The company, as I stated, was organized, I believe, in 1848, with a capital of $50,000, of which $42,500 was paid in for 2,500 shares of the par value of $20. In 1852 the capital was increased to $300,000, which was paid in cash. In 1855 the capital was increased $150,000 and the stock taken up by stockholders. In 1866 another $500,000 was added and issued to shareholders, share for share. In 1872 the stock was increased to $1,000,000, with the privilege of increasing it another million, which has been done. In 1887 $600,000 of 6 per cent bonds were issued; and $600,000 of certificates of indebtedness have also been issued, which are convertible into stock if the stock shall be increased. On the stock a dividend of 10 per cent is paid and on the bonds and certificates 6 per cent. It is claimed that the $600,000 of certificates were a gift to the stockholders. In 1892 they paid an additional dividend of $3 per share, making 25 per cent. By their sworn statement the average per cent from 1848 to 1881 is 16⅓. From 1881 to 1886, 20 per cent, and for the year 1895, 30 per cent, which is pretty good for hard times. The par stock—$20—has been worth $51 and is now worth $44 and a fraction.

This is the history of the company. All but $500,000 of the present capital stock of $2,000,000 has been added from the profits of the concern. The authority for this statement as to all above $500,000 being profits I get from the Senate committee's report, No. 1460, a report of the investigation, and where Mr. McIlhenny, the president, I believe, upon being interrogated by Senator Van Wyck, admits that that was the fact. I do not see any reason why the company should be given the privilege, as under the present bill, of issuing a million and a half more stock. This company, let me say, are a power in the District and are a power in Congress. They have charged the highest rates possible. They have never yielded to a reduction of price except where they have been compelled to do so through fear of some legislation being enacted by Congress.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator whether he has examined the report of the Commissioners on that subject, in which they enumerate a number of instances of voluntary reduction by the company?

Mr. KYLE. I recognize the fact and have read it that they voluntarily reduced the price; but I say, in my judgment, it was under fear that some bill would be passed by Congress.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like the Senator to state his reasons for that statement, because I never heard of it before and I have been investigating this question for at least seven years.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator said he has been investigating this matter. Has he discovered that in 1866 the company voluntarily burned its books?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; I have not discovered any such thing.

Mr. GEORGE. It is the fact.

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; I differ with the Senator from Mississippi entirely in his statement of the fact. I am ready to answer it on the floor.

Mr. KYLE. I presume their willingness at the present time to reduce the price of gas is voluntary. They show a willingness to reduce the price of gas at the present time because they fear that Congress is going to pass a law bringing the price down to a dollar or to 75 cents. That is all there is about it. And so it was in the other instances.

As to whether this company destroyed its books, let me quote here from the report made by Senator Spooner, Report No. 1460, first session, Forty-ninth Congress. The company deliberately destroyed its books. The committee says:

It is a significant fact that the destruction of these books blotted out from the public and from investigation the detailed transactions of this corporation up to the time in 1886 when the company distributed among its then stockholders, as representing corporate earnings theretofore put into an extension of the plant, $500,000 of stock, making altogether $1,000,000 of capitalization.

FEW CAN AFFORD TO USE GAS.

Mr. President, the company having a monopoly of the gas, as they do in this District, have reduced the price gradually, as they have been forced to do so by Congress; but at the present time gas is held at $1.25 per thousand feet to those who pay promptly and $1.50 per thousand to those who do not pay their bills, I believe, within ten days. The result is that fully one-half, I might say, of the people of the District of Columbia can not afford to use gas; and it is stated upon authority that while there are in the city 52,000 houses, only 25,000 or 26,000 of those houses use gas. In other words, the poor people of the city are not able to use gas at the figures charged by the company. Much of our population, white as well as colored, are compelled to use coal oil or the tallow candle, or to sit in darkness.

Mr. President, without attempting to instruct the gas company of the District of Columbia, let me say that they are pursuing a policy according to best experts which is detrimental to their own interests. The testimony of those who have examined this question in Europe and in the cities of the United States is that the lower the price of gas the more people use it, and the result is increased income to the companies.

Upon this question I have some very valuable testimony given by Mr. Henry M. Whitney before the Massachusetts legislature in the month of March last. Mr. Whitney is an authority upon this question, and was before the committee, I believe, for certain rights and privileges with reference to the use of the by-product of gas. He makes this statement before the committee:

You will see, Mr. Chairman, that by far the larger number of your people—probably more than 15 to 1, and I should think it fair to say 20 to 1—are not now customers of the gas companies—

That is in the State of Massachusetts—

They have never been customers, and under existing circumstances and conditions never can be.

The reason is entirely apparent. It is because the price of gas is so high and has remained so high for the last generation as absolutely to put it out of the power of these people to have it.

I am surprised, as I look at these statistics, that any well-managed gas company familiar with these conditions should have allowed this condition of things to exist; for I hold that these companies, like all quasi-public corporations, owe it to the community to keep abreast of the state of the art in all countries. It does not answer for them, nor for any other corporation holding quasi-public rights, to rest upon their laurels and make no improvement in their condition, nor seek to supply the people who are not now using gas and whom they ought to have supplied for the last thirty years. Had I been in management of one of these corporations I should have considered that a dangerous position to be in.

* * * * * * *

Now, very much has been said about the city of Manchester, England. The city of Manchester contains about the same population as the city of Boston. It contained in 1890, according to the statement I have, a population of 505,000, which is not far from the population of the city of Boston. The city of Manchester sends out more gas than is sent out in the whole State of Massachusetts. It furnished in the year 1893, 3,636,000,000 feet of gas, which is absolutely more gas than is furnished by all the gas companies in the State of Massachusetts; and Manchester sold that gas for 60 cents per thousand feet. That is the reason why the consumption was so large.

Taking the average of the large companies in foreign cities like Glasgow, Manchester, Birmingham, and in all these places where the population is large, you will find that the price is about uniform, and that the proportion of meters to this population is nearly 1 to 5. That is, substantially every family uses gas, and uses it in considerable quantities.

One meter to every 5 of the population, 5 representing a family, while in the State of Massachusetts they have 1 meter to every 20 in population.

So he summarizes the whole situation that as a consequence of the reduction in the price of gas more people use it and there is a greater income to the companies.

Mr. President, in view of what is charged in other cities of the United States and of the world, the charge made for gas by the Washington Gas Light Company is exorbitant. The whole question, it seems to me, for the Senate to consider is whether gas under the existing circumstances can be furnished to the people of this District for a less figure. That is all there is to it.

CAN THE PRICE BE REDUCED?

I have taken a great deal of pains to collect data upon this point. I have communicated with and received letters from the city clerks in the prominent cities of the United States, and the general report is that the price of gas is far below the price charged in the city of Washington. Here are the figures from a number of these cities: The city of New York furnishes gas for $1.25 per thousand; Chicago, $1.13. The price in Chicago is now down to a dollar. I will say before I give the figures that many of them are subject to change, because cities are frequently changing the price of gas, and generally taking the downward course.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him if he is aware of the fact that there are some thirty or forty different gas companies in the city of New York, and that some of them are charging for gas very much more than is charged in the city of Washington?

Mr. KYLE. I am aware of that fact, and the same is true of the cities in the State of Massachusetts and other States.

Mr. GALLINGER. My point is that the Senator quotes, as he says, that gas is furnished in New York for $1 per thousand feet.

Mr. KYLE. For $1.25.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood the Senator to say $1.

Mr. KYLE. The price in Chicago is $1.

Mr. GALLINGER. Even at $1.25 the price is the same as it is in Washington; but the fact is that there are a great many companies in New York which charge $1.50 per thousand feet, and in some instances as high as $1.75; and the statistics will show that fact.

Mr. KYLE. I have here the statistics of the cities of Massachusetts, which I might place in the RECORD, but shall not, which show the price charged in 1886 and 1894, and in every case there has been a great fall of the price of gas between 1886 and 1894; and so it extends over the country. These figures, as I said, are subject to change.

New York	$1.25	Newark	$1.40
Chicago	1.13	Minneapolis	1.60
Philadelphia	1.00	Jersey City	1.75
Brooklyn	1.25	Louisville	1.29
St. Louis	1.50	Omaha	1.75
Boston	1.08	Rochester	1.25
Baltimore	1.25	St. Paul	1.70
San Francisco	2.00	Kansas City	1.60
Cincinnati	.98½	Providence	1.20
Cleveland	.80	Indianapolis	1.25
Buffalo	1.00	Allegheny	.95
Milwaukee	1.00	Washington	1.25

Chicago has made provision for one-dollar gas.

The following is a list of cities owning and controlling their own gas works:

	Population.	Price per 1,000 feet.
Henderson, Ky	14,000	$1.00
Huntsville, Mo	2,000	2.00
Bellefontaine, Ohio	7,000	.80
Hamilton, Ohio	20,000	1.00
Philadelphia, Pa	1,200,000	1.00
Alexandria, Va	16,000	1.44
Charlottesville, Va	10,000	1.00
Danville, Va	11,000	1.25
Fredericksburg, Va	5,000	1.50
Richmond, Va	80,000	1.25
Wheeling, W. Va	40,000	.75

Mr. FAULKNER. Charlottesville owns its gas works.

Mr. KYLE. Yes; and the price there is $1.

In many of these cases the price in cities where they manufacture their own gas is as high or higher than in the city of Washington, but the point is that all the proceeds above the cost of producing and supplying the gas goes to the city treasury, and thereby reduces the amount of taxes to be paid by the people.

The following is a list of cities where the price of gas is $1 per thousand feet or less:

Boston	$1.00	Cincinnati	$1.00
Columbus	1.00	Atlanta, Ga	1.00
Dayton, Ohio	1.00	Taylorsville, Ill	1.00
Centerville	1.00	Henderson, Ky	1.00
Elyria, Ohio	1.00	Sandusky, Ohio	1.00
Troy, Ohio	1.00	Youngstown, Ohio	1.30
Greenville	1.00	Meadville, Pa	1.00
Pittsburg, Pa	1.00	Grafton, W. Va	1.00
Milwaukee, Wis	1.00	Hamilton, Ohio	1.00
Allegheny County	.95	Grand Rapids	.90
Cleveland	.80	Wheeling	.75
West Point	.60	Kokomo	.75
Bellefontaine	.80	Jackson, Mich	.50
St. Joseph	.50	Terre Haute	.50
Chicago, 1 company	.50	Lakewood, N. Y	.30

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator what is the price of gas in his own State?

Mr. KYLE. In South Dakota I have not investigated beyond my own town, where we have to pay a private company $3.50 per thousand feet for gas.

Mr. MILLS. What is the population?

Mr. KYLE. The population is about 6,000.

Mr. FAULKNER. I believe the average cost in the whole State is about $2.20.

Mr. KYLE. We pay $2.50 in my town, which we have always considered exorbitant. It is exorbitant, and the company know it is exorbitant, in my judgment. The people should take the matter into their own hands and operate the plant in the interest of the taxpayers and citizens generally.

The following summary as to gas companies I extract from the New York World, without quoting it literally:

The cost of gas in Cleveland is 80 cents, and the company pays the city 6½ per cent on their gross receipts, amounting to $50,000 per annum. The gas costs the company from 50 to 55 cents per 1,000 feet, and after paying the city 6¼ per cent it leaves to the company a profit of 20 to 25 cents per thousand, and pays 8 per cent on its $3,000,000 of stock.

In Cincinnati the price is $1 net, and less for the city lamps, and the company pays 10 per cent dividend.

Chicago experts say the cost of gas there is from 50 to 55 cents, including interest on the investment in plant, etc. The price to consumers is from $1 to 50 cents.

In Brooklyn the price is $1.25, and the officers refuse to state the cost.

Mr. C. E. Staples, a dealer in gas stocks, states that it costs to make water gas, such as we have here, from 35 to 37½ cents per 1,000 feet.

In Pittsburg the price is $1 per thousand feet, and the company supply the street lamps first to the amount of 12,500,000 feet. For all over that the city pays 75 cents per thousand feet. The officers of the company refuse to state what it costs to make gas.

In Bellefontaine, Ohio, as stated by Professor Bemis, the city has made its own gas since 1873—twenty years—at a cost for manufacture and distribution of 30 cents. The price in 1893 was 80 cents.

In Lakewood, N. Y., they furnish their own gas at 30 cents per thousand feet. In Bellefontaine and Lakewood they make water gas, the same as most of our gas.

West Point furnishes its own gas at 60 cents per thousand feet, which is all coal gas, and the nominal price is 75 cents.

The Louisville (Ky.) company sold gas at $1 per thousand until bought out by another company. The price is now $1.30 per thousand, and they refuse to give any information as to the cost.

In Albany, N. Y., the president of the gas company refuses to state the cost or the profit.

These are some facts as to what gas is being furnished for in the various cities of the United States. I might go a little further and give you a few of the companies abroad:

* Average. † Street lights.

All these range along from 14.50 to 21.50 candlepower, and not one of them comes to the dollar mark. They use coal to make gas.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, will he restate what he just said as to the candlepower in those cities?

Mr. KYLE. They range along from 14.50 to 18, 19, and 21 candlepower.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will, of course, observe that in the bill now under consideration we propose to make the Washington Gas Light Company furnish gas of 24 candlepower.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that, and I will prove before we get through that it is not over 16 candlepower, because you are changing the test from the Argand burner to the Bray slit burner.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are adopting the test in use in every city in this country.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator says we are changing the test, and I assert that the burner used in every city the Senator refers to is only 16, 17, 18, and 19 candlepower, and is the improved modern Parliamentary Argand burner, which gives a similar light to the burner we have adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. KYLE. That is a question, because different cities have different methods of testing their own gas. But there is a difference between the new Parliamentary Argand burner and the Bray slit flat-flame burner, as I shall show.

Mr. FAULKNER. In England they have but one burner, and that is the parliamentary burner, by which they test all lights.

Mr. KYLE. But not the Bray flat flame burner. I have here a statement in reference to the city of Philadelphia. I made the statement that the city of Philadelphia furnishes gas to its consumers for $1 per thousand, and turns into the city treasury millions of dollars; that during the last four years it turned in the neighborhood of $7,000,000 into the city treasury. The gas monopoly of the city of Philadelphia, if it may be so termed, is a great bonanza to the city, and private companies in that section of the country understand this. I have before me an article from the Pittsburg Times of February 21, 1896, which says:

A syndicate to-day formally offered the city $20,000,000 cash for the gas works. The syndicate agrees to charge from 65 cents to $1 a thousand feet for gas, and after ten years to give the city 5 per cent of the profits of the gas works, and in 15 years 10 per cent of the profits. The city now makes all the gas used here, and sells it for $1 a thousand feet. Last year the city's profit on the plant was about $1,500,000.

The city can not afford to part with such a franchise. The thousands of poor there owning their own homes should congratulate themselves on the reduction in taxes and contend for the municipal ownership of the street railways, which are an oppression and a political power in that city.

The city of Philadelphia is not able to furnish all its own gas. The city being so large, they are compelled to purchase a certain amount of gas from private gas companies. I believe they have bought about 3,000,000 or more cubic feet of gas, and they made a contract with private companies for this purpose. I have the contract before me, and it will be a surprise to many to know the figure at which gas is furnished by a private company. The contract states:

We will furnish three million (3,000,000) cubic feet of gas, and as much more as is required, upon six months' notice, by the Hanlon and Leadley "W" process, of more than twenty-two (22) candlepower, delivered as required to your station meter, at thirty-seven (37) cents per 1,000 cubic feet for the first year, and for any subsequent year at thirty-seven (37) cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me again, there is no doubt they can afford to do that, for that is simply to furnish the gas at their own works. It does not include the cost of the mains and of distributing the gas and all that sort of thing. It is simply for the gas itself.

Mr. KYLE. The cost of distribution is estimated generally at 40 per cent, which would add about 12 cents more.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not admitted by any gas man with whom I have ever talked. The Senator may know all about the details of gas distribution. The Committee on the District of Columbia, however, have had a great many hearings and have had experts before them, and no man there has ever ventured to make a suggestion such as the Senator has made.

Mr. KYLE. I have seen the statement made many times over by experts in the United States that the cost of distribution is 40 per cent of the cost of production; so, taking 37 cents and adding 40 per cent to it, the aggregate amount would be 13 or 14 cents more.

I may not know so much about the question as the Senator from New Hampshire, but I have been investigating the subject of gas somewhat for twenty years. The District Committee do not have a monopoly of knowledge.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only point I would make is, Mr. President—I do not care to get into a controversy with the Senator, and I know I am trenching upon his time—that I chance to be a member of the committee which has had very lengthy and very numerous hearings on this question, and they have heard all sides of it. We have had experts from New York and Boston and other cities, and presumably a member of the committee knows something as to what has been investigated by the committee; and that is all I claim.

Mr. KYLE. I understand what has been presented to the committee; but a great deal has been presented to the committee which is not true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely so.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Have the hearings before the committee been printed in extenso?

Mr. FAULKNER. All of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a document here that is accessible containing the recent hearings before the Committee on the District of Columbia, entitled "Gas."

Mr. GEORGE. When were the hearings had?

Mr. GALLINGER. Beyond a doubt the Senator can get a copy of the document by sending to the document room for it.

Mr. HARRIS. The hearings were held at various times.

Mr. GEORGE. I applied this morning at the document room and could not get a copy of the testimony.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state that the hearings were published for the use of the committee, and any Senator who will apply to the clerk of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be able to secure a copy of the hearings as printed.

Mr. GEORGE. Why was it not printed for the use of the Senate?

Mr. FAULKNER. Simply because the committee never ordered it, and no one else asked that the hearings be published. Hearings before committees are not generally printed for public distribution except when the committee submits a written report embodying the hearings by the committee; but they do not generally publish hearings on matters which are purely local.

Mr. KYLE. I have stated here that the prices charged in the District of Columbia are exorbitant, and that the prices in many cities are below what they are here. The former president of the old company stated:

> The public do not know how cheap gas can be made, and we do not propose to tell them. Of course we can sell gas cheaper, but we do not propose to do so until we are compelled to.

Almost invariably in estimating cost of gas they include the cost of enlarging the plant, extending mains, etc. At a meeting of the American Gas Light Association when a member in reading a paper attempted to include in cost of gas extension of mains and other improvements he was stopped by President Harbison, who said:

> The cost of enlarging the plant should be charged to the capital account, and not to the cost of providing gas.

At a meeting of the association in 1880, Mr. Eugene Vanderpool, M. A., C. E., of the Newark Gas Light Company, and whom the Washington Gas Light Company asked to have brought here during the Spooner investigation in 1886, stated that cost of water gas was 42 cents per 1,000 feet, coal gas 35½ cents per 1,000 feet. This when coal was selling for $4.50 per ton and coke at 6 cents per bushel. The highest British authority, according to the Gas Light Journal, Mr. G. W. Stevenson, C. E., F. G. S., in his work, Precedents in Private Legislation Affecting Gas and Water Companies, 1879, gives the cost of coal gas, everything included, and the gas delivered to the burner of the consumer, at 51 cents per 1,000 feet. Take Mr. Vanderpool's estimate of 35½ cents in the holder and add 14 cents (40 per cent) for distribution, and we have 49½ cents per 1,000 feet, or a little more than a cent less than in Great Britain. Since then the residuals have come to be almost as valuable as the gas, and the price must have very materially fallen. Here are some facts from official sources as regards the cost of gas in the United States and Great Britain:

> According to the best authorities in the United States and Great Britain gas in the holder, in 1866, cost but 35 cents, and since then the cost of production has been reduced very materially.
> Hon. Orestes Cleveland—
>
> Ex-mayor of Jersey City, I believe—> in a letter to the Senate committee in 1886, stated that to his personal knowledge it was then put in the holder at 30 cents per 1,000. The cost of distribution is given at 40 per cent of the cost of production, which would be 12 cents, thus making the cost of gas at the burner 52 cents per 1,000.
> The cost of gas in Great Britain in 1880 was 30 cents per 1,000, and the engineer of the Leeds gas works says that "recent improvements in the process have greatly cheapened the cost of manufacture, so that now coal gas in the holder costs but 22 cents."

I hope the Senator will listen to this.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am listening very attentively.

Mr. KYLE. The letter of Hon. Orestes Cleveland continues:

> In 19 cities in Great Britain the average cost was 37½ cents, and the average price charged consumers was 53½ cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. We had representatives of the so-called Rose-Hastings process before the committee, and they claim to make gas cheaper than by any other process on the face of the earth; but they did not pretend to say that they could make it for less than 35 cents a thousand.

Mr. KYLE. I do not presume that any company will tell you what they are able to make their gas for.

Mr. GALLINGER. But this company were trying to make it appear that they could manufacture gas and furnish it cheaper than it could be furnished by the old process, and it was to their interest to make the figures as low as possible.

Mr. KYLE. But they made the figures enough lower to show that they could furnish gas to the citizens here for 75 cents, and to the city itself at 60 cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. They did not do so to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator's committee did not act upon the bill, I understand, because they did not want the city streets torn up.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not want the Senator to proceed upon that idea. During the Fifty-third Congress, and up to a late day in the Fifty-fourth Congress, I was an earnest advocate of the bill introduced by the Senator himself, because of its proposition to furnish cheaper gas. The investigations before the committee, where we had experts from various surrounding cities, at least produced a state of doubt upon my mind as to the possibility of producing gas upon their methods at these lower rates and of their ability to do what they proposed, which caused me to pause in the advocacy of their proposition. I was as earnestly in favor of it as the Senator in the Fifty-third Congress and up to a late day in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. KYLE. But I understand that the objection of the Commissioners was that they did not like the streets torn up.

Mr. HARRIS. That was one of the objections, and I am sure that was but one of the objections. It was not the only one. But this investigation went very much further than as to the tearing up of the streets. I totally disregarded that recommendation as against laying down other mains and other pipes, and other facts controlled my action—the utter failure of the new company to show its ability to produce gas at these lower rates, and, perhaps, its ability in financial and other respects.

Mr. KYLE. I do not care to go over the discussion of the 75-cent gas bill at this time——

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator for a moment more of his time. The Senator, of course, wants to be accurate on this point.

Mr. KYLE. I want to get through with my remarks soon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one moment. Mr. Thomas P. Worrall, who is president of the Westchester Gas Company, under the Rose-Hastings process, which undertook to get into the city of Washington under the bill which the Senator has championed, and still champions, and has had put on the Calendar after it had been adversely reported by the committee, said——

Mr. KYLE. I do not know that I can admit that now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be through in a moment.

Mr. KYLE. I understand, but there is a great deal of rebuttal testimony which I should feel like putting in.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; I will read what Mr. Worrall said in my own time.

Mr. KYLE. I do not understand the matter as the Senator states it. I do not think that the attorney of the Rose-Hastings Company, Mr. Sands, had a proper hearing before the District Committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is a very serious charge.

Mr. KYLE. The experts on the line of the Rose-Hastings Company were heard, but after that, when the attorney who represents that company asked for his final hearing before the committee of this branch of Congress he was refused.

Mr. GALLINGER. That attorney had four or five or six hours of the committee's time.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is so.

Mr. KYLE. Not for his own argument.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is making a very serious accusation, and it is not true.

Mr. KYLE. I have the correspondence right here.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be; but you are accusing the Committee on the District of Columbia now.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator mean Mr. Sands?

Mr. KYLE. Yes; I mean that he has not had a full final hearing.

Mr. HARRIS. When he makes such a statement he is wholly unjustified, and states a falsehood.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. HARRIS. He has been heard over and over——

Mr. GALLINGER. And over again.

Mr. HARRIS. And heard to a greater extent than the representative of any other gas company in existence.

Mr. KYLE. His final argument I referred to, which he wished to make before the committee, and he was not given a hearing in regard to it.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President——

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator from West Virginia wants to ask me a question I will hear him.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that he had a final hearing, and at that hearing he put in all the papers, he said, that would bear on the subject, and they are found here, as the Senator will see when he gets the printed record.

Mr. KYLE. I have seen the printed record, and I have the correspondence with the chairman of the District Committee. I have here a letter from Mr. Sands to the chairman of the committee, which is as follows:

> WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1896.
> SENATOR: The bill No. 1408 to incorporate the National Capital Gas Light, Heat, and Power Company has been referred to your committee for consideration and report.
>
> The incorporators, for whom I appear as counsel, are anxious to be heard before your committee, prepared to show to them their readiness and ability to carry out every provision of that bill, and thus to give to the people of this District the relief for which they have been petitioning Congress so many years.
> Two of our experts, whose statements it is of the highest importance for each member of the committee to hear, are absent in the West, but can be here by Wednesday, January 22, instant.
>
> There are several new members on your committee, and it is just to them, as well as to us, that they also hear us upon the merits of our bill.
>
> Therefore, I request that you name a day when we can be heard by the full committee—
>
> "By the full committee"—
> when they can be here, and that no action be had without our being heard.
>
> The great importance of this bill to the people calls for such action, and asking such hearing, I am, yours, respectfully,
>
> F. P. B. SANDS, Counsel.
> Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
> Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
> United States Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to state to him——

Mr. KYLE. Wait until I get through with this correspondence.

Mr. HARRIS. That as often as twice upon my motion——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, if the Senator declines to yield I will take my seat.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to finish the correspondence. Here is a letter from the chairman of the committee [Mr. MCMILLAN] to Mr. Sands:

JANUARY 16, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of January 14, I would say that the bill to incorporate the National Capital Gas Light, Heat, and Power Company will be referred in the usual way, and when the subcommittee is ready to take up the measure you will be notified of the date arranged for a hearing.

Yours, truly, JAMES MCMILLAN.

F. P. B. SANDS, Esq.,
Adams Building, Washington, D. C.

Then on February 12 Mr. Sands writes again:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1896.

MR. CHAIRMAN: On January 14 ultimo, as counsel for the incorporators named in the bill (S. 1408) to incorporate the National Capital Gas Light, Heat, and Power Company, I requested a hearing before the full committee in behalf of that measure.

I see that your committee has given a hearing before the full committee to the representatives of a citizens' association to speak upon that bill.

May I be permitted to request, in the name of simple justice, that the hearing before the full committee asked for be soon given to us, with forty-eight hours' previous notice, that our absent parties may have time to reach the city to be able to attend?

With respect, I am, yours, truly, F. P. B. SANDS,
Of Counsel.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman District Committee, United States Senate.

No answer was vouchsafed to this letter.

Then, February 14, Mr. Sands again writes the chairman as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 14, 1896.

DEAR SIR: I was informed yesterday that the committee had set Wednesday, February 26, at 2 p. m., for a hearing upon Senate bill No. 1408, to incorporate the National Capital Gas Light, Heat, and Power Company.

Will you kindly inform me whether such is the fact and what is to be the scope of the hearing, that I may notify our experts, who are in Pennsylvania and desire to be present, and to whom I think the date named will be satisfactory?

Asking of your courtesy an early reply, I am, respectfully, yours,
F. P. B. SANDS,
Of Counsel for Incorporators.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The reply of the chairman, dated February 15, is as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of yesterday, I would say that at the request of Senator HARRIS the committee arranged to hear some experts from Boston on the subject of gas. I will see that you and your friends have an opportunity to be heard before the bill (S. 1408) is disposed of, and of course you are entirely at liberty to be present at any hearing on the subject.

"To be present"—

Doubtless Senator HARRIS will tell you whom he expects to be present at the hearing arranged for the 26th.

Yours, truly, JAMES MCMILLAN.

F. P. B. SANDS, Esq.,
No. 1333 F street NW., Washington, D. C.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now——

Mr. KYLE. I am not through yet. I have a letter from Mr. Sands dated April 24, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 24, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: The foregoing correspondence shows what earnest efforts I made to secure a hearing on behalf of the incorporators in Senate bill No. 1408.

To prevent any snap judgment being taken against me I notified the experts we relied upon to attend on February 26, the date set for the hearing. They came on at great inconvenience to themselves, and on reaching the committee room we were informed by the chairman that the hearing was postponed until March 5.

They attended again on March 5 and on March 17.

On those dates I, as counsel, introduced the expert evidence to convince the committee that we were prepared with processes which enabled us to carry out the propositions in the bill as to gas to be supplied at the low rates named in the bill.

I confined myself to presenting my witnesses and proofs, except when required to answer questions put by members of the committee.

That is what he confined himself to.

When through with my experts I again asked that a day be fixed when I could have thirty minutes to explain the merits of that bill.

The chairman answered that if the committee desired to give me a hearing I would be notified.

I secured subsequently from the clerk of the District Committee a copy of the published report of the evidence taken by the committee, and after a perusal of it I saw the necessity of explaining a few of the facts touched upon by some of the opposing experts.

I therefore wrote again on March 27 to the honorable chairman of the committee, asking a hearing, and I submit a copy of my request and his answer thereto.

Considering the very great importance of that bill to my clients, as well as to the whole people of this community, I have reason to feel that we have been treated unfairly and that there has been a determination to prevent a full and free hearing in behalf of the bill. The officers and advocates of the Washington Gas Light Company were given free and full hearings to oppose our bill, and even after I was told (see page 64 of report) that the expert hearing was ended, and had left the committee room, an advocate of the Washington Gas Light Company was permitted to make his speech against our bill in our absence, and we have been deprived of an opportunity to answer him.

Respectfully, F. P. B. SANDS,
Counsel for Incorporators, Bill 1408.

Hon. JAMES KYLE,
United States Senate.

On the 27th day of March Mr. Sands wrote the following letter to Mr. MCMILLAN:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 27, 1896.

SENATOR: A perusal of the printed report of the "gas" hearing on bill No. 1408 makes it clear that the committee will welcome a résumé of the expert evidence submitted to save the labor to the committee that must follow from an examination of it.

There are points in the conflicting statements of the witnesses on both sides that should be elucidated and explained, and in the interest of justice and fairness I ask for a brief hearing before the committee in regard to the experts' testimony.

I feel confident that you will appreciate the propriety of this and will fix an early day and a convenient hour for the hearing.

Respectfully, yours, F. P. B. SANDS.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman District Committee, United States Senate.

The reply is as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of March 27, asking for another hearing on the bill (S. 1408) I would say that the committee has decided to hold no more hearings on the subject of gas.

Yours, truly, JAMES MCMILLAN.

Mr. F. P. B. SANDS,
35 Adams Building, City.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me——

Mr. KYLE. I think the correspondence speaks for itself as far as the last final hearing and the argument he wished to make is concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. As I have already stated, during the whole of the Fifty-third Congress and up to a late date in the Fifty-fourth, I was decidedly the advocate of the bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota in favor of this new proposed gas company. I have known nothing of the correspondence the Senator has read, but knowing, as I was informed, that the company desired a hearing before the full committee, on my motion the full committee agreed to meet on a named day for the hearing of all the gas companies and all the experts from any and everywhere whom they proposed to bring before the committee, and we adjourned one hearing to another, and another, and another, and in those hearings I am safe in saying that the new gas company favoring the bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota consumed two or three days, as much time as any other gas company claiming to be heard. This statement I deem it proper to make in answer to the complaint of that company.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, just a word more until I finish the particular point I was on. The cost of gas, as I asserted a while ago, I think, in the District of Columbia in the holder is about 35 cents a thousand. The cost of gas in Great Britain in 1890 was 30 cents a thousand, and so on. Let me read:

In 19 cities in Great Britain the average cost was 37½ cents, and the average price charged consumers was 52½ cents. One reason why gas can be produced so much cheaper now is the fact that the residual products are so utilized as to command much higher prices. Indeed, so much have the conditions changed in this respect, that, as stated in a letter from a prominent gentleman in Great Britain, the distillation of coal for the residual products alone is very profitable.

There is a most remarkable statement, that "the distillation of coal for the residual products alone is very profitable," corresponding to the testimony of Mr. Whitney and others with reference to the great value of the by-products to-day. Here is the statement made:

"There are three extensive plants operated on the gas-works plan situated at and in the vicinity of Stoke-on-Trent, England. The tar from these works is sent to New York; the benzole goes to Germany. I have reliable information that the business is very profitable, and yet they sell no gas."

Since the introduction of asphalt pavements, in which refined coal tar is used, the demand has largely increased, and by chemical methods the other residual products are utilized with still larger profit.

With such experience at home and abroad, there is no room left for doubt. There is not a shadow of a question but that it would be greatly for the benefit of the public for the District to furnish the light, both electrical and gas, not only for the streets, but for private use also.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, at the hour of half past 3 the Senate had resolved heretofore to proceed to hear eulogies on the late Representative WILLIAM H. CRAIN, of Texas. That hour has arrived.

Mr. KYLE. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. GEORGE. With the permission of the Senator from Texas, I ask the Senate to have reprinted, for the use of the Senate, Report No. 1460 of the Forty-ninth Congress, first session, being the report by Mr. Spooner, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, upon this very question. I find at the document room that there is not a single copy of the report left. It is a very important report, and I should like to have it before the Senate on Monday. I do not want the hearing reprinted, but only the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I yield to my colleague [Mr. CHILTON].

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CRAIN.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Texas will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions; and they were unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. W. H. CRAIN, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the sympathies of the members of the Senate be tendered to the family of Mr. CRAIN in this bereavement, and that the Secretary of the Senate transmit to them a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I did not know Mr. CRAIN as intimately as some of those who, like my colleague, served with him in the other branch of Congress. We lived in different sections of our far-reaching Texas, and I believe he had been both district attorney and State senator before I made his personal acquaintance.

I remember well, sir, the occasion when I first saw him. It was at a Democratic State convention in Texas in 1880. A large crowd had assembled, and at some peculiarly stormy moment in the proceedings a tall and handsome man arose in the rear part of the hall, with a tone and manner which attracted instant attention, and addressed himself to the work of extricating the convention from its confusion. Some one who sat near me gave the name of the speaker as that of CRAIN, and the impression which the episode made upon my mind has never been effaced. In thinking of him I always like to look back to that day. I never saw a brighter face or keener eye; I never saw a presence more imperial; I never heard a diction more felicitous and clear. His speech was short, but it was complete. There was no waste of gesticulation, no waste of language, no waste of opportunity. It was all over quickly. Other scenes rapidly succeeded as the business of the convention was transacted, but none which are recalled with the vividness of that which I have described. I was then a young practitioner of the law, held no office, and was barely beginning a limited experience in politics, but I remember that the conclusion was then fastened upon my mind that Mr. CRAIN was suited to and sure of an eminent career.

It is always to me, sir, a most interesting study to analyze the lives of public men and endeavor to single out the particular qualities which have been the sources of their distinction. In Mr. CRAIN's case I would say it came, first, from that accomplishment which has been noticed by so many, his mastery of undiluted English expression; next, from his voice of music and of power; and, lastly, from an overflow of animal spirits developed into constant vivacity and creating a social charm which, according to my observation of mankind, neither study nor learning nor experience nor even good temper alone can altogether supply.

Possessing this combination of personal and oratorical gifts to which I have alluded, it may well be supposed that Mr. CRAIN was specially strong as a political canvasser. He could interest in private conversation, he could electrify in public debate, and thus it was that, though his adversaries were many, he was triumphantly elected to Congress term after term, and continued to his death a favorite of the people.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, to adequately portray the character and fittingly eulogize the virtues of the dead require an intimate acquaintance with the individual while alive. I lack the essential element of that acquaintance to do full honor to the memory of WILLIAM HENRY CRAIN. The only time I was thrown in contact with Mr. CRAIN was on the train from New Orleans to Washington several years ago. During that journey there was between us a free interchange of thought and a candid expression of opinion on many of the leading topics of the day.

The Southern character is distinguished for absence of form and freedom from restraint. When intelligent gentlemen of high social or official position are casually brought together, with rapid insight they correctly estimate each other's character; with sagacious confidence they lay the foundation for a friendship which in time frequently warms into the closest intimacy. There is neither that reserve which repels advance nor that caution which seeks seclusion.

During the journey referred to I observed in Mr. CRAIN a character that was chivalric, an intellect that was solid yet brilliant. His versatility was remarkable; his power of description graphic; his opinions just. In his bearing there was an urbanity of manner which charmed his companions; in his discourse a poetry of expression which almost glowed into verse.

But, sir, I was not fortunate enough to enter the sanctuary where mind fully discloses itself to mind, and heart to heart, the sacred sanctuary devoted to human friendship. And, therefore, tenderer hands than mine have laid their tribute on his grave, and more loving hearts than mine have done honor to his memory. Though this be so, a Louisianian brings this sincere offering to his name and fame and lays it on the grave of the noble Texan.

Mr. President, "Noscitur a sociis" is a maxim as true in ethics as in law. Judged by this maxim, the young and promising statesman was only unfortunate in his untimely death. He had "won golden opinions from all sorts of men." His associates in the House of Representatives with one accord honor his memory and grieve for his loss. With affectionate zeal they stamp his character and his ability with the seal of their love and respect.

Where he lived and where best known there were tears for the death "that did sit on his brow like an untimely frost"; there was love for the citizen and praise for the Representative, and there the memory of his worth will long outlive the generation which cherishes it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, on the 10th day of February last, in the hours of the early morning, WILLIAM HENRY CRAIN, a Representative from the Eleventh Texas district, in the forty-eighth year of his age, joined the innumerable caravan that is ever journeying toward the unknown land. For twelve years he had been honored by the people of his district as their Representative in the National Legislature. It is useless to inquire how well he discharged the duties of the high station he occupied. His constituents have answered all such questions by their cordial indorsement at each recurring election. From the beginning to the sad ending of his public career he held without one wavering moment not only the confidence, but the affection of the people among whom he lived, for whom he labored, and beside whose departed loved ones he has been laid to sleep until the gray dawn of another morning, when those that sleep shall awake, and awake, as he believed, to another, a higher, and a better life. When one's life has been rounded out to hoary hairs and furrowed cheeks, and his head is then bowed upon the bed of death, there is a consolation that comes to the hearts of loved ones and friends in the consciousness of the fact that he has accomplished the work that the Master assigned. But when we stand by the open grave of a faithful public servant who has fallen in the full vigor of physical manhood and great intellectual endowments, there is a touch of deeper sadness, a pang of keener grief. It is in the shadow of that grief all Texas stands to-day. From the Sabine to the Rio Grande, and from No Mans Land to the Gulf of Mexico he was known to all.

In the interesting and sometimes angry contentions in reference to the adjustment of public questions he was always a participant, and one who was always ready to give a reason for the faith that was in him. In an intellectual encounter he was not an adversary to be despised, and the foeman who made the mistake of underestimating his strength always paid the penalty for his rashness before the encounter ended. At 24 years of age he was elected district attorney of the district in which he lived. This position presented to him a splendid field for the display of his intellectual gifts and attainments. In this arena he was constantly pitted against the ablest and best lawyers of his district. It would be fulsome flattery to say that he always came off first best in encounters with such a bar as that district had. But daily battle with strong men improved and whetted his own intellect and enabled him to mount faster and higher the eminence whose summit he was struggling to crown. In the exercise of his official duties as an officer of the State he was in constant touch with the people. The circle of his acquaintance was ever expanding and as it widened his hold grew stronger. He was endowed with a bright, quick mind, and with an ever-present wit and a generous warmth of disposition. He could prosecute without persecuting. He could differ sharply without offending those from whom he differed. There was genial sunshine and warmth displayed in his intercourse with all that attached his fellow-citizens to him, and he died without knowing how strong that attachment was.

In 1884 he was chosen the Representative in Congress of the district, which then bristled with men of ability, the constant friendship of all of whom he held to the last moment of his life; and when he announced some weeks before his death his determination to retire to private life his resolution met their remonstrance from every part of his district. They believed, as did all his friends, that the theater of his usefulness was widening; that there were higher altitudes to which fortune was inviting him and on which the pride and affections of his people were anxious he should stand. But he felt that twelve years of the very vigor of his life he had given to his country, and he should now look to the interests of those who were dependent on him for support. His earthly goods were limited, and he felt that before he died he should better the pecuniary situation of his loved ones. In a conversation with him only a few days before his death he told me of his purpose to quit public life. In common with other friends I remonstrated with him against his decision. But he was immovable. In a few days after our conversation he was taken away from his people, his family, and his friends. He fell at his post and in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by his fellow-citizens. When his death was announced there were no mourners more sincere than those among whom he was born and reared. They were not only proud of him as their representative, but they loved him, and loved him with an intensity and depth of feeling that is not often the fortune of public servants. While he had every evidence of their confidence in his integrity and fidelity in his discharge of public trusts, yet he never knew how deep was that tenderness of personal attachment that bound them to him. These are virtues that only manifest their full strength when the cherished object is destroyed and the image passes forever from our sight. Then the foundations are torn up and all hearts pour their grief into the grave of the loved and lost and speak only with flowers and shrouds and tears.

Mr. CRAIN had the advantages of a thorough education. To these he added the forces acquired by a life of reading and study. His mind was strong, active, and bright. When his brain was aroused in earnest discussion he commanded the clearest and most forceful words in the English tongue, and, like a skilled archer, shot every arrow to the mark he meant. When he felt it necessary by ridicule to puncture a fallacy he made his arrows laugh as they flew. When it was necessary he was logical, analytical, and serious, and developed an idea with faultless argument. He had what men call moral courage, that power that enables a man to stand by convictions when enveloped in clouds as well as when in sunshine. An open, frank, and happy disposition attracted friends, and held them when they came. His hold upon them was manifested when his remains were carried to his home for interment. His constituents, without regard to party, met in public assemblies and expressed their sorrow at his loss. From every part of his district they came with flowers to cover the grave in which was to rest the neighbor, the friend, and faithful public servant.

And there we leave him to sleep on till the mortal shall put on immortality and the dead shall wake to sleep no more.

I move, as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 18, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 18, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting information relative to the imposition of retaliatory duties upon merchandise imported from foreign countries which discriminate against the importation to or sale therein of manufactures or products of the United States as provided for in Senate bill No. 3040, to protect commerce, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed.

C. E. PHILBROOK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to C. E. Philbrook, widow of Alva Philbrook, major of Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

CARRIE L. YEATON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1924) granting a pension to Carrie L. Yeaton.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 4, to strike out "subject"; in line 5, to strike out "to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws"; and in line 8, to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH W. SUTHERLAND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1420) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty"; and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. VILAS were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DEADWOOD, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 266) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Deadwood, in the State of South Dakota.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Deadwood, S. Dak., the cost of the site and building, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $200,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2420) to regulate the pay of noncommissioned officers of the Army.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty"; in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty"; in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty"; in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-three"; and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "seventeen"; so as to read:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1896, the pay per month of the following noncommissioned officers of the line of the Army shall be as follows: Sergeant-major, artillery, cavalry, and infantry, $30; regimental quartermaster-sergeant, artillery, cavalry, and infantry, $30; first sergeant, artillery, cavalry, and infantry, $30; sergeant, artillery, cavalry, and infantry, $23; corporal, artillery, cavalry, and infantry, $17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the increase of pay to noncommissioned officers of the Army by reason of longevity service now provided by law: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to increase the pay of noncommissioned officers of the Army on the retired list July 1, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Jersey how the rates in the bill compare with the present pay?

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that while the rates in the bill are not as high as I asked for from the committee, the pay of a sergeant-major has been increased $7 a month, the pay of regimental quartermaster-sergeant $7 a month, the pay of first sergeant $5 a month, the pay of sergeants $5 a month, and the pay of corporals $2 a month.

Mr. PEFFER. It is not proposed to decrease the pay in any case?

Mr. SEWELL. No, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. KYLE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3064) authorizing the purchase by the United States and the making free of the toll roads passing over the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

Mr. PEFFER. I observe that the language of the bill is such that the Government shall purchase certain toll roads in the Yosemite Park. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. KYLE. That is correct.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I ask the Senator whether the language ought not to be changed? I think the Government now owns those roads, and probably the object of the bill is to pay for the work that has been done upon them. I understand that the Yosemite Park is a Government reservation and belongs to the Government of the United States now, and hence the people own the roads. I suppose what the Senator wants to do by the bill, and I think it is a proper step to be taken, is to pay the private parties who have built the roads for the work they have done on them. If I am correct, I think the phraseology of the bill ought to be changed so as to incorporate that idea.

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that a portion of the roads are within the State park. A part of the park belongs to the State, and those roads have already been bought and paid for by the State and are public. The bill only refers to the portion of the roads outside of the State park. The bill has been examined and approved by the Interior Department.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that the bill was reported from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Preservation of Game after having been examined very carefully.

Mr. PEFFER. In whom is the title to the ground used as a right of way vested?

Mr. WHITE. These roads were located by private individuals and are owned as such under the provisions of law existing prior to the making of the reservation.

Mr. PEFFER. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. KYLE. It had the approval of Secretary Noble, of the Interior Department, some years ago, and also of the present Secretary of the Interior. I think there can be no objection to the bill, as it merely empowers a board of army engineers to investigate and report to Congress the probable expense of the purchase. It is not proposed to purchase the roads outright.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask my colleague if it is the purpose of the bill to make these roads free to the public in connection with the roads in the State park?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KYLE. Absolutely free.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is there any estimate as to their cost?

Mr. KYLE. It is thought by some that the four toll roads complete would cost in the neighborhood of $200,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask further if these are not toll roads, or are they pieces of abandoned roads for which somebody wants to get paid?

Mr. KYLE. They are toll roads, being used by all the visitors who go to Yosemite Park.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then the roads are free in the State only, and when they get to the line of the national park they charge toll?

Mr. WHITE. That is the situation.

Mr. KYLE. That is it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the bill, in section 2, line 13, by inserting after the word "nay" the words "if it approve"; so as to make it clear that the appropriation will only be made by Congress if Congress shall approve the report.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGET LANE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3123) for the relief of Bridget Lane.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to give credit to Bridget Lane, postmaster at Summit, Union County, N. J., in the sums of $5,342.60 for postage stamps stolen from that office, $605.22 for postal funds and key-deposit fund, all of which were stolen on the 20th day of November, 1895, through no fault of Bridget Lane.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Produce Exchange of Toledo, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for a change in the penalties for violation of the provisions of the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, Minn., and a petition of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of House bill No. 260, providing for an increase in the pay of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of Encampment No. 142, Union Veteran Legion, of Jeffersonville, Ind., praying for the passage of a per diem pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO presented the petition of C. H. Newell and sundry other citizens of Lake County, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter, and also to reduce the rate of letter postage to 1 cent per half ounce; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. A few days ago I presented a petition from the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union of Manchester, N. H., in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I now present a petition from the same organization, stating that they desire the bill for the purpose of nationalizing the telegraph lines to be enacted into law, and they represent that they wish the Senators from New Hampshire "to work and vote for that bill to secure Government ownership and control of the telegraph lines, which has secured the indorsation of the International Typographical Union."

This petition is signed by Earle Payne, president, and George Keller, secretary. These gentlemen have addressed the petition to "Senators GALLINGER and SMITH of the State of New Hampshire." I presume the mistake in the name of my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] occurs from the fact that it has not been prominently before the American people of late. [Laughter.]

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the American Medical Association, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1552, to regulate vivisection in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Charles T. Mitchell, M. D., of Canandaigua, N. Y., favoring the passage of the bill restricting vivisection, now before Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a communication from Charles W. Dabney, jr., Acting Secretary of Agriculture, stating why that Department should be excepted from the provisions of the bill (S. 1552) providing for the further prevention of cruelty to animals in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8109) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and submit a report thereon. I desire to give notice that immediately after the bill now under consideration, making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia, has been concluded, I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill I have just reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1500) for the relief of William M. Masi, ex-postmaster, and Benjamin Hellman, Lawrence R. Bresnahen, John W. Griffen, George W. Hoyt, and Charles W. Riner, as sureties upon his official bond as postmaster at Cheyenne, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. COCKRELL May 12, 1896, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, the amendment providing for the payment of the several amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department by Treasury settlements Nos. 9672, 9686, etc., reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3162) in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1517) in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2892) to incorporate "The National Plant, Flower, and Fruit Guild," reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3051) defining the rights and privileges of mixed-blood Indians under the treaties and statutes of the United States, confirming the title of said Indians to their lands, allowing the same to be alienated under certain circumstances, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment and submit a report thereon. It is proper that I should state that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] does not agree to this report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. MORRILL on the 9th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That for the purpose of making the investigation and report ordered by Senate resolution of May 7, 1896, the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise, to summon witnesses, and to administer oaths during the sessions or recess of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to employ stenographers and such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

EMPLOYEES ON THE MALTBY ROLL.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on the 1st instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay any employees of the Senate now or hereafter borne on the Maltby roll at the salaries now assigned to the places on said roll until otherwise ordered.

INVESTIGATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN April 22, 1896, reported it favorably, without amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, to be designated by the President of the Senate, is hereby instructed to proceed to Alaska after the adjournment of Congress, and there inquire into and report to the Senate:

First. The condition of the fishery industry on the coast and waters of Alaska, and such measures as will protect such industry from waste and destruction.

Second. The present condition of the fur-seal fisheries, and such regulations as may be adopted, consistent with the treaty with Great Britain, to preserve the life of female seals on the islands and adjacent waters of Alaska.

Third. Such measures as may be deemed expedient to promote the progress and development of the people of Alaska in population, industry, education, and good order, and especially the mineral resources of Alaska.

Fourth. And the committee shall ascertain and report the progress made in defining the boundaries between Alaska and the British Possessions.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is requested to furnish the committee, when it arrives at Sitka, with a suitable vessel to convey its members to such points on the coast of Alaska as they may deem necessary for this investigation. And the committee may appoint a clerk now in the employ of the Senate to attend said committee; and the necessary expenses incurred in complying with these resolutions shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

STEAMER KAHULUL

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 206) to provide an American register for the steamer Kahului.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CLARK. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 270) changing the time of holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of California, to report it favorably, without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILHELM SPIEGELBURG.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2871) to amend "An act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its consideration at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3163) to grant an increase of pension to Alanson Hamilton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3164) to permit W. W. Wheeler to prosecute a claim; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3165) relating to the probate of wills in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3166) to increase the limit of the appropriation for a public building at Newport, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BAKER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3167) to grant to the Hudson Reservoir and Canal Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian Reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF COLONIAL DAMES.

Mr. WETMORE. I move that the bill (S. 3087) to incorporate The National Society of Colonial Dames of America, now on the Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

NICARAGUAN CANAL HEARINGS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hearings before the Committee of the House of Representatives on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, on House bill 35, relating to the Nicaraguan Canal, be printed for the use of the Senate.

JOINT TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate of the condition of the legal proceedings commenced in New York City to restrain the operation of the Joint Traffic Association of the railroads between Chicago and the seaboard, giving all official correspondence relative to the institution of such proceedings; a full copy of the court record of all proceedings down to this date, including, however, the answer of only one defendant where the answers of different defendants are alike, and omitting the briefs of counsel; a statement of the names of the counsel employed or appearing on each side, and of the judge or judges before whom the proceedings have been or are pending, and of the delays and adjournments which have already taken place, and, further, the opinion of the Attorney-General as to the length of time which may elapse before a final decision.

PACIFIC COAST EXPOSITIONS.

Mr. PERKINS. I submit a resolution, and ask that it may be considered at this time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate the report of the officer in charge relating to the administration of customs at the California Midwinter International Exposition, San Francisco, Cal., and at the Northwest Interstate Exposition, Tacoma, Wash., and that the same be printed when received.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the words "and that the same be printed when received," so that we may determine the question of printing after we receive the report.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

LOTS IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas it appears that as the result of the division of lots in the city of Washington between the United States and the original owners of the land now embraced in said city the title of certain lots is still in the United States, although such lots are assessed for taxes as belonging to individuals: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate on the first Monday of December next a list of all such lots claimed by private individuals the title to which is in the United States; and also the draft of a bill authorizing and providing a proper method by which the United States may dispose of such lots.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CASES.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the Senate a list of all judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants since the 6th day of April, 1896, in Indian depredation cases, including the names of claimants, the amount claimed, and the amount of judgment recovered in each case.

THE LEWIS RANGE AND POSITION FINDER.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to the Senate a complete copy of the record of the action of the range finder board and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification in relation to the Lewis range and position finder.

MESSENGER AT MALTBY BUILDING.

Mr. PEFFER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the janitor now employed at the Maltby Building shall hereafter be designated as assistant messenger on the Maltby roll, and the Secretary of the Senate, from and after the 1st day of July, 1896, until otherwise ordered, shall pay said messenger on said roll at the rate of $1,200 per annum.

SALE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia, in order that the Senate may proceed with its consideration, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] having the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course I will yield, if the bill is taken up now, for morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CHAPELL, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 61) for the relief of Frederick Gramm;

A bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month;

A bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russell N. Reynolds;

A bill (S. 1435) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Kimball;

A bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly;

A bill (S. 1865) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective Departments;

A bill (S. 2508) to establish customs ports of delivery at Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, Colo., and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2514) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie E. Colwell.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 125) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook;

A bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob;

A bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater;

A bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe;

A bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman;

A bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley;

A bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sandford; and

A bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble upon the Nicaragua Canal.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2405) granting a pension to Maria Gibbons;

A bill (H. R. 2947) increasing the pension of Daniel D. Jennings, late of Company C, Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 3578) granting a pension to Elmira E. Dustin;

A bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott; and

A bill (H. R. 5946) granting an increase of pension to Abraham H. Parker.

The message further announced that the House has passed a concurrent resolution to print 15,000 additional copies of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, RICHARDSON'S compilation; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT IN ALABAMA.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 445, being a resolution for the appointment of a select committee to make inquiry whether there is, and for the last two years and a half has been, a republican form of government in the State of Alabama.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections March 3, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators shall be appointed to investigate the facts and circumstances of the election in the State of Alabama on the first Monday of August, 1894, resulting in the setting up of a State government, consisting of a governor, and of a legislature which elected a United States Senator; and especially to inquire whether the election of said State government was accomplished by false and fictitious returns, or by other fraudulent or dishonest methods, or by violent practices, and if so, what were the nature and extent of the wrongs committed, and the character and motives of any conspiracy to commit the same; and also whether the Constitution and laws of the United States were in any way violated in connection with said election; and further into all other matters and things in any way injuriously affecting the political autonomy of said State, or now or at any time impairing or destroying the right of said State government to recognition as the lawful government, or the competency of said legislature to elect a United States Senator. Said committee may sit as a full committee or by subcommittees, as it may elect, and in vacation or during the sessions of Congress, and at such times and places in said State or elsewhere as it may see proper; and said committee, or any subcommittee, shall have power to send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, swear and examine witnesses, take and report testimony and evidence; and said committee shall make due report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HILL. We have already taken up the bill relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia, and it is now being considered. The Senator from West Virginia simply yielded for matters to be brought up by unanimous consent. This is an important matter, and in the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who has charge somewhat of the opposition to the resolution, I do not think it ought to be taken up now. In fact, I do not see how it can be taken up unless the gentlemen interested in the gas bill will consent.

Mr. ALLEN. This is a privileged question. It is not a question requiring unanimous consent. It concerns the political autonomy of a State, and is a question of the very highest privilege.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that I should like, of course, to accommodate him in anything I possibly could, but the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the District of Columbia are insisting that the measure now before the Senate shall be considered, so that the District appropriation bill can be proceeded with. I can not agree with the Senator from Nebraska that this is a privileged motion in any sense whatever, and I do not think that the Chair can hold that it is. I hope the Senator will let us get through with the gas bill, which will not take more than three or four hours anyway, I think now, before insisting upon taking up the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing to take the ruling of the Chair as to whether this is a privileged question or not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the ruling is made I should like to have the privilege of making a suggestion. I think I ought to say something in justice to the Senator from Nebraska.

The resolution for which the one reported by the committee is a substitute was introduced, I think, early in December. The Senator from Nebraska made various efforts to get it up, and at last it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I will state that the resolution was introduced in the last Congress and debated over a year ago, and then reintroduced at the beginning of the present Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. Either the Senator or myself has been introducing resolutions to investigate the condition of affairs in Alabama for the last two years, but as long as the Senator from New York is on the floor there does not seem to be any opportunity of getting resolutions of inquiry through this body. However, this particular resolution, which I hope both the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New York will support when we get it before the Senate, was introduced by the Senator from Nebraska early in December. It was reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections the 3d day of March, with an understanding that the views of the minority were to be submitted. After much delay and many inquiries, within a very short time, on the 8th day of May, the minority report against the passage of the resolution was submitted to the Senate. There has been delay, which we have been glad to grant, on account of the sickness and absence of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but here, now, is the resolution, with a report for it and a report against it, and it is a resolution that I think ought to be considered privileged. The reasons for and against its passage are stated in the two reports, and so far as the friends of the resolution are concerned they are willing to have it voted upon without any debate. I will say so for myself, and I think I may speak for the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment? I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say that the resolution ought to be regarded as privileged, but I do not understand the Senator to say, while he thinks that possibly as a matter of policy it ought to be regarded as such, that he thinks it is such under our rules. I do not understand the Senator from New Hampshire, who I concede is a good parliamentarian, to assert that under any interpretation of our rules the resolution can be regarded as privileged.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will excuse me, I intended to make a proposition which would obviate any discussion of the question whether it is privileged, by asking unanimous consent to vote within a few days upon the resolution without debate. Unless the Senator from Nebraska differs with me, I ask that on Wednesday, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, there may be a vote on this resolution without debate. I ask unanimous consent for such an agreement.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, there are two ways to progress with the public business. The usual and ordinary way in the Senate is when a matter is in condition to be moved, as this has not been until very recently. The majority report has been here for some time, but the minority report has been presented only recently, and the resolution has only just now been put in a status where it can be moved. When a measure gets in that condition the usual course is for a Senator to rise in his place and give notice that on such a day in the future he will move to take it up. There has been no such notice given, and now, right in the midst of a speech almost, when another measure is pending before the Senate, for the Senator to ask for the consideration of an important matter like this it does not strike me is, at least, the wisest course to pursue.

We must take these things up in their order. I gave notice the other day of a bill in which I am very much interested, in the public interest, to have passed. It is a bill relating to punishment for contempt—to remedy some abuses that are claimed to exist. I gave notice that at the first opportunity, on the first lull in the proceedings, not to antagonize appropriation bills, I would ask to have that bill taken up. I do not see why we should consent to have some semipolitical-investigation resolution take the place of that which is a public matter, demanding action from this body before we adjourn. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] gave notice of another subject which he desires to have considered.

If my friend from Nebraska desires to address the Senate, and will give notice that at some future day he proposes to call up his resolution, so that we can all have notice of it, that would be in order; but I can not, as one Senator, in the light of the notices which I have given, consent that the resolution be now taken up, and a day fixed for its consideration by unanimous consent. Let us proceed regularly and in order. That is my idea about it, not wishing especially to antagonize the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, whenever the proper time arrives for its consideration.

I dissent entirely, I wish to say right here, from the resolution, and I wish to be heard upon that question if it is to be pressed, upon the theory that it is a privileged matter, to be taken up and displace any other matter before the Senate. I do not think it can be done, and certainly I shall desire to be heard on that question. But I appeal to the Senator from Nebraska simply now to give notice that on such a day, not antagonizing appropriation bills, or in the interval of appropriation bills, he will ask to take this matter up, when we can proceed with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did the Senator from New York take note of the fact that there have been majority and minority reports in this case, and that my request was that we might vote on Wednesday, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, without debate? That proposition does not interfere with the Senator's contempt bill, nor any of the other matters to which he has alluded, and expedites public business.

Mr. HILL. It would be so unprecedented in this Senate to have a matter of such importance disposed of without debate that in the interests of the traditions of the Senate I should have to object to that course.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say a word before the question is submitted to the Senate. I do not want my silence to be construed by the Senator from New York into agreeing with him that this is not a privileged question. Of course I am not a parliamentarian like the Senator from New York, and therefore it might be natural for him to suppose that I would not know whether the question were a privileged one or not. I take it, however, that no man who is familiar in the slightest degree with our form of government will deny that it is a question of the very highest privilege. Our Constitution provides that the Government of the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government; and it is of the highest privilege to know whether the people of a State of this Union have, as a large portion of the people of Alabama claim, been deprived of a republican form of government. If there can be a question of higher privilege than that, I have no knowledge of it. I am satisfied that thoughtful men every where will agree that it is of the very highest order of privileged questions.

I do not want to detain the Senate this morning upon this matter unnecessarily, or to consume the time of the Senate needlessly. I want to say in answer to what I hear around me, however, that no one of whom I have any knowledge has any desire to secure the seat of the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which seems to be involved in some way in this investigation. The purpose of this resolution is not aimed at the honorable Senator from Alabama. It is aimed at the broad question whether the people of the State of Alabama are deprived of a republican form of government. Certainly my relations with the honorable Senator from Alabama are such that I would not have any purpose in questioning his right to occupy his seat here.

I have information, Mr. President, from Alabama, by telegraphic dispatches and in the form of letters from representative men, that can not be denied or ignored, that the great majority of the people of that State are deprived of a republican form of government by what is known as the Organized Democracy. With this statement I am perfectly willing that the Chair shall determine, so that we may know and the country may know whether this is a privileged question or not.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course, Mr. President, the admission of the Senator that he did not mean to question or involve the seat of the Senator from Alabama of itself negatives at once all idea of the resolution being a question of privilege or that it affects the privileges of the Senate. That is all I have to say in reply to the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not want to characterize the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia as pettifogging; I would not do that. I would not break the courtesy of the Senate by doing that; but I do hope the Senator from West Virginia, in self-respect, will not undertake to palm off upon as intelligent gentlemen as those composing the Senate an argument of that kind.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I have never known a question of privilege to extend beyond the body of the House or the individual member of the body. It relates to the honor of the assembly or the honor of an individual member. It relates to the safety of a member, as was decided in the House of Representatives when somebody got on top of the House and shook down the glass some years ago, which fell near some members of the House. I have here in the Manual of the House of Representatives a large number of decisions about what is a privileged question, and, so far, I have not been able to discover a single one of the numerous decisions which does not affect either the body as a whole or one of its members in some form.

The question of whether there is a republican government in Alabama, or in any State in the Union, certainly can not be a question of privilege in any legislative body in this country. What is a republican form of government is determined by the constitution of a State and by an inspection of the constitution; and this body has no right to go outside of that, even if it were made a proper court to determine that question.

Congress by law must guarantee a republican form of government to each State. What is a republican form of government? Everybody understands that. It is a democratic form of government. There are various forms of government. There is the despotic or the autocratic, where one man governs alone; there is the aristocratic, where the wealthy class govern alone; and there is the democratic, where all the people govern, and a republican government is a democratic government, governing through representatives chosen by the people.

Where do you go to ascertain whether the form of government provided by the constitution of a State is republican? By an inspection of the charter which creates the State government, and by nothing else; and you can not go to see whether that has been correctly administered, because it belongs to the government itself to determine that question, and there can be no question about the privilege of this body to determine whether the form of government in Alabama is republican when its constitution upon its face, of which this body must take judicial notice if it has any jurisdiction at all, shows that it is a republican form of government.

Mr. HILL. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to withdraw his motion?

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President; I am waiting for the ruling of the Chair upon this question, after which I shall guide myself accordingly.

Mr. HILL. I submit that the question can not be taken up except by unanimous consent, the gas bill being before the Senate. I want to dispose of the gas bill, so that we may get on with the appropriation bills and expedite the session of the Senate if we can. Therefore I object to taking up the resolution in place of the gas bill, which has the right of way.

Mr. ALLEN. To obviate all question and to relieve the Chair of all embarrassment, I move to take up the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] asked unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the resolution indicated by him. Pending the discussion upon that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asked unanimous consent that the resolution be taken up at a certain time.

Mr. HILL. I objected to that, Mr. President, upon the ground that I wanted other matters, of which I had given notice, first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. The Senator from Nebraska having withdrawn his request and moved to take up for present consideration the resolution indicated by him, that motion the Chair entertains.

Mr. FAULKNER. I merely wish to say that, of course, a motion of that kind means to set aside the appropriation bill at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. I should yield for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. HILL. The motion also sets aside the District of Columbia appropriation bill and other bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is not determining the effect of the motion, but the Chair entertains the motion of the Senator from Nebraska and submits it to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY (when Mr. BLANCHARD'S name was called). My colleague is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], which pair I transfer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and vote "nay."

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). Mr. President, I ask to be excused from voting on this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama is excused.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. He is not present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. Not observing him present, I will not vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I announced a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but that pair has been transferred to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and I therefore desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

Mr. MCBRIDE. My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness in his family. A pair with him has already been announced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. GEAR. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON. I am informed that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I am paired, if present, would vote "nay." I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am authorized to announce that if the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Allen,	Frye,	Morrill,	Peffer.
Chandler,	Gallinger,

NAYS—41.

Allison,	Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Sherman,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Squire,
Baker,	Cullom,	McBride,	Teller,
Bate,	Daniel,	Mills,	Thurston,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest.
Blackburn,	George,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Perkins,	Wetmore,
Caffery,	Hale,	Platt,	Wilson.
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Quay,
Carter,	Harris,	Roach,
Chilton,	Hawley,	Sewell,

NOT VOTING—42.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Martin,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Stewart,
Brice,	Gray,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Brown,	Hill,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Butler,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Call,	Irby,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cannon,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Davis,	Kyle,	Pritchard,	White,
Dubois,	Lodge,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Elkins,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Gear,	Mantle,	Shoup,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire unanimous consent to say a word before this vote passes into history. This vote discloses to me what I have long suspected and that of which I have long been convinced—that there was no sincerity on the Republican side of this Chamber, outside of the chairman of the committee and one or two other Senators, ever to make any inquiry into the condition of affairs in Alabama. I want to give the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of that committee [Mr. CHANDLER], credit for having done all a man could do to bring about an investigation of the condition of affairs in Alabama; but I was quite well convinced, and I am not at all surprised, that when it came to a show down a majority of the Republican party would join the Democrats in defeating this resolution. I have simply urged the matter now that the country might be convinced that when our Republican friends say they are in favor of an honest election and a fair count, that statement does not accord with the truth.

Mr. HILL. I insist upon the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say a word, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Have I the floor, Mr. President?

Mr. HILL. I was going to insist upon the regular order. I do not know for what purpose the Senator from Ohio rises, and I now insist upon the regular order, which is the gas bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Ohio to address the Senate on the matter pending. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Only for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska entirely misapprehends the motive which guided a number of us, perhaps nearly all of us, in voting against taking up his resolution. In the first place, the question can not properly come before the Senate until after the 4th of March next. The next Senate must pass upon the credentials, elections, and qualifications of its own members. This Senate expires on the 4th of next March, if not in terms, in effect; at least one-third of the body changes at that time, and that Senate, when it convenes, is the proper and only tribunal to determine any question which affects the election of a Senator of the United States whose term begins in that Congress. As to the election of members of the other House, we have not the right to inquire at all.

As to general elections in the State of Alabama, whether they are fraudulent or not, we have no right to interfere or examine unless such elections affect the election of members of Congress. Our jurisdiction is confined to the question of whether or not this fraud or alleged fraud enters into the election of a Senator so as to defeat the Senator claiming election, and that only in case of a contest. Unless there is a contest as to the election of a Senator now sitting here, and who claims to be elected to the Senate of the United States, we have no jurisdiction. If an election is challenged, then it is the duty of the Senate, as a matter of course, to inquire into and examine it; but the universal custom and the universal rule from the foundation of our Government has been, if a Senator presents credentials in regular form showing that he has been elected Senator he is sworn in without any question. Then if any allegation is made that he was not fairly elected, that allegation is examined into in the most careful way, and the question is determined for or against the sitting Senator.

I wished to say this much because the Senator from Nebraska seems to treat us as being necessarily an addendum of the Populist party, and I do not want to place myself in that position at any time.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I am satisfied he does not want to state to the Senate that which is incorrect. Upon that provision of the Constitution which requires Congress to guarantee to every State a republican form of government the resolution and the evidence submitted to the committee shows that the State of Alabama is deprived of a republican form of government.

I say the Senator from Ohio, the leader of his party, and the majority of his party in this Chamber have the liberty to refuse to carry out that which was recommended in this case, and therefore to abandon their claim to champion the cause of a pure ballot.

Mr. FAULKNER. I now ask for the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to allow me to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FAULKNER. I dislike to be discourteous, but I really think we ought to proceed with the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. What I wish to say will sound far better now than upon the gas bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from New Hampshire proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is the custom of the Senate to discuss votes after they have been taken. Therefore, I make no apology for saying a few words.

I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska, who has given me credit for being heartily in favor of this resolution, but has made some imputations upon my Republican associates, that I think the vote upon this side of the Chamber was based largely, if not entirely, with the exception of the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who has peculiar reasons for his vote apparently, upon an unwillingness to take up the resolution pending an appropriation bill. I was not aware that the Senator from Nebraska intended to have a yea-and-nay vote taken upon it this morning. I would have advised against taking a vote at this time if the Senator had consulted me as to the wisdom of taking the vote. Nevertheless I voted for the resolution. I believe it should have been adopted, and I think under other circumstances, with no appropriation bill directly before the Senate, a large majority, if not all, the Senators upon this side of the Chamber would vote for the resolution.

As I have said, the object for which I rose was to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska and others to the fact that, in my judgment, the vote upon this side of the Chamber was based largely, if not entirely, upon the fact that Senators on this side are unwilling at this time to displace the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I am willing that the apology shall go for what it is worth.

SALE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has closed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6994) relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] has the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from South Dakota on the pending bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. KYLE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, when the pending bill was under consideration on Saturday last, in the course of the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] upon it, he introduced a correspondence between Mr. Sands and himself, which contained copies of a correspondence between Mr. Sands and the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. MCMILLAN]. Understanding from the statement made by the Senator from South Dakota, and so far as he had read in that correspondence, that Mr. Sands charged that the committee had refused to grant a hearing to the gas company represented by Mr. Sands, I characterized that statement as absolutely false, having not seen the correspondence between the chairman of the committee and Mr. Sands, and drawing the inference from what was said on the floor and the reading of the correspondence, so far as it had gone, and the line of argument of the Senator from South Dakota. I understood that Mr. Sands charged that the committee had refused to give the company that he represented a fair hearing. If the statement had been as I then understood it to be, I would have been fully justified in characterizing the statement as absolutely false, because it would have been false, for upon my own motion I secured to that company the fullest and fairest hearing before the full committee.

But upon examining the correspondence, as I have done this morning, I find that Mr. Sands did not charge that the company he represented had been denied a hearing, but he simply charges that he had requested the chairman to give an additional day's hearing, in order that he might sum up and make a concluding speech or argument upon the testimony that the committee had taken. The correspondence shows that that fact is true. He did make the request, and the chairman of the committee, as I think properly, declined to grant it. The correspondence shows that he did not charge that a full and fair hearing had been refused to the company he represented; that his charge was that he had simply asked for another hearing in order that he might submit an argument upon the facts that the hearings had developed.

The correspondence shows that he did not make the statement I understood him to make, and the statement he made was true. Therefore I deem it due to myself, due to common justice, that I make this statement, because the statement I made under a misapprehension did Mr. Sands an injustice from which I deem it my duty to relieve him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, if the Senator from South Dakota yields.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire merely to inquire of the honorable Senator from Tennessee if it is not likewise a fact that the Committee on the District of Columbia had substantially agreed to report the bill adversely in which Mr. Sands was interested when the declination was made to hear his final argument.

Mr. HARRIS. My recollection is that it was.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I had almost closed my remarks upon last Saturday when I yielded the floor to the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. The particular question then under consideration was the probable cost of gas in the District of Columbia. As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, I feel that justice should be done to this corporation, as justice should be done to all individuals who are engaged in business enterprises. I am willing to grant them a reasonable and just dividend upon their investment, but I do not think exorbitant charges should be made upon the people of the District.

The whole question, as I stated, the location of the city and the cost of materials being taken into consideration, is whether gas can be produced at a cheaper rate than $1.15 per thousand feet. My argument all the way through has been that it can be produced at a less figure. Much may turn upon the kind and quality of gas produced by the company. I think it is universally conceded by gas companies that the cost of producing what is called water gas is very much less than the cost of producing coal gas. The company established in Washington is making, I believe, two-thirds water gas and one-third coal gas, according to the report of the House committee in 1894. The term "water gas" may probably not be understood by all. The process in Washington is what is called the Wilkinson process. It consists in passing steam through a generator containing limestone, fire brick, or similar material highly heated, thereby decomposing the steam and forming hydrogen gas, which gives heat, but very little light. Coal oil or naphtha is then added to the hydrogen gas and the compound heated to make it a fixed gas. The carbon added in the form of crude oil or naphtha gives color to the flame and therefore light.

It is a very simple process and can be understood by anyone.

The other kind of gas, coal gas produced by the District company, is the old-fashioned gas, as I understand it, produced from the burning of coal. The question is whether by this process they can make gas as cheaply as they can in other cities. On this point I think there can be little question, as Washington is not located far from the coal fields, and the residuals here are the same as the residuals in any other city and command as good prices in the market. I have before me a report of the Secretary of the Interior in which he gives the price per ton of coal for the various years from 1886 to 1893 paid by the Washington Gas Light Company. The average price per ton June 10, 1886, was $4.08¾; August 3, 1886, $4.275 per ton; May 10, 1887, $4.13½ per ton; May 31, 1888, $3.979; May 31, 1889, $4.094; May 15, 1890, $4.087; May 21, 1891, $4.124; May 17, 1892, $4.24½; May 15, 1893, $3.97 53 per ton.

Mr. President, I can not see, comparing the cost of materials in Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cleveland, and Chicago, that there is a very great difference on the whole; certainly not enough to account for the difference in the prices charged for gas. The cost of gas, from the figures of experts which I gave on Saturday, has been brought down to a minimum; and the reports, mind you, were made in 1886, when the cost of producing gas was a great deal more than it is at the present time. When the Spooner investigation was made water gas was a new thing. It was argued by many then that it was more expensive to make than coal gas. But the price of water gas at that time was very inconsiderable as compared with the price charged by the Washington Gas Light Company now.

I introduced in evidence a Mr. Vanderpoel, who, I believe, was the engineer in charge of the Newark Gas Company, at Newark, N. J., giving the cost at 35.8 cents placed in the holder in that city, and he thought it could be placed in the holder in the city of Washington just as cheaply as it could there. Adding what the Senate committee thought was a very reasonable price for the cost of distribution, 18 cents per thousand, it would make the cost of gas about 53 cents per thousand in the city of Washington. But the cost of distribution, being about 40 per cent of the cost of production, would make the actual cost of gas in the District of Columbia about 49 cents and a fraction. This is not the statement of a theorist not well informed, but a man acknowledged to be a practical expert by the Washington Gas Light Company, and who, I believe, were instrumental in bringing him before the Spooner committee in 1886.

I introduced also the report of a prominent expert in Great Britain, Mr. G. W. Stevenson, who has written a book touching upon the subject, which was reviewed in 1879 approvingly by the gas journals of Great Britain. He estimates the cost of production and distribution in England to be 51 cents per thousand, a difference, you see, of about 3 cents per thousand in favor of Great Britain, and both of them come down to a great deal less than one-half of the price charged for gas in the District of Columbia.

But, Mr. President, in summing up this argument I wish to embody in my remarks concisely the conclusions of the investigating committee of 1886, which I believe is the most thorough investigation that has ever been made by Congress. They summoned experts and went into the subject as carefully as it was possible to do. The report is a very voluminous one, giving the hearings in full, and I believe that if the members of the Senate were to read this testimony carefully they would be convinced, as were Mr. Spooner and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], that the price charged by the Washington Gas Light Company is exorbitant and that some steps should be taken to secure a reduction in the price of gas in the District. On page 5 of the report the chairman states:

From all that the committee has been able to learn of the cost of gas in this city, it believes it safe to say that $1 per thousand cubic feet will afford to this company a dividend on its capital stock which will at no time fall below 7 per cent per annum.

Some well-informed persons think 20 per cent.

I turn again to page 8 of the same report, and I find very strong recommendations to Congress:

Thus it will be observed—

Says Mr. Spooner—

that Mr. Vanderpoel, a coal-gas expert, speaking to gas experts in 1879, figured the net cost of pure coal gas per thousand cubic feet at 35.8 cents. He estimated coal at $5.50 a ton—

And, mark you, the average price, as I read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, is about $4 per ton—

while the statement before the committee is that in Washington the gas coal purchased by this company—

That is, the Washington Gas Light Company—

last year was $3.25 a ton, and this year will be $4.10 a ton, a great difference in favor of this company. The price of residuals is figured a little lower by Mr. Vanderpoel than the proof shows they sell at in Washington.

Then coming on down a little further:

It is, in the opinion of the committee, all things considered, certainly a generous concession to this company to assume that 35.8 cents, the net cost in 1879, as found by Mr. Vanderpoel, would at least cover the net cost for the same item in Washington to-day.

Then on page 9 I find this statement:

We doubt much if the fair cost of distribution here is 28.8 cents per 1,000 cubic feet—

This figure was named by a member of the company, I believe—

Colonel McCarty testifies that the usual cost is 18 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. Take it, however, for the purpose of the argument, as the company gives it, at 28 cents. This added to the 35.8 cents cost in the holder, calculated in 1879 on the basis of coal at $5.50, would make the actual cost per 1,000 cubic feet of coal gas of requisite candlepower 64.6 cents in Washington.

The committee is not now prepared to believe, with due respect to the Washington Gas Light Company, that the fair cost per 1,000 cubic feet of gas in Washington is above this sum—

That is, 64 cents per thousand cubic feet as the cost of production and distribution in the city of Washington—

On the contrary, we think that if we err it is considerably in favor of the company.

This is no random statement. It is the report of ex-Senator Spooner, known to all of us, a man who commanded respect for his fairness in the consideration of such problems. We also have the testimony right in the same line of Mr. McIlhenny, who was president of the company at that time, that they could sell gas at $1 per thousand feet and make 15 cents per thousand. I think that is quite a remarkable statement and is worthy of being read here. On page 9 of the committee's report, in reply to a question put by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], Mr. McIlhenny says:

Mr. MCILHENNY. If we sold the gas for a dollar we should make about 15 cents a thousand on it.

His figure was for the year 1886, since which time we all know the price has been reduced considerably in the United States. Fifteen cents a thousand is about 17 per cent upon the cost of production, which is a very fine dividend.

The matter drifted along for several years and no investigation was made. Just why I can not tell. In 1894 a committee was appointed in the House of Representatives for the purpose of investigating the question. They went very carefully into the matter and came to the same conclusion. Mr. Heard says in his report, page 5:

But after a careful examination into the financial condition of the Washington Gas Light Company, as shown by the statement made by its president and secretary before your committee, covering its business operations for several years past, an examination of witnesses as to cost of making and supplying gas, we conclude that it is practicable for said company to furnish gas of the quality now being supplied to the public at $1 per 1,000 cubic feet, net, and pay a reasonable profit on the capital invested in the business.

This is the second committee which has advised the Senate in behalf of one-dollar gas.

DIVIDENDS DECLARED.

As I said, I am willing that this company shall have a fair, just, and reasonable dividend; but I think if anybody will take up the reports for the past few years he can not help being convinced that the dividends have been exorbitant. The press of this city have been making a noble effort in behalf of cheaper gas for the District. I have introduced extracts from those papers. I might read others with reference to the declaration of dividends, but I come now directly to the report of Mr. Spooner, because I wish all to know that what I read is from an official source.

On page 3 of Mr. Spooner's report I find these words:

The following is believed to be a reasonably accurate summary of the dividends paid by the company since its organization: It paid 6 per cent in 1850. In 1851 and 1852 no dividends were paid. In 1853 it paid 8½ per cent on $350,000 capital; in 1855 it paid 10 per cent on $500,000 capital; in 1856, 10 per cent; 1857, 10 per cent; 1858, 10 per cent; 1859, 10 per cent; 1860, 10 per cent; 1861, 10 per cent; 1862, 10 per cent, and in 1863, 10 per cent. It is alleged that no dividends were paid in 1864 or 1865. Whether this is true or not we can not tell. In February, 1866, 5 per cent was paid on $500,000, and in August 5 per cent was paid on $1,000,000. In 1867 10 per cent was paid; in 1868, 10 per cent; in 1869, 20 per cent was paid on $1,000,000; in 1870, 10 per cent; in 1871, 15 per cent; in 1872, 15 per cent; in 1873, 15 per cent; in 1874, 55 per cent; in 1875, 20 per cent; in 1876, 65 per cent; in 1877, 15 per cent; in 1878, 15 per cent; in 1879, 15 per cent, and in 1880, 15 per cent.

Here we have thirty-one years of dividends, and the average, when it is all put together, is 16.8 per cent on the capital invested. I have the testimony covering the period for the years 1881 to 1886. On page 24 of the hearing there are these words:

In the meantime the capital stock has been increased from $500,000 to $2,000,000, and on this watered stock for the past five years—

That is, from 1881 to 1886—

the dividends have amounted, according to their own sworn statement, to almost 100 per cent—to 95 per cent.

In other words, they have taken from the public and paid out in dividends in the last five years $2,000,000, according to that. That is an annual average of 18¾ per cent, at a time, too, when the Government could get all the money it needed at 3 per cent.

In addition to this it has expended for fixtures, including a plant for making water gas, $304,942.58; has paid for land that it does not use $42,136.35, and has cash on hand $103,189.17, $25,000 of which is in Government 4-per-cent bonds, drawing interest, or a total of $540,268.10. That is in the sworn statement presented in answer to Senator Van Wyck's resolution.

This gives the gas company during these long years sixteen and a fraction per cent for thirty-one years and eighteen and a fraction per cent from 1881 to 1886. Since then I have not the figures before me, but I understand the dividends have been very large. I have seen a communication in the Star that the company declared a dividend in 1895 of 30 per cent, 10 per cent at one time and subsequently an additional dividend of 20 per cent.

In view of this, in view of the fact that the stock has gone from $20, the par value of the shares, to $50 at one time, though now about forty-four dollars and a fraction per share, which indicates in a measure the dividends that are declared upon the stock, I conclude that the charges made by the Washington Gas Light Company are exorbitant and that a reduction to $1 would still afford them a just and fair income.

These earnings, as indicated by the reports, are enormous. They are only equaled perhaps by the dividends declared by the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company. I do not know of any other corporation in the District of Columbia or anywhere else in the United States, unless it be other gas companies, that declare such enormous dividends, and I can not understand how any Senator upon the floor, who feels it his duty to defend the interests of the District over which we preside, can stand here and argue against the reduction of gas to $1 a thousand cubic feet. The people of the District have investigated the matter very carefully and understand that it can be produced for less than a dollar a thousand, and though Senators upon the floor here might possibly be elected United States Senators by advocating such a proposition, if we had home government in the District of Columbia they could not be elected to the board of aldermen.

We do not know yet even the dividends that have been declared. Some years have been passed over, and we can only surmise. We do understand from the sworn statements of Mr. Bailey and others that the books were destroyed which covered the expense account of the company from 1848 to 1866.

Now, Mr. President, just a word in regard to street lamps. Washington has 6,138 street lamps, which cost the city $20.50 per lamp per year, burning 3,000 hours, according to the report of the Commissioners. New York furnishes the same street lamps for from $12 to $17 per lamp per year, burning from 2,920 to 4,000 hours, showing a striking contrast between New York and the city of Washington.

OBJECTIONS TO THE COMPROMISE BILL.

The question with many is, Why not accept the present compromise bill? I would be glad to accept some compromise. I would be glad to accept the compromise that is offered to us by the bill as it came from the House, namely, $1. Though I should like very much to see gas in the District of Columbia come down to 75 cents, and at that figure I think the company would make a very reasonable profit, I am opposed to this bill, which makes some reduction, because of the continuation of the contract over a period of five years.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator permit me? There is no provision for a contract unless the Commissioners deem it in the interest of the city. It is not obligatory at all.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that the bill provides for gas at $1.15 per thousand feet, with a sliding scale for five years.

Mr. FAULKNER. I thought the Senator spoke of a provision for a five-years contract.

Mr. KYLE. The bill allows them to make a contract.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no contract at all. We fix it and Congress can repeal it. By the last provision in the bill Congress at any session, if it deems proper, may amend, modify, or repeal the law.

Mr. KYLE. Does not the Senator know how difficult it is to get a bill or any portion of it repealed? We want one-dollar gas to start with and no contract.

It is proposed that the Washington Gas Light Company shall begin with $1.15 per thousand cubic feet for the first year until July 1, 1898, and then $1.10 from that time to 1900, and from 1900 to 1901 it is not to exceed $1 per thousand cubic feet, and so as to the continuation of the contract with the Georgetown Gas Light Company. They provide also, I believe, that the company can make a contract for lighting the streets for a period of five years. They also provide for an increase of the capital stock to a certain amount. These provisions, Mr. President, I am not satisfied with, and the quality of the gas is not improved in my judgment. A question was raised on Saturday as to the burner test, that by the present bill they expect to make the quality better than it was before, because it raises it from 16 candlepower to 24 candlepower. It is provided in the bill that—

> The illuminating power of the gas furnished by any gaslight company, person, or persons in the District of Columbia shall be equal to 24 candles by the Bunsen photometer, using the Bray slit union burner No. 7, consuming 5 cubic feet of gas per hour.

In other words, changing from the Argand burner, which has formerly been used, to the Bray flat-flame test. I have not had very much experience in regard to those things, but I have the testimony of Mr. William C. Dodge here in the District of Columbia, who is one of the best experts in the line of invention, I presume, whom we have in the country. He makes the statement that there is no practical increase in the quality of the gas at 24 candlepower as tested by the Bray process. They get no more result as far as the light is concerned.

That calls up the question put by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. He maintained that the quality of the gas would be improved by the provisions of this bill.

There is no law in the States of the United States, I believe, as regards the burner test, but the whole matter is left to the contract which is made by a private company with the particular city. The burner ordinarily used, I believe, is the Bray flat burner, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. It was stated by the Senator that English gas was tested by the flat flame, the same as in this country. I have investigated the matter since last Saturday, and I find that in England they formerly used the same burner used in the District of Columbia, the Argand round-flame burner test of 15 holes, but that by act of Parliament they have changed that and now use the Argand burner, but with 24 holes instead of 15.

Mr. FAULKNER. The only difference, I will state in correction of the Senator, is that the Argand burner is used for illuminating gas which does not go over 20 candlepower, and for all gas over 20 candlepower the flat-flame burner is used.

Mr. KYLE. The candlepower of gas in the list of English cities which I read last Saturday was measured by the Argand burner of 24 holes. The contention is that there is a very great difference between the Argand round-flame burner test and the Bray flat test, as indicated in the bill. In other words, we claim that the Washington gas, which, tested by the Argand round burner, is about 19 candlepower, if tested by the Bray flat-flame burner would be about 8 candlepower more. So that we gain nothing. Substantiating this I have the testimony of Mr. McIlhenny:

> In New York the law gives the inspector the right to use the burner best adapted to the quality of the gas and the kind of gas. Hence he uses a plain flame burner. That makes a very thin, flat flame, which is presented sidewise to the disk of the photometer. Our burner is an Argand burner, and only a certain amount of radius can be presented to the disk, and then the glass over it excludes perhaps 16 or 17 per cent of the light. As I say, I got Professor Love to come down here and asked him to bring the same burners that he tested the New York gas with, so that he might test our gas with the same burners. He tested our gas first with the lawful burner here, the Argand burner, and made it about the same as the inspector does, about 17 candles and a fraction that day, I think. He afterwards tested it with the New York burner, the Empire burner, and he made it 25 candlepower.

There is a difference, you see, there of 8 candlepower.

> So as compared with the New York gas, our gas would be about equal to theirs. We have Professor Love's certificate to that effect.

Then over on page 72 I find corroborative testimony:

> For very rich gas they use a very thin plate burner. In the photometer there is a disk that slides on the bar that is transparent. When that disk is moved to where both lights are equal, or this transparent substance shows no difference, then the light at that point is considered equal.

The candle test is 16 wax candles, according to the old law.

> With our system, the Argand burner, we use, of course, a glass with it, and that obstructs the light about 16 per cent; and then the burner is round, and the surface behind it is dead black and a great absorbent of light, as coal would be of heat. The round surface of this burner is presented to the disk; but with the flat-flame burner you stand right out flat against the disk and make it as wide as you can and thin as you can, because the thinner you make it the more oxygen you consume and the more perfect combustion you get. Consequently you get a great deal better illuminating result in that way than you can get from the Argand burner with the same quality of gas. Our gas when tested with this flat-flame burner—> showed a difference of 8 candles. * * *

That is, Washington gas—

>
> Mr. MCILHENNY. If we had the privilege of testing by some burners we could make it 24 candles.

Then I have the testimony given before the House committee on February 12, 1896. This pamphlet is published by the Washington Gas Light Company.

Mr. Leech, the manager, says:

> In the city of New York, where they rate the gas at 23 candles, they use a flat-flame burner. It has been stated here and repeated that the candlepower in New York is 26 or 28. When Mr. Love, the expert from the city of New York, came here, he found that the gas rated here at 18 candles would be rated by his standard at about 26.4 candles. He was the gas inspector for the city of New York. When you have gas here rated at 19 candles, which is about the usual standard of it, the usual quality of it, you will find that the gas according to the New York rating is about 27 or 28 candles.

Now, this seems to me abundant testimony upon the question as to whether we are to get better gas under the present bill or not. The bill as you read it seems to furnish the people of the District better gas, and in a measure to compensate for the high price. They are mounting at one jump from 19 candlepower to 24 candlepower, a difference of about 5 or 6 candlepower. But from the evidence there is a difference between the Argand round-flame burner and the Bray flat-flame burner test of about 8 candlepower, and when you subtract you will find we get no better gas, but probably a little less candlepower, than they had under the old system.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to close this discussion.

It is shown, I think, by the facts set forth, that the charge for gas in the District of Columbia is clearly exorbitant, and that a large profit will accrue to the company by one-dollar gas, as provided in the House bill.

The complaints of the people are well founded, and there is good reason in the general demand for municipal ownership of this plant.

Washington is not an out-of-the-way place, but conveniently near the great sources of material supply, and there is no valid reason why gas should be higher than in Philadelphia and similar cities. The president of the Washington Gas Light Company admitted in 1886 that by selling gas at $1 they can make 15 cents per 1,000 feet. The testimony of the best American experts, approved by the gas companies, prove that gas can be furnished to the consumer for a fraction under 50 cents per thousand.

The testimony of experts in England, approved by the gas journals, prove that gas in that country can be delivered to the consumer for 51 cents per 1,000 feet.

Based on such testimony, the reports of the investigating committee in 1886 and of the House committee in 1894 are very conservative in recommending one-dollar gas. We have had this question before us for years, Mr. President, and still nothing is done. Citizens daily and yearly make their complaints, and yet we do not act. In my judgment the Senate amendment to the House bill should not be adopted. The bill as it came from the House is extremely liberal to the Washington Gas Light Company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, without objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is a matter of regret to me that in the discussion of the very important bill that is now before the Senate the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and who perhaps is better qualified to discuss the matter than any other member of the committee, is necessarily absent from the Senate Chamber.

The Committee on the District of Columbia is composed of 13 honorable Senators representing sovereign States of the American Union. Their names are: Senator MCMILLAN, of Michigan; Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire; Senator HANSBROUGH, of North Dakota; Senator PROCTOR, of Vermont; Senator PRITCHARD, of North Carolina; Senator BAKER, of Kansas; Senator WETMORE, of Rhode Island; Senator HARRIS, of Tennessee; Senator FAULKNER, of West Virginia; Senator GIBSON, of Maryland; Senator SMITH, of New Jersey; Senator MARTIN, of Virginia, and Senator BACON, of Georgia.

Mr. President, with one possible exception, that of the Senator from New Hampshire, the committee is certainly composed of intelligent, honorable, and high-minded men whose findings are entitled to the fair and unprejudiced consideration of their colleagues in this body. That committee spend at least one-half of their time in the consideration of questions that in the other cities of the Union are largely attended to by boards of aldermen or the common council. They are expected to regulate the practice of medicine, the charges for gas, for electric lighting, for telephone service; to recommend legislation concerning street railroads, steam railroads, markets, bridges, and a great variety of other things, including the extension of streets, the building of sewers, the opening of alleys, etc.

In the present Congress that committee has had under consideration all these questions, and has given numerous hearings to all the parties in interest. Especially has the committee patiently listened to all the parties who appeared before them and asked to be heard on the bill relating to gas. The citizens' committee appeared in opposition to the existing gaslight company and were heard at length; the Washington Gas Light Company was also heard through their attorneys, and the representatives of a new company which sought to secure a charter were repeatedly before the committee and made lengthy arguments. Everbody was treated courteously, and certainly no man or interest has any right to complain of the treatment accorded by the committee.

And yet, notwithstanding all this, on Saturday last the Senator from South Dakota arraigned the committee for dereliction of duty and plainly intimated that the action of the committee was influenced by lobbyists, who, he said, are swarming around the Capitol. It was an extraordinary and uncalled-for accusation, which I resented at the time, and concerning which I will add a word at the proper time to-day.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Does the Senator know of any language which I used accusing the committee of being affected by lobbyists?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Senator suggested that lobbyists were about the Capitol, and that some undue influence was being exerted in reference to this matter.

Mr. KYLE. I did not refer to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as this matter has only passed beyond the hands of the committee, and has not been acted upon by the Senate, I can not for the life of me understand who were influenced unless it was the Committee on the District of Columbia. No vote has been taken in the Senate on the question. Hence the Senator's accusation could not be applied to the Senate, but must be applied to the committee of the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. I referred in my remarks to other persons outside of the District Committee. A member of Congress who was not on the District Committee of either House told me about a certain person approaching him, not seeking to bribe him at all in voting, but asking him to use his influence against dollar gas. But I do not know a man who has approached any member of the District Committee—not one. I have never heard of anything of the kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not very important. I have no anxiety concerning myself so far as lobbyists are concerned, and I simply state the fact that the Senator did make the broad statement that lobbyists were about the corridors of the Capitol.

Mr. KYLE. And they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. And inasmuch as this question, as I said before, is on the Calendar of the Senate, I could not for the life of me understand who had been influenced had it not been the committee that reported the bill.

Mr. President, in the discussion of the bill the honorable Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] entertained us on Saturday with a lengthy discussion of Socialism and Populism. I do not think that that discussion has very much to do with the practical question that is before this body for consideration and for settlement to-day. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] interrupted the Senator from South Dakota to deliver a panegyric on the principles of the Populist party, in which he gave the Senate and I presume the country to understand that the Populist party, when it comes into power in this country, is going to remedy all the evils that the body politic is suffering from to-day; that it is going to fix the price of gas, I presume, in every municipality in the United States; and that it is going to lift the burdens from the shoulders of the people that have been imposed upon them by the great Republican party and the great Democratic party of this country.

Mr. President, I do not expect to live to see that time. I do not expect to live to see the time when the people will not have burdens upon them, and when even the Congress of the United States may be somewhat at a difficulty in relieving those burdens and giving the people every right that possibly they can demand under the Constitution and the laws of the country.

I think we are doing in the matter of legislation for the District of Columbia the best that can be asked of us. It is a peculiar, an anomalous, an extraordinary, an un-American government under which the people of the District of Columbia are living to-day. This committee of ours, burdened with other duties, coming here to represent their own constituencies and their own constituents, have this mass of business thrust upon them, and it is demanded of them that they shall give the most careful consideration to every question that comes before that great committee, and which they are trying to the utmost of their abilities to do from week to week and day to day. The Senator from South Dakota also entertained us with a discussion of the municipal ownership of corporations, including gas-light plants. That question is not before the Senate in any form. There is no proposition before Congress to-day that the Government shall buy the Washington Gas Light Company, and hence it is idle for us to waste time in discussing the question whether it would be best, all things considered, for the Government to own this plant or to allow it to remain in the hands of private parties, who to-day control the stock and have paid their money into that great corporation. I am not quite sure that the Senator from South Dakota, if the proposition were presented to-day, would vote in favor of the Government purchasing the Washington Gas Light Company.

Mr. KYLE. Indeed I would, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. He would, Mr. President; and yet upon every proposition that has come before the Senate to put sewers in the District of Columbia to save the health and lives of the people the Senator has always voted against issuing bonds for the purpose of raising money to secure those improvements.

Mr. KYLE. For the purpose of helping out real estate men in the suburbs.

Mr. GALLINGER. He and his colleagues of the Populist party have been consistent in this matter; now, here is a great corporation, owning property that has cost them $4,000,000. If the Government is to own that property, the Government must raise $4,000,000 to pay for that property, and it can only be done by the issuance of bonds. So, I say, if this proposition to-day were before the Senate of the United States, the Senator from South Dakota, if he desires to have his record remain consistent, would cast his vote against that proposition.

Now let us turn to the provisions of the bill and see what they are. The Committee on the District of Columbia had before it a bill that proposed to reduce the price of gas to the people of the District of Columbia to $1 per 1,000 feet. I think I can safely say that every member of that committee was as anxious as the Senator from South Dakota to give the people of the District of Columbia the greatest degree of relief that it could consistently do and yet be just to the men who have invested their money in this plant and who must look to dividends to pay them for the investment they have made. The committee gave very careful attention to the bill. They spent many weary hours in its consideration. It was up before them day after day and week after week, and they neglected their other duties in their great desire to do what was right in this matter and to report a bill that could pass the Senate of the United States and that, at the same time, would give as great a degree of relief to the people as was consistent with the other interests involved. After very lengthy consideration and hearings, they reported a provision, the first section of which, relating to the Washington Gas Light Company, is that gas shall be furnished at a rate not exceeding $1.15 per thousand cubic feet until July 1, 1898; at a rate not exceeding $1.10 per thousand cubic feet from July 1, 1898, until July 1, 1900; at a rate not exceeding $1.05 per thousand cubic feet from July 1, 1900, until July 1, 1901; after which last-named date the rate shall not exceed $1 per thousand cubic feet.

It is proposed to decrease the earnings of the Washington Gas Light Company for the first two years from July 1, 1896, at the rate of about $90,000 per year. It is proposed to decrease its earnings for the next two years at the rate of about $135,000; for the next year at the rate of $180,000 per year, and after that time the decrease over their present earnings will be $200,000 per year under the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. President, I think it is desirable in the discussion of this question that we should go to the record and find out if we can whether the committee have done the best they could under the circumstances and have made wise recommendations to the Senate of the United States. I turn to page 32 of the recent hearing before that committee and I find there quotations from Brown's Directory for 1894, which is a recognized authority upon the subject of gas plants in the United States. From that I discover the fact that in Illinois there are 53 gas companies. Out of this number 4 sell gas at $1, 8 at $1.15, 1 at $1.20, and 42 at from $1.25 upward, per 1,000 cubic feet.

Indiana has 38 companies, 32 of which sell for over and only 5 below $1.25 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Maine has 11 companies, all selling from $1.50 upward.

Massachusetts has 72 companies; only 4 sell below $1.25.

Michigan has 36 companies; only 3 sell below $1.26¼, including Detroit, which sells gas for $1.

Missouri has 26 companies, only 4 selling below $1.50, the remainder for $1.50 and above.

New Jersey has 48 companies; only 2 as low as $1.25.

New York has 117 companies, only 7 below $1.25, 4 of which are in Buffalo, at $1 per 1,000.

Ohio has 75 companies; only 9 report less than $1.20.

Rhode Island has 7 companies; only 1—Providence—as low as $1.20.

Pennsylvania has 106 companies; 12 report at $1, 5 at $1.10, 3 at $1.20, and 86 at $1.25 and upward.

Virginia has 12 companies, 5 of which are owned by the cities. Of these 5 Richmond, Charlottesville, and Danville sell at $1 per 1,000 cubic feet, Alexandria at $1.45, and Fredericksburg at $1.50. Only 1 of the other 7 sell as low as $1.25.

It is a fact that I might stop and enumerate almost every city in the American Union——

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow a question at this point?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PEFFER. Has the Senator any returns from gaslight plants owned by cities?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] very learnedly and leangthily elucidated that question. I must confess that I have not taken the pains to get the exact data concerning the matter.

Mr. PEFFER. I only wanted to know what is the rate at which gas is furnished by such plants.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am willing that the testimony the Senator from South Dakota gave on that question should for the present stand, because, as I before said, we are not now considering the question of municipal ownership of gas companies. When we come to that, we will endeavor to discuss it intelligently on both sides of the question.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there any return in the book to which the Senator refers as to the dividends declared by these companies?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is not, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Then allow me another question. The committee in coming to a conclusion as to what ought to be the proper charges for gas by the company so as to allow them reasonable dividends must have had in their minds some particular rate of dividends which they regarded as reasonable for the company to declare. What dividend was that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that my recollection of that matter is that, inasmuch as it is an acknowledged fact that the manufacture of gas is an extra hazardous business, and they can not get any insurance on their property in any city in this Union, it is generally conceded that somewhere from 8 to 10 per cent dividend is a very fair dividend on the capital stock invested in gas plants.

Mr. GEORGE. From 8 to 10 per cent?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is conceded. But I will show the Senator before I get through that the stockholders of the Washington Gas Light Company can not hope for any such dividend as that under the bill the committee has reported to the Senate and which they hope the Senate will pass.

I was about to say, when interrupted, that if I should go through every State in the American Union the same condition of facts would be found; that the proportion of gaslight companies which are furnishing gas to-day at a price less than $1.25 per thousand cubic feet is absolutely infinitesimal as compared to the entire number. In my own city, where we have agitated the gas question for a considerable length of time, our people are felicitating themselves to-day, and the newspapers are felicitating the people of that city, that the gaslight company has recently made a reduction from $1.80 to $1.50 per thousand cubic feet; and I understand that at that rate the stockholders in that company are not getting enormous dividends, but are getting a fair return upon the money they have invested in the extra hazardous business of the manufacture of gas.

There are a great many elements entering into the manufacture of gas. It is a question, too, that much rhetoric can be employed in discussing. If we simply listen to the clamor of some unthinking people on the outside, almost any Senator could grow eloquent in his defense of the rights of the dear people, and in denunciation of the greedy and outrageous imposition of this great corporate power, as it is represented by these outside parties; but we ought to consider practical things in this discussion. I say there are a great many elements entering into the question of the cost of gas. Coal is the chief element of cost; and while I at first could not understand why the people of Washington should have to pay more for coal than the people of most other cities of the Union, I was driven to the conclusion, in view of the testimony which was presented to the committee and which was not controverted, that that was an actual fact, and that this gas company is laboring under the burden of paying a larger price for its coal than is paid in almost all other American cities. For that reason this company should have some degree of consideration in the legislation of Congress. It was shown to us that in Pittsburg coal was bought for $1 a ton; in Detroit for $1.75; in Cleveland, Ohio, for $2; in Allegheny, Pa., for 80 cents; in Cincinnati, Ohio, for $1.25; in Providence, R. I., for $3.25; while in the city of Washington this company pays $3.90 for every ton of coal it uses in the manufacture of gas.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to have the Senator state if that is not the cheapest price they have ever paid, as reported by the company to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand it to be the very cheapest price they have ever been able to secure coal for, and that ought to be taken into consideration by Senators in discussing this question and in casting their votes upon this important matter.

Mr. President, there is one other thing in that same connection, a matter which I could not understand until the testimony was given before us; and if Senators will take the trouble to go through the testimony they will find that I very closely interrogated the gentlemen before the committee on all these points. It was made to appear to the committee that in this city the residuals sell for very much less than they do in any other city of the country. This is not a manufacturing city, and in cities where they have large manufacturing establishments everything in the nature of residuals of a gas plant is sold readily at a very good price, while in the city of Washington the coke and other residuals from the manufacture of gas are practically given away.

I have not a particle of undue sympathy for the Washington Gas Light Company; I do not know a man connected with it, except one gentleman from my own State, who happens to have a little stock in that company, a resident of the city of Washington, but it is well enough for us to remember that the Washington Gas Light Company has recently made a contract for two years for the single article of naphtha, and that they are to pay $13,000 a year more than they have heretofore paid for that one single article consumed in the manufacture of gas.

Mr. FAULKNER. Thirty-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to be corrected. It was merely a matter of recollection on my part, and I thought I would state it low enough.

Very much more might be said along this same line, but as I do not care to weary the Senate and I am very anxious to get a vote on this bill, I will merely call attention for a moment to the matter of burners, concerning which the Senator from South Dakota, who possesses a great deal of information and possibly an equal amount of misinformation upon the gas question, entertained the Senate a moment ago. The Senator read from Mr. Love, a New York expert, in reference to the change of burner from the old-fashioned English Argand burner to the Bray slit burner, which it is proposed to adopt if this bill becomes a law. Mr. Love was before the committee only a few weeks ago and was interrogated. Senator MCMILLAN asked him:

> You do not approve of this English Parliamentary burner?
> Mr. LOVE. No; that burner is an antique.

Mr. Love went on to say that the burner which was provided for in the bill which came over from the House of Representatives was not used in any city in the United States; that it was an old-fashioned English burner that had practically gone out of use in the British Empire itself.

Senator MCMILLAN. Then you would strike out this provision?
Mr. LOVE. Yes. In the first place, no consumer can get the English Parliamentary standard Argand burner; and you should place in the hands of the consumer just such a burner as the inspector uses.
Senator FAULKNER. So that the test in his house would be the same as the test made by the inspector?
Mr. LOVE. So that he can get just as much candlepower as the inspector, and if he does not it is his own fault.
Senator BAKER. Do you say that with the higher candlepower there is more liability of smoke?
Mr. LOVE. Yes, sir.
Senator BAKER. If you get above 27 candlepower there is liability of smoking?
Mr. LOVE. Yes, sir.

Mr. Love went on to say that in New York they had 26 candlepower, and he thought 24 candlepower or 25 candlepower was a better candlepower than 26 candlepower, because there was no danger of smoking, and, as he said, destroying the ceilings and walls of the homes of Washington.

Senator GALLINGER. How would it do to raise it to 26, the point at which you have it in New York?
Mr. LOVE. The difficulty about that would be that the average of 26 is made up by taking an average of a great number of water gases and of very little coal gas. In Washington you have a gas which is composed of one-third coal gas. I think you would find that, on the whole, 24 or 25 candle gas, with a flat-flame burner, would be more satisfactory than 26-candle gas.

And yet we put this bill 26 candlepower, because we wanted to compel the Washington Gas Light Company to give the people of this city as good gas as is made anywhere in the country.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. I was not complaining in my remarks of the test of 26 candlepower by the Bray flat burner. I think if they use the Bray flat burner they will not give any better gas than 19 candlepower measured by the old-fashioned Argand burner. It means about the same sort of gas, but the pretension on the part of the company and of the committee of giving us better gas because it is 25 or 26 burner I think is without foundation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not heard of any such pretension; certainly I have not made it. But let us continue with Mr. Love, whom the Senator from South Dakota quotes so approvingly:

Senator BAKER. What do you say about what the candlepower should be?
Mr. LOVE. I have tested it for two weeks, and I think the average would be about 24½ by that burner.
Senator FAULKNER. Throwing out of consideration the interests of this company, what, in your judgment, would be the best candlepower, give the best illumination, and give the best satisfaction with a gas manufactured of one-third coal and two-thirds water?
Mr. LOVE. I should say 24 candlepower by a Bray burner.
Senator GALLINGER. That would be just what we have now?
Mr. LOVE. Just about what you have now. You must bear in mind that the company must carry the power a margin above that. It will have to run it up to 25.
Senator GALLINGER. You think that would give the best results?
Mr. LOVE. It would not give as much light as a 30-candle gas, but with a 30-candle gas the consumer would be very much annoyed with smoke. I think the best practical results would be obtained by 24 or 25 candle gas.

* * * * * * *

Senator FAULKNER. I would like to know why they could not make as good gas in Washington as they do in New York. The proposition here is to give us 24 candlepower by that burner.
Mr. LOVE. As I have already stated, the average in New York for the first two months of this year was 26 candles. You would get perhaps 25 candles, and no man on earth can tell the difference between the two in the illumination.
Senator FAULKNER. That would give a good, practical light?
Mr. LOVE. It would give a good light. In addition to that, you have a very rigid test here. Outside of New York, I do not know of any city where they have so rigid a test. In Boston they do not make more than 52 tests a year, a once-a-week test; but in Washington you have a daily test, the same as we have in New York.

And again, it is worth while to remind the Senate that the committee put in the bill 26 candlepower—a higher test than the Senator's expert advised.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota dwelt with a great deal of emphasis on the relative price for street lamps paid in the city of Washington and other cities of the country. I have before me a report made in the Fifty-third Congress, giving the price for street lamps in the several cities of the country, or in the leading cities of the country, those containing a population of over 200,000. I wish I might have had time to have looked up a late report on this subject, if one exists, as we want the best and latest obtainable information. The record shows that in Milwaukee they charge $32 for each street gas lamp; in San Francisco they charge $36; in Boston it is sold by the thousand; in Baltimore, $28.25; in St. Louis, $37; in Chicago, $20; in Brooklyn, $29.93; in New York, $18.41; and in Washington, $21.50.

So that even on that point the city of Washington is furnished its street light for a considerable less average than is paid in the other large cities of the country.

The question of competition has been discussed a great deal in connection with gas companies in this and other cities of the United States. Theoretically I am in favor of competition always; and two years ago it was my opinion that it might be well for us to have another gas company in the city of Washington. I joined in that view with my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and one or two other members of the committee; but evidence has been furnished to us which has entirely changed my mind on that question. I have gone over this matter of competition in furnishing gas in all the different cities, and I find that competition does not last very long. In the city of Baltimore, I think, they have had six gas companies, and possibly more, but the plants are all controlled to-day, as I am informed, by a single company. That has been the fate of rival gas companies all over our country. When this matter was before the committee I called attention to the fact that in the city of Boston there were two large and powerful gas companies doing business in that city and that they had actual competition. One of those companies was the Bay State Gas Company. I shall not undertake to say what the capital of that company was, because it is notorious that more than one-half of it was water, and nothing else, but I think it was in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

It is a company that has been manipulated by a gentleman well known to Delaware politics. The other company was the Brookline Gas Company, with a capital of $4,000,000. As before said, I think the Bay State Gas Company had a capital of something like $20,000,000; and those companies were competing in the manufacture and sale of gas. I quoted that before the committee as one illustration where actual competition existed in this country in the manufacture and sale of gas; but, lo and behold, a few days ago the newspapers brought us the intelligence that the Brookline Gas Company, with a capital of $4,000,000, had absorbed the Bay State Gas Company, with a capital of $20,000,000, or thereabouts, and there is only one gas company in the city of Boston to-day, and the people will have to pay tribute to that enormous and fictitious capitalization.

Mr. President, I had intended to say a word in this connection in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota that there were undue influences about the Capitol in this matter of legislation as to gas. I have been here longer than the Senator from South Dakota, and for some reason or other, very likely because I have not been of sufficient consequence to be approached, I have not been troubled by lobbyists upon any question that has been before either House of Congress. The Senator from South Dakota was, according to his own testimony, once troubled by a lobbyist, and the Senator proved himself to be an honorable and a virtuous man, and I am sure he will accord to every other Senator, whether he be Democrat, Republican, or Populist, equal virtue with himself.

Beyond a doubt the Washington Gas Light Company made very large profits years ago; beyond a doubt the Washington Gas Light Company made enormous profits some years ago. It ought then and there to have been regulated by the Congress of the United States, but the fact is that this company, under the absolute control of Congress, has gone along year by year regulated as Congress chose to regulate it so far as its charges were concerned, until to-day the stock of the company is almost entirely owned by men, women, and children who had no connection whatever with it in the years when it made these enormous profits.

Now, does the Congress of the United States propose, Mr. President, to take by the throat these innocent holders of stock, who have paid a very high price for every share that they hold, and by arbitrary legislation confiscate or destroy the investment they have made, simply because those who owned that stock twenty-five, thirty, or forty years ago made enormous profits on the investments they had made in this gas plant? I do not believe that Congress will do anything of the kind. I believe that Congress will deal justly with the people who hold the stock to-day, and that they will not be swayed by prejudice or other considerations which are not fair and just to the people who have invested their money in good faith in this corporation, believing, as they had a right to believe, that they would receive fair play at the hands of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota complained that Mr. Sands, who was the attorney of a new gaslight company that was seeking to become incorporated in the District of Columbia, had not been fairly heard before the committee. I know Mr. Sands well; I have listened to him for a great many hours, and he always talks intelligently. I listened to Mr. Sands in the last Congress; I listened to Mr. Sands for many hours in the present Congress. Mr. Sands is paid for his services. He represents outside capital that, very likely, properly sought an opportunity to come into the District of Columbia and establish a gaslight company in competition with and in opposition to the existing plant.

I noticed that the letters the Senator from South Dakota had read on Saturday, the correspondence between Mr. Sands and the chairman of the District Committee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], were dated some time in February last. I think I do not mistake the date when I say that those letters were written in February last.

Mr. KYLE. In February and March.

Mr. GALLINGER. February and March. I am sure, Mr. President, that if the Senator from Michigan were here to-day he could give an explanation that would be even more satisfactory than the one I shall attempt to give in his behalf concerning this matter.

It struck me on Saturday last when that correspondence was read that it was a very remarkable thing for an attorney who by courtesy is permitted to appear before a committee of the Congress to place in the hands of any Senator the correspondence between himself and the chairman of the committee to be read to the Senate in the absence of the chairman. It may be that there is nothing in that that is either discourteous or improper, but it impressed me that it was both discourteous and improper. But, however that may be, that correspondence took place largely, if not wholly, in February last. Now, I turn to this book, and I find that on March 5, 1896, Mr. Sands was heard before the committee. The chairman had taken the trouble to summon the full committee during the hours when the Senate was in session, which is always a great inconvenience to Senators; it certainly is always a great inconvenience to me to attend a committee meeting when the Senate is in session.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me a moment just there?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. KYLE. I do not think there will be any point of difference between us on that when we have an understanding in regard to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will endeavor to make the explanation, and if I do not make it satisfactorily, the Senator can supplement it.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Sands had placed witnesses upon the stand and had examined them before the committee; he had answered a great many questions put to him by members of the committee, as well as by the chairman, and, as a lawyer always does before a jury, he wished the privilege of a half hour at another time to sum up the evidence, to show the fallacies of his opponents, and to set forth his own argument. That is what he wished, and he was denied a final summing up of the hearings. He does not contend that he was denied a hearing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely there will not be any difference between us when I get through. If there is, I will let the Senator supplement it in his own words.

On the 5th day of March, Senator McMILLAN summoned the committee to the committee room of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and there were present Senators McMILLAN, GALLINGER, HANSBROUGH, PRITCHARD, BAKER, HARRIS, FAULKNER, GIBSON, and MARTIN. Mr. Sands was heard. The first 33 pages of this book containing the hearings show what Mr. Sands and the witnesses he brought with him had to say to the committee. We gave him a very full hearing. We then heard very briefly a representative of the Washington Gas Light Company, a representative of the Georgetown company, and two experts, Mr. Love and Mr. White, of New York. When that hearing closed Mr. Sands made the request that he should be permitted to appear before the committee and make a final argument, as he said, in favor of his company. He was not promised such a hearing, and very shortly after that the committee by consent, without a dissenting voice, came to the conclusion that they would not charter this company, and for that reason it was unnecessary and it would have been foolish under these circumstances to have had Mr. Sands waste his valuable time and the money of the men for whom he was working in making an argument before the committee, and it was declined. That is the story of that.

Mr. President, we are hearing a great deal at the present time about making gas more cheaply. My judgment is if there is and process that will improve the manufacture of gas known to the human mind, that the men who are now engaged in the business, having tens and hundreds of millions of dollars invested in gas plants over this country, will be the first ones to get possession of it. I do not think it will be floating around the country in the brains or the minds or the imaginations of a few men who want to tear up the streets of Washington to establish a new gaslight company that would not exist, in my judgment, as an independent organization for twelve months; that very likely would never be installed at all, because the old company would purchase it before the new company commenced operations. But we have some testimony on that point. Mr. Sands was here in advocacy of a company that proposed to manufacture gas by the Rose-Hastings process, which he claimed was a much cheaper process than was known to any other body of men, and he called attention to the fact that the chief existing plant working under the Rose-Hastings process was the Westchester Gas Company, of New York; and he claimed that they were making gas very much more cheaply than it was being made here in Washington or in any other city by the well-known and well-recognized processes that are used in the manufacture of this article. The committee called Mr. Worrall, the president of the Westchester Gas Company, and had some testimony from him. I asked Mr. Worrall this question:

> Senator GALLINGER. What do you get for your gas?
> Mr. WORRALL. We get $1.50 for gas for lighting, and $1 for gas for fuel, averaging $1.25.

When the question of furnishing gas in holders came up, Mr. Worrall testified that it cost them to put the gas in the holder 41 cents for a thousand cubic feet; and yet the Senator from South Dakota insists that it can be done for 30 cents or less per thousand cubic feet. The result of that inquiry was that Mr. Worrall gave it as his deliberate conviction that it cost more to manufacture gas by the Rose-Hastings process than it cost to manufacture gas by the process that is in use by the Washington Gas Light Company; and upon the testimony of Mr. Worrall, the president of the Westchester Gas Light Company, the committee took adverse action upon that proposition, and did so upon his testimony alone.

The Washington Gas Light Company may be a very bad corporation; I am not quite sure as to whether it is as good as it ought to be; my judgment is that it is not half so bad as it is painted to be. But however this may be, the records show that the Washington Gas Light Company has made a great many reductions in the price of gas. I turn to the record and I find that on January 1, 1867, gas was being furnished to the citizens of Washington at $4 per thousand, less 7½ per cent; net, $3.70. They made a reduction in July of that same year to $4 per thousand, less 12½ per cent; net, $3.50. July 1, 1868, they reduced the price to $4 per thousand, less 15 per cent, or $3.40 net. August 1, 1872, they reduced the price to $3.75, less 20 per cent; net, $3. May 1, 1876, they reduced the price to $2.50, less 25 cents; net, $2.25; and they reduced the cost for street lamps to $36.70. January 1, 1880, they reduced the price to $2.25, less 25 cents; net, $2; and the price for street lamps was reduced to $28.70. On July 1, 1881, the price for street lamps was reduced to $25. January 1, 1882, they reduced the price to $2, less 25 cents; net, $1.75. July 1, 1883, they reduced the price to $1.75, less 25 cents; net, $1.50; and the price for street lamps was reduced to $22. October 1, 1886, the price was reduced to $1.50, less 25 cents; net, $1.25; and November 1, 1893, the price was reduced to $1.25.

It is a matter of record, Mr. President, that almost every one of those reductions were voluntary reductions, only two of them having been made by virtue of legislation by the Congress.

Concerning the cost of gas I am not so well informed, possibly, as some other men; but, as I have said before, Washington is being furnished its gas at a very much cheaper average than it is being furnished to the people of the great cities of the country.

I turn to a table here of the Dominion of Canada, and I find that in the Dominion of Canada the highest price per thousand for gas is $3, and the lowest price in any city of that Dominion is $1.20. There is not a single city in the Dominion of Canada that furnishes gas to-day for less price than $1.20 per thousand feet; and we propose to give it to the people of Washington for $1.15, with a gradual reduction in five years to a dollar, and we are found fault with because, as it is charged, we are legislating in the interests of a monopoly and against the best interests of the people of the District of Columbia!

Mr. President, there are very many other things to which, if I had time, I would call the attention of the Senate in connection with this subject. It is an important matter. The people of the District of Columbia have a right to get their gas as cheaply as it can be furnished. I suppose it is the duty of Senators coming from their sovereign States to give all the time they can spare to the consideration of these questions which affect not their own constituents but the citizens of this great District. I am willing to give my time very graciously and very freely; but after I have given my time, after I have listened to all the testimony that can be offered before our committee, and have reached a conclusion in which every member of the committee joins, I have a right to ask that those findings shall have some weight in the determination of the question that is now under consideration.

As regards dividends, I am not quite sure what the average rate of dividends would be if we should go back to the formation of the company and figure them to the present time. I apprehend it would be large. I know, as I before stated, that in the early years of the existence of this corporation they did make enormous profits; but I know also, as I have already said, that that stock has almost entirely changed hands. It is to-day largely in the hands of small owners. It is in the hands of people of moderate means. They paid the market price for the stock when they bought it, which was largely above par, and they have a right to ask of Congress that their property shall not be confiscated or their investments destroyed, but that in the regulation of this matter their interests, as well as the interests of the people of the District, shall be taken into careful consideration.

It is estimated, and it has been stated to the committee over and over again, that under the pending bill the Washington Gas Light Company will be fortunate if next year it can pay a dividend of 10 per cent upon its capital stock. But I wish to call the attention especially of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] who is honoring me with his attention, because I presume he will make a reply, to the fact——

Mr. GEORGE. And because I want to learn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator, and I wish to call the attention of the distinguished and always just Senator from Mississippi to the fact that 10 per cent upon the capital stock of the Washington Gas Light Company is 10 per cent upon $2,000,000, while it is before the committee in testimony that has never been refuted or undertaken to be refuted that the company has $4,000,000 invested in the plant to-day. So if it makes 10 per cent dividend next year under the provision of this bill on the capital stock, it will be making but 5 per cent on the actual investment that has been made in the property of that great corporation.

Mr. President, I am always willing to stand for the rights and the interests of the people of the United States, and especially of those of this great capital of the nation, of which we are all so proud, but I am not willing to-day, nor will I be willing at any time, to cast my vote simply because there is clamor outside, whether it be newspaper clamor or the clamor of unthinking men in favor of a measure that will to any extent rob the men who have invested in good faith their hard-earned savings in the stock of any corporation. I will not do that simply because we are told that if we do not we will be regarded as the friends of monopoly and aggregated capital rather than of the interests of the plain people of the United States.

Mr. President, I have given very careful attention to this matter. I am not a gas expert, and do not pretend to know much beyond what I have learned in the committee room on the subject, but I have come to the deliberate, the honest, the conscientious conviction that the bill which the Committee on the District of Columbia has reported and which it asks the Senate to pass to-day is a bill that will do equal and exact justice to every interest involved in this controversy, to the people of the District, and at the same time to the men, women, and children who have invested their money in the stock of this corporation. Believing this, I urge the passage of the amended bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am impressed that nothing can be said at this time which will change the result of the vote of the Senate upon this proposition. The Senate have shown by their unmistakable conduct during the debate so far, when very interesting and able speeches have been made on both sides of the question, that they are disposed to leave this matter of local detail to the committee which has it in charge. The committee has been very well described by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] as being an able and conscientious committee and entitled to the respect of the Senate. In all he said about the committee, with one exception, I fully agree, and that is when he excepted himself from the very just praise which he gave to the other members of the committee. I think he is entitled to it as much as any of the rest.

My attention was called to this matter of very serious public interest to the people of the District several days ago by one of the citizens who has an interest and feels an interest in the proper settlement of the question. Since that time I have given somewhat of careful consideration to the matter now before the Senate, and while I agree, as I have just stated, with what the Senator from New Hampshire said is the weight entitled to be given to the Committee on the District of Columbia, I must also call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the present committee, able and distinguished as it is, is not the only committee of Congress, or of this body, which has given careful consideration to the subject.

As early as 1886 a committee of this body, the Committee on the District of Columbia, which so far as I know was equally as able, equally as distinguished as the present committee, gave this matter very full consideration. Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin was chairman of the committee; and that committee made a report reaching the conclusion that the House committee and the House itself reached in the bill now before the Senate, that $1 per thousand cubic feet was a fair and a just price to be charged by this company to the citizens who use gas. That committee was unanimous. There was no dissent. But, as usually happens when we undertake to destroy an abuse, especially an abuse which is fostered by a rich corporation, the report of the committee came to naught. Afterwards a committee of the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Heard of Missouri was chairman, also gave the matter very careful consideration and unanimously came to the conclusion that $1 per thousand cubic feet was a fair price to be charged. Then afterwards the Committee on the District of Columbia of this body gave it further consideration, and very full consideration. Mr. Hunton, then a Senator from Virginia, made the report. That committee was not unanimous. A majority of the committee, for very singular reasons, and reasons which ought not to have weight in this body, reached the conclusion that $1 per thousand cubic feet was an insufficient charge. If I can turn my eye to the report of that committee and to the place I have marked, I will read to the Senate the reasoning upon which the committee proceeded, and which I think the Senate will perceive at once ought not to control the deliberation of this body. Says the report:

Looking to the future development of this Federal city——

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Mississippi read from the Hunton report?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; from the Hunton report, page 7:

Looking to the future development of this Federal city and the reasonable demands of the public, is it not the true policy to allow a price for gas which will meet operating expenses, a reasonable dividend, not on the value of the plant, but on the $2,000,000 of capital stock, and a fund—

That is what I desire to call the attention of the Senate to—equal to the average charge of $96,500 for expenses attending—

Not for expenses for operating the plant—I want to call the attention of the Senate to that—but—attending the extension of its works, rather than to increase the capital stock or the bonded indebtedness of this company.

The basis upon which the majority of the committee decided that there should not be a reduction in the price of gas was that the company should have the reasonable opportunity of increasing the value of their plant over and above fair and reasonable dividends to the amount of $96,000 a year. So when I call the attention of the Senate to that, they will see that the committee acted upon an improper basis, because as the value of the plant is extended so also is the increase in the proceeds of the plant, and that is manifestly capital to be furnished by the stockholders and not to be charged to the people of the District.

That committee, as I said, was not unanimous. I find attached to it a dissenting report with the names of John Martin, of Kansas, not now a member of this body; Mr. HANSBROUGH, now a member of this body, and Mr. GALLINGER, who just addressed the Senate upon the subject. It is a very elaborate report. They resisted the conclusion to which a majority of the committee came and insisted that $1 per 1,000 feet was the proper price to be charged for gas. I will read a short extract from the minority report.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Mississippi pardon me? May I ask what the report is?

Mr. GEORGE. It is the Hunton report.

Mr. KYLE. A minority report?

Mr. GEORGE. A minority report.

Mr. KYLE. Did the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] argue for dollar gas there?

Mr. GEORGE. That is the way I understand it.

The enormous profits—

Says the minority of the committee—which it is reaping from day to day as a result of this monopoly lead to the inevitable conclusion that it is the duty of Congress to give its affairs careful scrutiny. It is contended that it would be useless for the committee to extend its investigation to a period in the history of this corporation when its management was the subject of general remark and bordered on the scandalous, and when its earnings were so great as to suggest the existence of oppressive charges.

When we come now to authorities, I want the Senate to understand that we had a unanimous committee of this body in favor of dollar gas in 1886. We had a committee, the Hunton committee, in 1895, a majority opposed to dollar gas upon the grounds that I have just read to the Senate, and we have the report of three eminent members of that committee dissenting entirely from the views of the majority. We have two unanimous reports from the committee of the House of Representatives, who, after careful investigation, as they say, reached the same conclusion that the Spooner committee reached in 1886. Therefore, upon the question of authority, if we do not weigh the members, if we merely count them—which I reckon is the proper way to do in a legislative body—we have about three to one in favor of the proposition that the price of gas in this city should be fixed at $1 per thousand feet.

Mr. President, a very short retrospect of the operations of this company, which were somewhat alluded to in the report of the minority of the District of Columbia Committee, will not be out of place. The company was chartered in 1848 with a capital of $50,000. It has been increased from time to time until now it is $2,000,000. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that of the $2,000,000, which is the only money ever paid by the stockholders of the company, or is said to be, it is admitted by the majority in the Hunton report that only about $1,490,000 was ever paid by the stockholders. Call it a million and a half, as it is very near that. The Spooner committee say: "We are unable to ascertain how much money has been paid by the stockholders," for a very sufficient reason, as detailed by that committee. I will read it to the Senate, so that the Senate may understand exactly what we are dealing with here. The committee of which Mr. Spooner was chairman undertook to find out all about the operations of this company from the very beginning.

It has been stated—

Say the committee—

heretofore in reports to Congress that the first $500,000 of capital was paid in in cash, and this was stated by the present officers of the company at the outset of the investigation to be true, and it may be true, but upon examination of them it was developed that their information is based upon inference and hearsay.

A very singular statement to be made by officers of a company which, though private in its ownership, is public in its use. They could not tell how much money had ever been put into the treasury of the company by the stockholders, and here is the reason for it:

The professed inability of the company to furnish this information finds explanation in a fact most extraordinary—

As everybody will see—and almost unprecedented in the history of corporate management. On the —— day of ——, 1883, the board of directors of this company passed the following resolution or order—

A very extraordinary order—

"Ordered, That the secretary be directed to destroy or dispose of such books and papers as are no longer of use to the company."

"As are no longer of use to the company." So the president, Mr. Bartol, under that authority sold to a paper maker in the city of Philadelphia all the books of the company up to 1866, at which date an addition of five or six hundred thousand dollars was made to the capital stock of the company. Therefore there is not now the slightest record in that company among the papers or its books of the transactions of the company from 1848 up to 1866.

I said the other day in a short colloquy I had here that the manifest purpose of that was to destroy the evidence of the transactions of the company. Here is what the committee say:

The only explanation which is offered of the sale of these books is that some of them were moldy and damp, and some of them had been somewhat irregularly kept.

It is a very remarkable fact that a great corporation, a corporation whose use is public, responsible to the public for the way in which it transacts its business, should allow its books to get into the condition where they can be moldy or damp. I must suggest as my opinion upon the subject that they could not have got in that condition except with the same intent that was afterwards manifested when they sold them—they wanted to get rid of them.

It is a significant fact—

Says the committee—

that the destruction of these books blotted out from the public and from investigation the detailed transactions of this corporation up to the time in 1866 when the company distributed among its then stockholders, as representing corporate earnings theretofore put into an extension of the plant, $500,000 of stock, making all together $1,000,000 of capitalization.

The committee say—and I will read it, and that is all I will read on the subject:

Just what purpose was to be subserved it is probably unprofitable even to conjecture. The maxim of the law, "In odium spoliatoris omnia presumuntur," is perhaps fairly applicable to the case. One thing is certain; the $500,000 of capital distributed in 1866 was not paid for by the stockholders who received it, except, perhaps, by the investment of money received by the company in the preceding years.

Thus, when we come to investigate this company, which is but the servant of Congress, an agency employed by Congress for the purpose of furnishing to the people of the District illuminating gas, we are met at the very first step with the startling, extraordinary, and scandalous fact that the company just preceding the issuance of $500,000 worth of stock in 1866 destroyed its books, so that everything prior to 1866 which can now be brought out by an investigating committee rests on inference and on inference alone. That is the institution with which we are dealing to-day. It has paid, according to the majority of the Hunton committee, not the dissenting members, a little less than one million and a half for its stock of two million dollars, and the remainder of this immense plant now held up before us as a matter to be protected comes from what the reports say and what the Senators when this case was under discussion in this body a few days ago said were the enormous profits of this corporation.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator states that it is worth about $4,000,000.

Mr. GEORGE. They claim that. So we find, according to the statements of these committees on both sides, that not only have the dividends been enormous, such as to suggest scandalous management, but also in addition to that this great plant has been secured. That is the situation before us.

I am not going to discuss how much it costs to manufacture gas or how much it costs to distribute the gas. I have before me a document, and I wish every member of the Senate who is going to vote upon this question would read the document, which settles beyond controversy, beyond doubt, that the passage of the bill as it came from the House is not only just and right, but that it is absolutely demanded of the Senate.

The committee of the House, of which Mr. BABCOCK was chairman, which investigated this matter, made a report March 7, 1896, and as a result of that report a bill was passed which fixed the price of gas in the future in the District, to commence at once, at $1 per thousand feet. The committee of the Senate, and I want the Senate to bear this in mind, dissent from that conclusion only to this extent: They do not say that $1 a thousand feet is too little, but they say and affirm that it is sufficient, only that it shall not go into effect for five years. So the committee of the Senate, upon whose work we are now deliberating, have asserted to the Senate in the most solemn manner that $1 per thousand cubic feet for gas is a proper and reasonable charge if only we allow the company to charge a little more than that up to the year 1901. The committee, and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, give us no reason, they give us no fact, upon which we can act which shows that $1 per thousand feet will be a reasonable charge five years from now and not a reasonable charge now. They ought to have explained to us why a reduction of 10 cents a thousand immediately is right and not too high and then 15 cents and so on up for the five years until you get down to a dollar, if the company can not, as the company claims it can not, make gas at a price which will enable them to sell it at $1 a thousand feet.

What is to happen in the next five years—the committee have not told us—which will make the manufacture of gas in this city cheaper than it is to-day? Not a word is said upon that subject. We hear a great deal about the extra cost of coal in the city of Washington to-day above that of other cities, and no suggestion is made that in five years coal will be cheaper than it is now.

By the way, I think I am authorized to state what was said here in public debate a few days ago, that, although this report on its face is the unanimous report of the committee, there were dissenters in the committee who acceded to it as a mere matter of compromise. Now I go to this paper and I call the especial attention of Senators who take any interest in the matter to it. It is headed as follows: "Statement of the Washington Gas Light Company in response to inquiry of the Hon. J. W. BABCOCK, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, February 3, 1895," and it shows the disbursements and receipts for the year 1895. That is the last year of its operations. I have made an analysis of the report and it shows the figures of the company itself, the statement made by the company through its officers to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the other House. If Senators will take this paper and analyze it for themselves they will see not only that the reduction to $1 is just and proper but that it ought to be reduced more.

This account shows that at the commencement of the year 1895 there was $58,166 of cash on hand in the company's treasury. They started operations on the 1st day of January, 1895, with $58,166 in the treasury. The balance on hand at the end of the year was $89,922.38, showing a cash gain during the year of $31,755, or over 1½ per cent on the capital stock of the company reserved as a cash fund at the end of the year, not only reserved as a cash fund, but surplus or excess reserved over that which they had in the beginning of the year. The company sold bonds during the year to the amount of $368,663. They made permanent extensions, and excluding the two items of $36,059 for repair of plants and $26,130 for street lamps, items which are not brought out at all in the calculation which I make hereafter for extension—that is, for making more plant, extending their works, extending their business, extending the capital upon which they propose to do business for the future, they spent $198,305.86. This expenditure of $198,305.86 was less than the bond sales. They sold, remember, $368,000. It was less than the bond sales by $170,357.89. So let the Senate understand that when they paid for these extensions and when they put the sales of the bonds in the treasury they had in the treasury from the sales of bonds $170,357.89, which went to their general fund.

The next thing they did, as shown by this report, was the payment of $600,000 of dividends for the year 1895, or 30 per cent upon the capital stock of the company. That is not way back in the past, when the books were destroyed; it is not way back in the past, when it is supposed that the management of this company was scandalous and when they made enormous profits; but right here in our last fiscal year, the last year of the operations of this company. The $600,000 was not all profit, because I have just stated to the Senate (and I want to be exactly fair with this company) that $170,357.89 remained in the treasury of the company out of the proceeds of the sales of the bonds after they had paid for the permanent extensions. So I deduct that amount. They paid dividends to the amount of $600,000, all profit, except the $170,357.89, leaving for full profit $429,642.91. That is, just on that transaction.

Then, Mr. President, I go back. The cash was increased $31,755.85 during the year; that is, they started out with $58,000 and concluded with $89,000. So I add that to the profit of $429,000, making the total profits, after paying all repairs, and so forth—$62,189.45—to which I called the attention of the Senate some time ago, $461,398.76. Now, that is not gross profit; that is net profit which this company made in the year 1895. This was the actual profits made by the company, as extensions—enlargements of the plant—were profits in every sense. The profit, counting the extension as a part of the profits, was a little over 22 per cent; a long way from the 10 per cent which the Senator from New Hampshire said was a reasonable profit.

Now I want to make this so plain that nobody can misunderstand me. I will go now upon the basis suggested by the Hunton committee, that we ought to leave the extensions as a part of the fund of the company and not treat them as profits. We will see how it stands then. If we take out the permanent extensions—$198,135—we have $263,000 as profits, 18 per cent in money, and $198,000 not divided, which was expended in the extension of the plant.

But here, Mr. President, I think I ought to call the attention of the Senate to one item of this $198,000, which I have in this last calculation given them. One hundred thousand dollars of the $198,000 was for a mole and a wharf bought of the canal company and was no part of the gas-extension plant. Taking out that $100,000 we have $363,093.90 as profit, or about 18 per cent on the capital, after allowing them for all they had paid out in extending the plant. That is an analysis of their report for the year 1895, with gas at a dollar and a quarter. It shows a profit of 18 per cent after allowing them $98,000 for extending their gas mains in the suburbs of the city and other places.

Mr. KYLE. For the year 1895?

Mr. GEORGE. For 1895, the last year.

Mr. KYLE. I think it is recorded that they declared that year 10 per cent first and then 20 per cent after that, making 30 per cent.

Mr. GEORGE. I have stated that they declared 30 per cent, but I also showed that a part of that was from the sale of bonds. I want to bring that out so as to be fair and right and just. Now, these are the fact: A profit of 18 per cent on the capital stock made during the year 1895, after allowing them for every dollar paid out in repairs, buying new street lamps, and allowing them $98,000 for an extension of that plant. I do not want to comment upon these facts. I have put them in the RECORD, so that the public may know upon what basis we are acting when we vote upon this measure.

Now, one more remark rather in application of what I have before said on one point, and then I will have said all I desire to say. The House committee and the House of Representatives came to the conclusion that $1 was a fair price. Any man who will pay attention to the figures which I have put before the Senate will agree that it was not only fair, but that it was a very liberal price. Now the Senate committee come in and do what? I repeat now what I said before. They bring the price down to a dollar and take five years to do it in, by gradual descent. No man has explained, and no man can explain, I suppose, on business principles, or else he would have done so, why they make that reduction. How can they predict that if the company can not make money at a dollar a thousand cubic feet of gas in 1896 they can make money at that price in 1901? I do not know whether the Senator from New Hampshire said that the committee had fixed any sum or not, but he at least stated as his own figures that 8 or 10 per cent upon the capital was fair remuneration for the company. I have shown that they made last year 22 per cent, not counting as profits, which ought to be counted, the $98,000 which they spent in extending their plant. I have shown that they made and handed over to their stockholders 18 per cent after taking out of the earnings of the company every cent that they had paid for betterments of every kind whatever and for extensions.

With that statement, Mr. President, I submit the case, so far as I am concerned, to the Senate, being absolutely certain that the figures which I have presented to the Senate are correct and can not be overturned unless you overturn the statement made by the company itself.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I crave the indulgence of the Senate for a short time to reply to some of the suggestions made by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I will state that I act in this capacity more for the reason that the bill having been in charge of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who was necessarily called away to his State, he insisted that if there was an opportunity of getting it up I should take charge of it and urge its passage, as he feels great pride in the passage of the bill and the settlement of this gas question which has been before Congress for the last eight or nine years; in fact, for a longer period.

I wish to be very brief, and therefore I will reply to the suggestions made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in a practical way, I hope, so that the Senate will see exactly the question before it. The Committee on the District of Columbia have no interest whatever in this matter, except to reach a fair and equitable conclusion.

Mr. GEORGE. Nobody claims that they have.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course not. They stand as impartial judges between two great interests. On the one side stand the consumers, who are anxious to reduce the price of gas, of course, as low as possible. It is the natural inclination of the human mind and the human heart to get the best bargain possible in any dealings. On the other side stand the gas company, who are as anxious to get as good a price for their gas as the conditions will permit and the authority of Congress will allow.

We have, therefore, to examine the interest of both of these parties impartially, sift their evidence, and examine into the earnings of the company to ascertain what would be equitable and just on the part of Congress in regulating this subject. There is no question that Congress has an absolute and exclusive right to regulate the price of gas in the District of Columbia. We entered into this investigation with a spirit and determination to do what we believe to be just between the two contending interests.

It may be proper and right, in order that the Senate shall have all the views the committee had before them, to allude to the new company that sought legislation from Congress by presenting a bill and asking the incorporation of that company to furnish gas both for fuel and lighting purposes in the District of Columbia, guaranteeing to do it at the sum of 75 cents per thousand cubic feet. That question was investigated most thoroughly and exhaustively. Opportunity was given to everyone to present all the facts bearing upon the subject, and when the examination was concluded, although the committee started out with a division of 6 to 7 or 7 to 6 in favor of the proposition, when it came to a test vote I do not think there was a single member of the committee who, under his responsibility as a Senator, acting as a common alderman of this city, was willing to cast his vote for the chartering of that company. Why, sir? Not because the committee did not want 75-cent gas for the citizens of the District, but simply because the evidence demonstrated beyond all question that the proposition made was impossible of execution. As stated by a distinguished expert who was before the committee, "Gentlemen, show me any man who has an invention that will reduce the cost of gas 5 cents on the thousand and I will pledge you my word within twenty-four hours to assemble all the capital that is necessary to purchase the patent right of the process." He said further: "There is not a single gas company now in operation in this country that would not be crowding at the doors of such a company to secure the right and the privilege of its patent in the manufacture of gas."

There are engaged in the gas business some of the ablest and most distinguished scientists in this country. They are working every day trying for some improvement in order to reduce the price of gas. They realize that there is a new and great light coming in as a competitor to gas, and which forces them to a realization that they must furnish gas at the very lowest figure possible. I allude to electricity, which is the great competitor to-day of gas. Its processes are being improved and its cost of production is being rapidly reduced, and gas has to meet that competition in every city and town in the country. Consequently they are experimenting at all times in all these works for improvements that will reduce the cost of gas. But up to this time they have been able to discover nothing better than the processes used by the Washington Gas Light Company.

We made a full examination of that subject. As the Senator from South Dakota said, Washington, being the capital city of the nation, has a right to the most perfect plant that can be established. It should be devised and planned upon the most scientific principles that will yield the greatest result from the amount of money involved for the cost of material used. It was the unanimous sentiment of every expert before us, uncontradicted by anyone, that the Washington Gas Light Company, in its new plant, was unsurpassed by any plant in the United States. The gentleman at the head of this company, who is known to almost every Senator, Hon. John R. McLean, has given them carte blanche to adopt every improvement and the latest scientific results secured at any other place, that he may improve the quality of the gas and produce the best results at the lowest cost. The experts gave it as their unanimous opinion that this plant was equal to any plant in the United States.

As to the question of candlepower, Senators who have not been engaged in the examination of these questions can not understand all the details involved in this question as we who are members of the committee have necessarily acquired them by reason of the position in which we have been placed. Washington has suffered—yes, I say, has suffered—in the estimation not only of its own citizens but in that of the people of the country from the existence of a law which provides that gas of 16 candlepower shall be furnished by the gas company. Sixteen candlepower tested by what? By the argand burner of 15 holes. What is that burner? Where did it originate? It originated in England in 1823; it was called the English Parliamentary burner and has been discarded by England and it is discarded by every city in the world at this date; and yet here is the capital of this great Republic using as a test that which the whole civilized world has come to regard, as one expert said, "a mere antique." They have adopted the new Parliamentary Argand burner in England of 20 holes for low-candlepower gas. What is English gas? It is gas of 16, 17, 18, and 19 candlepower as a rule, but it is provided in England that wherever the candlepower exceeds 20 it shall be tested by the flat burner, the use of which is proposed by this bill. The burner described in this bill to test the candlepower of gas in Washington is the burner recognized by all commercial cities and towns where such tests are made.

I want to say further, Mr. President, that it has been conclusively demonstrated before the committee that the test of the quality and candlepower of gas in this city is superior to that of any other city in the Union, except the city of New York. Under the law here a Federal official is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, who tests the gas supplied to this city every twenty-four hours, with heavy penalties upon the company for a failure to comply with the law. He tests it, of course, by the 15-hole Argand burner, and for the last five or six years it has fallen below the 16 candlepower only on three tests. The ordinary range or test in this city by the old English parliamentary burner has been from 16 to 18 and 19, but generally about 17 candlepower, which would give by the flat-flame burner about 22 candlepower.

As a committee we determined that we must discard this old antique piece of brass and select a burner by which the light can be tested not only in the office of the inspector but in every man's house; we must adopt the same burner by which to test gas as the one which the people themselves use in their private consumption. Then, if any consumer complains of the candlepower of the gas furnished you can say to him: "Have your light tested through the same burner as that used by the inspector in his official tests." We therefore adopted the Bray slit Union burner, No. 7, the flat-flame burner, for the reason that those burners can be purchased for 50 cents a dozen, a price at which every man can procure that burner for his own house and test the question of whether the candlepower of the gas furnished him is equal to that which the law requires.

We then determined what should be the highest candlepower that the people of this District should have, in order to give them a candlepower which would equal the candlepower in any other city in this Union for the purposes of light.

What do all the experts concur in? They unanimously concur in the proposition that 24 candlepower is the best practical candlepower that can be used in this city. They say if you put it at 24 the company will be bound to make the gas equal to about 25 candlepower in order to maintain the 24. They declare that the consumer, in fact, gets 25 candlepower, because there are heavy penalties when the test shows that the company has failed to reach what the law requires; and so 25 candlepower will be secured. The light from that will not smoke, but if you make it higher than that you have to put more of the oils into its manufacture, and the result will be a smoking gas instead of a clear gas. Consequently the experts all concur in the opinion that this candlepower is the best. We therefore changed the House bill from 22 to 24 candlepower.

Mr. MILLS. Is there any certain test about the quantity of gas that is used?

Mr. FAULKNER. We provide that the company shall not put any meter in any consumer's house until it has been tested by the Government inspector and he has sealed it, which insures to the consumer that it is a true and accurate meter. That was for the protection of the people. We have looked in every way that was possible to the interests of the consumer.

Let me observe here, Mr. President, that there are many causes for bad gas of which we hear complaint in this city which do not obtain in a great many other cities. You must remember that in this city, and nowhere else in the United States, has the gas company the slightest control over the American citizen when building a house as to its proper piping. The result is that we find in many houses in this city extremely bad gas, for the reason that the pipes are too small for the amount of gas necessary to properly light the house. There are old pipes, which I myself have seen, as a member of the District Committee, taken out so filled with rust that the aperture through which the gas must pass was not much larger than a darning needle.

Then we find the tips that are used here are inferior in many instances. As an illustration, one of the experts, when he arrived here, called upon a lady, and she said to him: "I am very glad you have come, as we have miserable gas in the District, and I want you to remedy it as far as you can." He said he examined the burners and found them very defective. When he went down town that evening he bought a set of burners and sent a man up to the house of this lady, and had them put on just to see what would be the effect. He said on the next visit he made to the house she said, "You have improved our gas very much; it is now simply perfect"; and it was merely because proper burners had been put on her gas fixtures. It was for no other reason, as nothing else had been done in the case.

The chairman of the committee, Senator McMILLAN, called attention in the examination, which the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from South Dakota I dare say have read, to the fact that in the rear portion of his house he could not get good illumination. The experts said, "It must be the fault of your pipes." The chairman then said, "Send a man there to correct it." A man was sent and he corrected the piping, and then the gas was again turned on. It was just as fine then in the rear part of the house as in the front part. It was found that the pipes had filled up with rust and the aperture had become too small for the gas to pass through. The pipes were too small for a house of that size in the first instance. These complaints will come. It is really absurd that we should be required to argue and bring in all these details here in order to convince the Senate that this question has been honestly and elaborately examined in detail by the committee who have now for the first time in eight years reached a unanimous conclusion in support of a measure.

Mr. KYLE. I ask for information; is there any provision to prevent an insufficient flow of gas by cleaning out the pipes?

Mr. FAULKNER. There is no provision made for that. That is a matter that the gas company does at the request of parties, at least, I so understand; but there is no obligation by law upon the company to do it, and it is not done in any other city of the Union by such companies. Very frequently, however, in order to satisfy the consumer, if word be sent to the company that there is a defective flow of gas, they put their pumps on the pipes and blow them out. This I am told by consumers—I do not know it from the gas company or from any of the hearings we have had.

The Senator from Mississippi says: "You have proposed to give us dollar gas in five years, which is an admission of the fact that you ought to furnish gas at a dollar now, and your committee does not give us any reason why dollar gas is not given at the present time." I will give the Senator the reason which influenced me as a member of the committee, and, I believe, influenced other members, in favor of this sliding scale.

We are trying an experiment with the object and purpose of accomplishing what the citizens of Washington desire. We are trying an experiment, and, under the figures presented to us, we doubt whether it will be absolutely just or right to the company; but we know, in the growth of this magnificent city and in its development, that if we lower the price of gas, necessarily there will be additional consumption, and that the consumption will increase, without perhaps largely increased cost for any additions to the plant. If that proves correct the larger the consumption the cheaper the price at which the gas can be sold, and we hope by gradually coming down to a dollar that increased consumption will follow and that an increased development of the city in population will also assist in making a larger consumption of the output of this company and thereby enable them to meet the demands of this bill.

There is no city in the Union that compares with this, Mr. President, as to the cost of the gas plant. In other cities the companies place their mains in the center of the streets, but the Commissioners do not allow it here. They do not propose to allow the gas company, every time they have to make a connection with a house, or when they have to examine for a leak, to cut up these great and magnificent avenues, and tear up the asphalt from the curbing to the center of the street. They therefore require the company to incur a double expense in piping the city. The company is required to lay their mains on both sides of the streets, near the curbing, so that when they make connections, or when they are seeking for a leak, they do not interfere with travel or destroy the asphalt on the streets to the extent which would be required if laid in the center. The company is, of course, always required to replace it. These are the reasons, I will state to the Senator from Mississippi, why we hope that in five years this company can meet the demands imposed upon them by this bill.

There is another question upon which the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from South Dakota have laid great stress; that is, as to what they call the enormous profits of this company. This statement has confronted every Committee on the District of Columbia since I have been in the Senate. It was presented to us and has prejudiced and biased my mind and the minds of other Senators until through an investigation of it we were enabled to distinguish between the past and the present. Any person who will look over the records of these investigations will find from 1862 up to 1881, when large profits were accruing to the gas company, the price of gas was running from $4 a thousand for private consumption and $40 for street lamps, down to $2.75 to consumers and $32 for street lamps. There was then only a small capital invested; for up to 1867 the capital of the company was only $350,000, which enabled the payment of these large profits.

These prices, even at that time, were too high, and, in my judgment, the profits were inequitable and unjust. It was done, however, as you earn your salaries, by virtue of law, under regulations by Congress. They charged not one dollar more than the law authorized them to charge. Human nature is the same in a gas company as it is in a Senator. My distinguished friend from Mississippi may say that $5,000 a year is too high for the salary of a Senator; that it is too much to be paid; but I do not think he will be criticised for accepting what the law authorizes him to receive. If so, then you have no right to criticise this company. If high prices were charged, it was the fault of Congress that the subject was not better regulated in the interests of the people residing here, which had then, as it has now, jurisdiction of the subject.

It is said that $500,000 in stock in 1867 was distributed by this company. The testimony before the present Committee on the District of Columbia and before all the committees as to that question was that the cost of the plant to the stockholders at the time of the giving of that $500,000 of stock was $937,000, money which they had expended in developing the plant, and this represented money advanced by the stockholders or to which they would otherwise have been entitled. It was simply squaring the account; and I say that there is no evidence here or in any report of any similar distribution.

That is the only amount of stock that has been distributed by this company that was not earned; and its capital stock now reaches to $2,000,000 on an actual plant which, in any State in this Union, would be capitalized at $4,000,000, which plant has been created by money advanced by its stockholders or borrowed through the issuing of bonds which are now a lien upon it, aggregating in value $1,200,000. The stock of this company is at 41 on the market, because the people know that back of that stock there is a valuable plant, and every man who is a stockholder in that company and who has bought within the last seven or eight years has had to pay $41 on every $20 par value of the stock of the company. When, therefore, a dividend is declared of 10 per cent upon the capital stock, it means 5 per cent upon the actual value of the money put into the stock by the men who bought it. Who owned this stock from 1867 to 1880 I do not know, nor do I care; but I am convinced that those who manage and control the company now are to a large extent recent stockholders, and that they have paid $41 for every $20 of stock, and are only receiving a 5 per cent dividend on the actual money which has been paid in.

Mr. THURSTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. THURSTON. I inquire for information what is the bonded indebtedness of this company?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is $1,200,000.

Mr. THURSTON. Are there any other fixed charges on which the company is required to pay interest?

Mr. FAULKNER. None that I know of. Those are the fixed charges.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the report.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am going to refer to that, if the Senator will permit me. He need not think that I am going to avoid it.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator will refer to it, but I do not care whether he does or not.

Mr. FAULKNER. I shall certainly do so.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; do so.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is another question which the Senate ought to understand, and which the committee took into consideration. Are you aware, Senators, that under the law of the District whenever a street is laid out within the District of Columbia the Commissioners have the right to require this company to lay their mains, thus requiring it at times to make an expenditure of thousands and thousands of dollars in laying pipes on such streets years before there will be a dollar of income to the gas company from consumption along the line of those streets? This is a wise provision, Mr. President, and I heartily indorse it. Why? When those streets are laid out and graded, before they are paved or asphalted, it is the right and duty of this Government to see that the gas pipes are put down, so that the streets shall not be torn up after they have been paved. But it puts a burden on this company which is put on no other company in the United States. Even, to accommodate the demand from Takoma, last year the gas company put one of the large mains to Takoma, within the District of Columbia, 6 miles, to accommodate the people there; and yet there is but little return for the cost of that main, as it passes through mere woods, you may say, from the fire limits to Takoma itself, there being no consumption of gas whatever along the line.

These are obligations resting upon this company that the committee have had to take into consideration. I hold that the report heretofore made in 1895, which has been commented upon, was, in my judgment, correct. I regret that I was overruled by the committee. I maintain that it should be the policy of the Government in the District of Columbia to keep the capital stock and bonded indebtedness of every corporation at the lowest possible amount, and to allow them to have an income annually from receipts to make the extensions which are essential in the development of this city. I hold that it is a true business proposition that if you keep the capital stock down dividends will be kept down. But the committee overruled me in that, and it was only for that reason that I would consent to the reduction made here, because if the privilege were not given to the courts of this District to allow that extension by the increase of the capital stock it would be an absolute impossibility for the company to carry out the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, what enters into the cost of gas? How are you going to ascertain its cost? These gentlemen have gone into fine-spun theories about the matter; they have presented some very scientific authorities, but that is not the practical way to arrive at a conclusion as to what is a proper charge by this company for the gas it manufactures. I take the simple receipts of the company, and I take its disbursements, and ascertain the amount of gas they sell, and then I can tell myself by a simple calculation the cost of gas to that company during a given year; and I assert here that during the last six years the average cost of gas to the gas company, taking its receipts and its disbursements into consideration, as sworn to by the officers of the company, has been $1.17, and this very first reduction that we make brings it down to $1.15.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KYLE. How is it, then, that Mr. McIlhenny made a statement that by selling gas at $1 he could make 15 cents per thousand feet on it?

Mr. FAULKNER. If he ever made that statement I have never seen it. I do not care what Mr. McIlhenny or what any other gas man or expert says. I know when I have taken the receipts of that company and its disbursements and ascertained the amount of the output of gas, I can tell myself what is the cost to that company of its gas, and you will find that in 1889 it was $1.39.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Has the company referred to in this bill indicated its willingness to acquiesce in these changes of rates?

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course they say they can not do this, but they will try to do it, as the committee has determined to make an effort to test their ability to do so.

Mr. WHITE. The object of my interrogatory was this: From the statement of the Senator from West Virginia the conclusion inevitably follows that the manufacture of gas hereafter will be at a loss if the Senator's estimate of the cost of making gas is correct. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think they will have to curtail expenses somewhere in order to accomplish it.

In 1889 the cost of gas was $1.39; in 1890 it was $1.21; in 1891 it was $1.06; in 1892 it was $1.08; in 1893 it was $1.18; I have not the figures for 1894; and in 1895 it was $1.10. That makes an average in the six years in the cost of the manufacture of gas, taking the output of the company and its disbursements, of $1.17; and I think that is accurate, because I have never seen it controverted, though it has been before the public since the Hunton report.

Mr. President, as to the cost of the manufacture of gas, the Senator from South Dakota read numerous statistics from various cities. There are not over seven cities in this Union to which the Senator can point where gas is sold at a dollar, and he unfairly presented the comparison between those cities and Washington to the Senate when he stated that this company was able to furnish dollar gas. He failed to state the difference in the cost of material at the points he named and this city. He referred to Allegheny, where the cost of coal is 80 cents, while the cost here is $3.94; he named Cleveland, where the cost of gas is $1 and coal costs $2. Is that a fair comparison? Is that giving any light to the Senate as to whether we ought to reduce the cost of gas here?

Mr. KYLE. How about Chicago and Detroit?

Mr. FAULKNER. I think I can give the price at Detroit, but I do not think I can at Chicago. In Detroit it is $2.35 a ton.

Mr. KYLE. How much?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is $2.35 a ton in Detroit, and at Detroit, in order to come down to dollar gas, they entered into a contract with the gas company to give it the exclusive privilege of the city for thirty years.

Mr. KYLE. It starts at a dollar and goes down to 90 cents.

Mr. FAULKNER. The city had to give the company a thirty-year exclusive contract in order to secure a reduction in the price of gas in Detroit to $1. None of the cities named are as far away from the coal fields as is Washington. The Senator from South Dakota can not name a city where the cost of coal and material is as high as here where they have dollar gas.

Mr. KYLE. I have named two or three of them.

Mr. FAULKNER. Name one. I challenge him to do it. He has all the information before him that I have, and he can not do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia where the coal does come from from which gas is made in this city? Can the coal that comes down the canal be used for that purpose?

Mr. FAULKNER. No; it is not gas coal. It is from the farther western mines. That comes from Georges Creek and the other mines around Cumberland. The coal the company uses is the gas coal of West Virginia and the Youghiogheny coal of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. Those coals have to be brought a long distance by rail?

Mr. FAULKNER. They have to be brought by rail. They are not in direct water connection. The Baltimore and Ohio controls the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and as the road goes up to the gas-coal fields of West Virginia, they do not make any special arrangements to let a transfer be made at Cumberland, where the canal stops, in order to transfer coal.

A most remarkable fact was developed in the investigation of this question, and I think the Senate ought to take notice of it through its proper committee. To bring a ton of gas coal from the coal fields to this city the railroads charge $2.50, whereas in reference to other coal I think it is $1.60 or $1.90 freight. They make a discrimination as to gas coal.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me? I notice that Mr. Vanderpoel, in his testimony, figures out the cost of producing a thousand feet of gas in the holder at 35.8 cents, and he figures his coal at $5.20 a ton, whereas the price of coal in Washington is from $3.25 to $4 a ton.

Mr. FAULKNER. I can not follow my scientific friend, the Senator from South Dakota. I am a very plain man.

Mr. KYLE. It is not science. Let me say that this man was brought here at the instance of the Washington Gas Light Company.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will put the expert against the statement of the president of the new company which the Senator was seeking to have come into the city, in which he said that the gas from his improved process cost 62 cents to put it into the holder, without cost of distribution. I can not discriminate between these scientists who differ so widely. It is utterly impossible.

Mr. KYLE. Here is another man, Mr. Patton, now in the service of the Government in the Patent Office, who testifies that he was the engineer of the water-gas company at Harrisburg, and that he made water gas by the Lowe process, the same as here, and distributed it at a cost of 40 cents a thousand.

Mr. FAULKNER. See, to an unsophisticated man like myself, if I had not been on the committee, how misleading would have been the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. KYLE. Make allowance——

Mr. FAULKNER. Let me show the Senate how absolutely misleading he would be. Does he not know that there is no gas from coal consumed for gas purposes in making water gas?

Mr. KYLE. Two-thirds of the gas here is water gas.

Mr. FAULKNER. In making water gas the only use of coal is to heat the retorts.

Mr. KYLE. According to the report, two-thirds of the gas made here is water gas.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it is, but when they make water gas the only purpose of the coal is to heat up the furnace.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that.

Mr. FAULKNER. It makes no gas. No gas comes from the coal whatever, and when that portion of the gas which is made here is made by the water process it is a combination of water and oil that makes the illuminating gas.

Mr. KYLE. So it is there.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it is; but there they use the anthracite coal. They do not use at all the coal I am talking about. When they make water gas they use anthracite coal, which is a more heating coal than that which I speak of, which is bituminous or gas coal. The anthracite is used for water gas, and it is simply to heat the retorts.

Mr. KYLE. How does the Senator explain the difference between 46 cents a thousand and $1.15?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will explain it, I suspect, like the Senator's friend did. He said that by the process he wished to introduce in the District they were selling gas in Louisville at 35 cents. "Well," it was said, "how is that? That is mighty cheap." "Oh, well," he said, "part of it is natural gas, and that we mix with what we make; and we do not distribute it at all. We sell it at 35 cents a thousand to a company that already has mains in Louisville for the purpose of distribution."

Mr. KYLE. How does the Senator explain about Philadelphia? There they have no natural gas. A private company there furnishes gas to the city in the holder at 37 cents.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is pure water gas.

Mr. KYLE. Of course.

Mr. FAULKNER. They furnish it for a certain price; I do not know exactly what.

Mr. KYLE. Thirty-seven cents.

Mr. FAULKNER. They furnish it for 37 cents in the holder, and then all the cost of distribution comes on the city.

Mr. KYLE. Twelve to fourteen cents.

Mr. FAULKNER. Whatever that is we do not know. Nobody, even the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, has been able to get behind the records of the common council of Philadelphia and to find out what the fact is in reference to that and other matters.

Mr. KYLE. The best experts put it as high as 28 cents.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is easy to guess.

Mr. KYLE. The Spooner committee granted 28 cents, and then it only made the price of gas 64 cents.

Mr. FAULKNER. An expert's opinion is the expression of the opinion of a man who is familiar with the process or science as to which he is testifying. In other words, he is making a guess without any practical test whether his guess is right or whether it is wrong. It is like the friend of my distinguished friend the Senator from South Dakota, who came here two winters ago asking us to grant similar privileges to this same corporation. He testified before us that it had the finest process that had ever been devised for reduction in the price of gas. The same gentleman came before us this year with the same bill, but he says he found that the process of two years ago is of no account. "But we have now adopted another process which we know is all right." In other words, it was a guess by our friends, the experts, and when they try to put their process of two years ago into operation, which the Senator was seeking to have introduced here, and 400 miles of street torn up to experiment with it, they demonstrate the fact that they made a mistake.

There is another question here to which I wish to allude. I should like to get on to this branch of the question and settle it. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] takes up the report made by the House committee in this matter, and it shows an enormous amount of profit realized by this company. He says they distributed $600,000 of dividends of the earnings of last year.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not say that.

Mr. FAULKNER. What did the Senator say?

Mr. GEORGE. I said they distributed $600,000 last year.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think if the Senator will notice his remarks in the RECORD to-morrow he will find that it was of the earnings of last year.

Mr. GEORGE. I said they distributed $600,000 last year, and then I went on to show it was not all from earnings and to show exactly what it was.

Mr. FAULKNER. We investigated that, and we found that a part of it was from the sale of bonds which had been in the hands of the company for years, and that the remainder of it had been little accumulations running over twelve years, and they therefore distributed last year more than we think is a fair amount to allow them by $400,000, but it was through the sale of these bonds, which were their own. I do not mean that they issued bonds and sold them. But in years past they had bought some bonds, and they sold those bonds last year, and then from little dribs of accumulations for the last twelve years this amount was received.

I say you can take that report, and I venture the assertion that I am correct, because the committee examined it thoroughly before they passed upon the bill, and if you reduce the price of gas to $1.15, taking as the basis of the calculation the returns of last year, and allow a dividend of 10 per cent simply upon the $2,000,000 of capital stock, it leaves the surplus for that year for all contingencies $14,903.21.

Gentlemen who are not engaged in these large undertakings involving science and also involving purchases from monopolies can not conceive what threatens these companies at all times. The contract for naphtha and oil expires on the 1st day of July or the 1st day of June, I do not remember which, and the Standard Oil Company, the exclusive owners and sellers of these oils, raised the price upon this company aggregating $38,500 a year on the single item alone. They raised the price; and within thirty days another contract has been signed for two years increasing the cost in the manufacture of gas in the District just exactly by that amount for the next year.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the statement made by the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FAULKNER. I said that the contract being about to expire for naphtha and the Standard Oil Company controlling the entire output in this country it raised the price upon the company in Washington, so that the contract they entered into within the last thirty days increased the cost of the production of gas actually $38,500, based on the output of last year.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that stated in the report of the committee anywhere?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. GEORGE. How did the Senator get the fact?

Mr. FAULKNER. I got the fact by a letter addressed to the committee, which was not put into the hearing.

Mr. GEORGE. From whom?

Mr. FAULKNER. From Mr. McLean, president of the company, who stated that he has signed a contract to that effect. I want to say to Senators here that no one who has come in contact with John R. McLean in the investigation of this question will hesitate for one moment to say for him that he has done everything to give the committee information, to throw his books wide open to their investigation, so that they could reach a fair, proper, just, and equitable conclusion on the subject. A more honorable, straightforward, thorough business man it has never been my pleasure to come in contact with than Mr. McLean, and he has attempted to conceal nothing from the investigation of the committee.

I want to state frankly how I arrive at the conclusion which I announce here, as it differs with that arrived at by my friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. One vital error in all his calculations is that he takes a balance of last year's proceedings into this year's. When you want to find out how a company is doing you do not ascertain how much they have on hand. You ascertain what were the receipts for last year; what were its disbursements properly chargeable to that year. That is the way to ascertain what the profits were on the year's work, and it is the only way you can ascertain it.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me show the Senator that he is wrong.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator can not show me.

Mr. GEORGE. How does the Senator know I can not?

Mr. FAULKNER. Simply because I am acting upon a good common-sense business principle which any man, it seems to me, ought to recognize.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator will allow me to make a statement to show how absolutely wrong he is?

Mr. FAULKNER. Oh, yes.

Mr. GEORGE. The cash on hand, after all disbursements, at the end of the year was $89,000. In order to be fair with the company, I took from the company the cash they started with. I think that is fair.

Mr. FAULKNER. The receipts, as shown by the House report, were $1,583,808.18. To show here yearly receipts, deduct the following items: Balance January 1, 1893, $58,166.53; interest on sinking fund, $19,758.89; sale of bonds, $368,666.75. It aggregates $446,589.17, leaving——

Mr. GEORGE. What is the second item?

Mr. FAULKNER. Interest on sinking fund. The Senator did not deduct that amount.

Mr. GEORGE. Interest on what?

Mr. FAULKNER. Sinking fund.

Mr. GEORGE. Nineteen thousand dollars?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes; $19,758.89.

Mr. GEORGE. They charged $72,000 for interest, and I supposed when they charged $72,000 interest paid out, they ought to be credited with $19,000 they received.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator is mistaken in his accounting. He is a distinguished jurist.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not such an accountant as is the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course not.

Mr. GEORGE. Because the Senator counts it all in favor of the company.

Mr. FAULKNER. We will see if I do. I have taken out items in disbursements that the Senator did not deduct, as he will see when he comes to it. Gentlemen do not understand that when you receive interest from a sinking fund that interest and that fund are sacred. The interest is applied to reinvestment for the sinking fund, and therefore does not enter into the actual receipts or disbursements of the company as showing the business of the year.

Mr. GEORGE. It does not say interest on sinking fund.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is what it is.

Mr. GEORGE. How does the Senator know?

Mr. FAULKNER. Because I have investigated it.

Mr. GEORGE. Here, Mr. President, is the account made out by the company. The company show they received as interest $19,758; and they show that they paid for interest $72,000. If one is charged, the other ought to be, I should think.

Mr. FAULKNER. Oh, no. That fund is a special fund. It is the sinking fund to discharge a liability and is looked to by the holders of these obligations. They have $250,000 in the fund.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think it is very material whether it is a sinking fund or anything else; but there is no evidence before the Senate that it is a sinking fund.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is my evidence, Mr. President.

Mr. GEORGE. How does the Senator know it?

Mr. FAULKNER. I assert it is a fact that it is the interest on the sinking fund.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator is a witness in the case I should like to cross-examine him.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am a witness. I am a witness for the District of Columbia Committee; what I have heard there and what I have ascertained from my investigation is subject to the demand of the Senate or its members at any time.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator a question. Has the company a bonded debt?

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it has; and naturally it has a sinking fund.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it pay interest on it?

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it does.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the $19,000 interest on bonded debt?

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course not. It is the interest on what they have invested for its discharge.

Mr. GEORGE. In making out their statement they do not take any notice of the interest on the sinking fund.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator himself just stated to the Senate that they took account of $72,000.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean as receipts.

Mr. FAULKNER. They take account of it as interest paid on bonded indebtedness. In the receipts they put it in because the committee called upon them for every item of receipts and disbursements of every character and description, whether they were receipts for the year's work or any other sort, and they made a complete exhibit of every dollar of receipts—from whatever source it was derived—or disbursements as paid by the company, that Congress might investigate and ascertain the facts as plainly as any member of that corporation could in the examination of its books.

Take the disbursements. In the House report the disbursements are put at $1,583,808.18. Deducting extraordinary expenses and balance, included in the report, the balance is $89,992.38. Purchase of property, $100,000. The Senator from Mississippi has not deducted that in his statement, and yet that is an extraordinary expense that ought not to be charged at all to the disbursements during the year.

Mr. GEORGE. What is that?

Mr. FAULKNER. One hundred thousand dollars for the purchase of property.

Mr. GEORGE. I took that out.

Mr. FAULKNER. I did not hear the item.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator did not pay attention to what I was saying.

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, I did. It may have been because some one diverted my attention at the time.

Mr. GEORGE. That is for what property?

Mr. FAULKNER. That is what they bought from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the item you are speaking of?

Mr. FAULKNER. I think that is the only piece of property they bought—the Chesapeake and Ohio wharf.

Mr. GEORGE. I took that out.

Mr. FAULKNER. All right. Dividends in excess of 10 per cent, $400,000. Those items aggregate $589,992.38, leaving a disbursement for expenses during the year by the company of $993,815.80.

Receipts from year's earnings	$1,137,219.01
Disbursements from year's earnings	993,815.80
Receipts over expenditures	143,403.21
With a reduction to one-dollar gas	225,000.00
Surplus last year	143,403.21
If, therefore, you reduce to one-dollar gas the deficit in the company's receipts for last year would be	81,596.79

Now, the surplus last year was		$143,403.21
Reduced to $1.15	$90,000
Increased cost of naphtha	38,500
		128,500.00
Which shows a surplus, at $1.15 per 1,000 feet, of		14,903.21

Now, that is what the report shows if you bring it down to $1.15 per thousand for the first year. So the committee, after an investigation of all these questions in all their ramifications, said, "This matter must be settled. We must agree on something." And although there were some opposing a reduction at all, and some in favor of dollar gas, they said, "We will do the best we can; we will report a bill that will ultimately reduce the cost to $1 if it is possible to do so in the light of future events. We will make the law so that if the company desires to change before it is reduced to dollar gas they will have to come to Congress and show by the most conclusive proof that can be produced that they can not furnish gas at that rate and make a fair profit for an enterprise of that hazard."

So we agreed on this proposition. We raised all the other requirements. What will be the additional cost to the company in making 2 or 3 candlepower extra I do not know and never heard it stated. The committee came to the conclusion that to accomplish this purpose and relieve Congress of the controversy we would bring in this report and test the correctness of our conclusions by actual experiment.

There is one other point to which I wish to call the attention of my friend the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], especially as he has discussed that question, and I think it is well for the whole Senate, especially those Senators who are looking forward to voting on the appropriation bill, to remember it. This bill does not apply to or affect the question to which I shall refer, as that is controlled by the annual appropriations. The proposition is in reference to street lighting in this city. The cost of gas for street lamps is $20.50 a lamp. Now, I want to say to the Senator from South Dakota that that is the lowest price for street lighting in the United States with the exception of two cities—Allegheny and Cleveland. The cost of lighting lamps is lower in the city of Washington than it is in any other city in the United States, except the cities named, where the coal is far cheaper.

In order to contrast the price of street lamps in this city and in other cities, we must know what amount of gas the street lamps are contracted to burn. If they burn only 3 feet of gas an hour, then you can not contrast the lamps with a city where under the contract the lamps are required to burn 6 feet an hour. In other words, when you want to contrast the cost of lighting in this city with that of any other city, you must find out whether the other city requires the company to furnish 18,000 feet of gas per lamp per year for the same price the company does here.

I assert that the lowest price for street lamps in any city in the United States, except those two, is in the city of Washington, and that is calculated on furnishing gas at $20.50 per lamp. Do you know, sir, that that is not what is paid for gas here? The actual pay for gas in this city is only $15.94 for 18,000 feet of gas a year.

The Commissioners of the District report to the District Committee that under the appropriations here the gas company have to clean and keep in repair and in perfect condition all the lamp posts, and that after a most thorough investigation they have ascertained the cost of keeping them in repair is $4.56 a post. Consequently the actual cost of gas to the city of Washington for its street lamps is only $15.94 for 18,000 feet of gas per year. It is really below Allegheny and Cleveland, the only two cities that are lower, based on the other calculation.

We have examined every question involved in the controversy very thoroughly, and I do not think there is any point which we have not investigated in the interest of both the consumers and the gas company, and this bill is the final conclusion of the District committee as a settlement of the matter, with the hopes of taking it out of legislation, where we are annoyed by it every year here. I sincerely hope, therefore, that it will be the pleasure of the Senate to adopt this bill; but before I take my seat I will state that I found in reading the bill this morning that there is an error on page 3. I call the attention of Senators to it. They will see that it is clearly an error. It is desired to reenact a law of June 23, 1874, and amend it, and instead of doing so they have used the language of that law, only that it is amended so as to read as follows:

> That from and after the 30th day of June, 1874, the illuminating power of the gas furnished by any gaslight company, person, or persons in the District of Columbia shall be equal to 24 candles.

It ought to be changed, and in line 10, page 3, the word "seventy-four" should be stricken out and "ninety-six" put in; so that the illuminating power of the gas after the 30th day of June, 1896, not 1874, shall be so and so.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from West Virginia will permit me, I should like to ask him a question. I notice that on page 23 of the District appropriation bill there is an amendment striking out the following provision of the bill as passed by the House:

> Provided, That all of said lamps shall burn every night, on the average, from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise.

And in lieu thereof is substituted the following by the Senate committee:

> And said lamps shall burn not less than three thousand hours per annum.

Is that a reduction, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is exactly the same.

Mr. WHITE. It is the same?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is the same. The provision is in the District appropriation bill, and it was for that reason that the Committee on Appropriations wanted the pending bill passed upon before we take up that bill. I ask that the amendment which I suggested be stated and acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, section 3, strike out "1874," and insert "1896."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to offer one more amendment from the committee, on page 4, section 4, and will then explain it. The question was suggested by the Senator from Texas. Section 4 provides—

> That any gas company or person placing a gas meter in service in the District of Columbia that has not been inspected, proved, and sealed, as provided for by the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," for each and every such violation of said act shall be subject to a penalty of $100, to be recovered before the proper tribunal of the District of Columbia.

That is the way the House sent the bill to the Senate. Since it has been reported we notice the fact that there was no discretion there, and, upon calling on the Washington Gas Light Company for an explanation of the subject, they stated to the committee that they have a call sometimes for as high as 150 meters a day, or within a day or two, and that, with the force now in the control of the office of the inspector of gas, they can not possibly test more than from 20 to 30 meters a day, so that if this provision is adopted without any modification of course they can not put meters in houses when demanded by people until they were sealed, and perhaps for a night or two the people in those houses would have to go without a meter. We have therefore drawn up the following amendment:

> Provided, That if the United States inspector of gas meters is unable, through press of business or any accidental cause, to test and inspect and seal meters proposed to be set, then the company shall be at liberty to place an unsealed gas meter on any premises, the same to be replaced by a sealed meter as soon as practicable.

I think the latter part of the amendment had better be modified so as to read "as soon as a sealed meter can be procured from the inspector."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLEN. Why not fix a certain time?

Mr. FAULKNER. Suppose, for example, that to-day 50 meters are demanded. They could put 30 in, and to-morrow they would be able to put the other 20 in. There would be no excuse for not doing it; but if there were 150 to be put in they would have two or three days to do it in. I do not want to put in any limitation that would not work practically.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to participate in this particularly interesting discussion, although I suggest that the language of the amendment is very indefinite. Why not say within twenty-four, thirty, or forty-eight hours, fixing a time within which the meter shall be placed in the house?

Mr. FAULKNER. I thought the modification which I suggested limited the company more than the original amendment would, because I think they ought to be required to put the sealed meter there just as soon as the inspector of gas meters, who is a Federal official, shall be able to deliver them unsealed, if it is only for twelve hours.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest that the amendment be supplemented with a provision "not later than" such and such a time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have no objection to the modification. Say, forty-eight hours.

Mr. ALLEN. Forty-eight hours, or some particular time.

Mr. FAULKNER. Or, not to exceed thirty-six hours.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the latter part of the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4 add to section 4 the following proviso:

> Provided, That if the United States inspector of gas meters is unable through press of business or any accidental cause to test and inspect and seal meters proposed to be set, then the company shall be at liberty to place an unsealed gas meter on any premises, the same to be replaced by a sealed meter as soon as sealed meters can be procured from the inspector.

Mr. ALLEN. "Not later than forty-eight hours."

Mr. FAULKNER. Let the amendment be so modified. I think that makes it more practical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, a little from me will clear up the mist which the Senator from West Virginia throws around this account. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the account, and I will have to read some of the items so that the Senate may understand how it is made out. It is the account of the transactions of the company for a year. Coal is the first item of disbursement. That is expense. Then oil; then coal again; wages; then taxes; then United States inspectors; new laboratories; water rent; expense of law, and insurance. By the way, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that item of insurance, $2,290, especially as the Senator from New Hampshire said that they could not get insurance on gas plants. Lime and purifying materials; rent; repair of street lamps; distribution; dividends; interest on bonds; employees' relief association; then the extension of work.

Now, with the disbursements, there is a credit to the company for the disbursement of $72,000 extra.

On the other side, the receipts, the interest is $19,000. In making an accurate account of the transactions of the company on gas, both items, the $72,000 and the $19,000, ought to have been excluded, but in order to be fair to the company I will let them both stand, which makes in favor of the company $52,241.11. Then they have credit for a disbursement of $72,000 when they were only charged with $19,000, so that so far as the difference is concerned the way I have worked it out is in favor of the company. I saw it at the time, but in order to be fair to the company I let them both stand, the $72,000 as paid out and the $19,000 as received. Every man can see that I am right about that.

I do not believe that the Senator from West Virginia took any exception to any other point I made except the one that I have before explained. He said the balance from the last year ought not to have been brought into this account. Possibly it ought not, but then there was brought into it the balance remaining at the end of the year. They started out with a balance of cash of $52,000. They ended with a balance of cash of $89,000. If we strike out both, as the Senator said, it would be against the company. I let them both stand.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I shall say only a few words in closing.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has replied to the remarks I made on Saturday and on to-day, but I do not see anything in his speech that is really in the line of argument. I do not know that he made clearly one point. In fact, I do not see how a Senator who has made a magnificent report upon the other side could make a good speech upon the side of the gas company. I was glad to hear the Senator from Mississippi read from this report of the Senator. He then argued very logically and strongly that the people of the city should have dollar gas, but now he turns around and informs the Senate that the only complainants on the outside are "unthinking" people of this city.

I want to ask him whether the citizens of the city who appeared before the committee during the past year are unthinking men? I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether men like William C. Dodge, of the city of Washington, one of the finest patent lawyers in the United States, is an unthinking man? And I should like to ask him why it was that William C. Dodge did not appear before the District of Columbia Committee this year and give his testimony? I understand that Mr. Dodge appeared before the committee ten years ago and showed himself one of the best-posted men in the world upon the subject of gas. He is a patent lawyer of thirty or forty years' experience, and knows the ins and outs of every piece of machinery that has been introduced during that time in the line of gas. This I know, and yet I believe when he applied this winter as a citizen of the District of Columbia to give his testimony before that committee he was refused. He is one of the "unthinking men" of the city of Washington, who, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, are making complaints about $1.25 gas.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator restate the statement he just made as to who was refused a hearing before the committee?

Mr. KYLE. William C. Dodge.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes. Well, I will call the attention of the Senate, when the Senator gets through, to the fact that William C. Dodge has given us a great many hours of information.

Mr. KYLE. I presume he has at times; but I do not know that he did during the recent hearings. Everything that Mr. Dodge has given, let me say to the Senate, embodied in the report of ten years ago, of which Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, was chairman, is the most valuable testimony on the subject ever presented to this body. Now, there are other "unthinking" men. I have a pocketful of letters from intelligent men of the city. Here is one from a most distinguished physician. I presume physicians are "unthinking men."

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of them are.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator probably knows who are the "unthinking" men in the city when he makes such remarks as he made a little while ago.

Mr. President, I listened very carefully to the argument made by the Senator from New Hampshire. About all he was able to give in the way of argument was a list of cities in the United States that charged more for gas than does the city of Washington. Why, a small boy can see there is not a particle of argument in that. Of course there may be hundreds of cities that charge more than is charged in the city of Washington, but it proves nothing whatever, except that they have been more exorbitant in their charges than they are here. But when we show you numbers of cities in the United States and scores of them abroad that charge a great deal less than they do in the city of Washington, then it is incumbent upon you to prove that our statements are wrong and that gas can not be furnished at a less price than it is furnished in the city of Washington. When we put before the Senate, as we have done to-day, the testimony of the best experts in the United States that gas can be produced for as low as 35 cents a thousand in the holder, as low as 46 cents to the consumer, then it becomes incumbent upon you to prove that it can not be done in the city of Washington at that price, or at certainly less than $1.25.

I listened very carefully to the evidence given by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. I waited for his explanation of the fact that these experts before the Spooner investigation proved that gas could be furnished for 35.8 cents per thousand, and how it was that Harrisburg gas is furnished for 46 cents a thousand, and how he could explain away the statement of the president of the Washington Gas Company, who said that gas could be furnished for 85 cents a thousand and still make 15 cents a thousand upon it, I believe. These statements were within reach of the Senator from West Virginia. He turns them off in a very smooth sort of a way and says that these experts are merely theorists as to the price of gas. I should like to know how the Senate of the United States is to be informed as to the probable cost of a thousand cubic feet of gas unless it be by experts.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will tell the Senator from South Dakota, if he will permit me.

Mr. KYLE. Very well.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let him take the amount of disbursements and receipts by the company. Let him see whether he can eliminate any item of disbursement. If he can not, then he must admit they are correct and proper charges against the assets of the company. Then let him take the disbursements and divide into two the amount of the product of the gas made by the company and sold, and he will find exactly, without any expert testimony, what is the actual cost of the gas to the particular company. That is the only practical way that I know how to get at it. That will give it to a cent.

Mr. KYLE. As to the price at which gas may be furnished in particular places we have the testimony of experts. They are not theoretical men, as the Senator would seem to indicate by his remarks a little while ago, but Mr. Vanderpoel, I presume, is known to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] before me now. Mr. Vanderpoel, the engineer, is in charge of the gas works at Newark, Del. He is one of the most distinguished experts, acknowledged to be so by the Washington Gas Light Company. They had him summoned here to the investigation ten years ago. He stated to the committee that he put into the holder gas at a cost of 35.8 cents a thousand. He is not a theoretical man, but a man who is doing the work. He knew what it was to put the gas in the holder. So with the man who testifies that he ran the gas works up here at Harrisburg, Pa. He was doing the work, and putting it into the retorts and furnishing it to the consumer at 46 cents.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly, if I can hear on this side what the Senator says.

Mr. SEWELL. Does the Senator refer to Newark, Del., or Newark, N. J.?

Mr. KYLE. I think it is in Delaware. Did I say New Jersey?

Mr. SEWELL. There is a distinguished gentleman of that name connected with the Newark gas works in my State. If you would ask him what the charge would be for gas under those circumstances he would tell you $1.50 per thousand.

Mr. KYLE. I did not catch what the Senator from New Jersey said, but I presume——

Mr. SEWELL. I say if you ask that gentleman, Mr. Vanderpoel, what he would charge for gas he would, no doubt, say $1.50.

Mr. KYLE. It must be Newark, N. J., then, I presume. This testimony he gives in the article written for the American Gas Light Journal, where the whole question is discussed as to the cost of producing a thousand cubic feet of gas. All Senators have a copy of the report of the Spooner investigation on their desks, and I think it would be well for them to read it. This gentleman, Mr. Vanderpoel, in the American Gas Light Journal of January 2, 1880, made a complete statement, giving the items of material used in the production of gas. He gives the cost of the coal, and in order to be on the safe side he puts the coal at $5.50 a ton, when it is selling, I believe, at only about $4 a ton in the city of Washington.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator read the article?

Mr. KYLE. It is a long statement. Here is the closing up: The cost per thousand is 35.8 cents placed in the holder. We must add to that, of course, in order to get the correct cost of a thousand feet of gas, the cost of distribution. The best experts in the United States testify that the cost of distribution is 40 per cent of the cost of production. That is 12 or 14 cents. When this matter was before the investigating committee in 1886 there were many experts who testified as to the cost of distribution. One man stated that the cost was 28 cents and a fraction, but the committee go on to say that Colonel McCartney testifies that the usual cost is 18 cents, and Colonel McCartney is an expert. But in order to give them the benefit of all the doubt they add the 28 cents to the original cost, which makes it 64.6 cents per thousand as the actual cost in the city of Washington.

Mr. President, after finding that 64.6 cents is the cost delivered in the burner of the consumer, we must add a small amount in order to insure just dividends to those who own the stock. That is all there is of it. Now, the question comes as to whether we are unjust to the widows and orphans the Senator from New Hampshire is talking so much about; whether we are taking bread from the mouths of the widows and orphans who are the innocent holders of this stock in the District of Columbia. If the statements are true as set forth in the newspaper editorials during the past year and as indicated in the report read by the Senator from Mississippi a short time ago, that during the year 1895 this company declared in dividends 30 per cent, we are not taking bread out of the mouths of anyone if we cut the price of gas down to $1 per thousand. As the Senator from Mississippi has well remarked, the several committees that have investigated this subject thoroughly, the investigating committee of ten years ago, of which Mr. Spooner was chairman; the one of two years ago, of which Mr. Hurd of Missouri was the chairman; the committee of last year in the Senate, of which the Senator from New Hampshire was one, all declared that there should be dollar gas in the District of Columbia.

Now, I do not know, as I said a while ago, how we are going to arrive at this conclusion unless it be by the testimony of experts, those men who have been instrumental in producing gas in the other great cities of the United States and throughout the world; and I think when you have read through the testimony carefully as given in this report, you will come to the conclusion, as I have done, that the price of gas can very easily be reduced to $1 per thousand and still leave them fully 18 or 20 per cent in the way of dividends.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I have been called upon for many years last past to examine the balance sheets of some of the largest corporations in this country, and in that way I have become accustomed to and can perhaps more readily scan the balance sheet of a great corporation than most men who have not had the same experience.

I knew nothing about this issue of the price of gas in the District of Columbia until my attention was arrested by the debate of to-day and by the reference to the items in this balance sheet for the year 1895 as referred to first by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and again by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. But as an attorney who has had much to do with the affairs of great corporations and who has made an examination of a great number of balance sheets of great corporate transactions, I confess that I was startled this afternoon when I came to scan the balance sheet of the business operations of this gas company for the year 1895. I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to some of the figures on either side of this balance sheet.

The cash receipts of that company for the year 1895 were $1,583,808.18. That was all for their charges for gas and for other items of proper receipts, except cash on hand at the beginning of the year, $58,166.53; secondly, the sale of bonds, $368,663.75. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is right in insisting that the interest receipts of nineteen thousand and some odd dollars that the company received from interest on bonds held in its sinking fund should remain upon the credit side of that ledger, because the interest account of that company on its bonded indebtedness proper, stated as it would be by any other corporation, is to take its entire bonds outstanding, $1,200,000 in amount, the interest on which is paid at 6 per cent, $72,000, and deducting from that the amount of interest it received from bonds in its treasury to the credit of that outstanding total indebtedness.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, nobody doubts where that fund ought to be in the receipts and disbursements; but that does not go to show anything at all as to the receipts of the company and the work of the company in the manufacture of gas during that year.

Mr. THURSTON. It only goes to show that the total derived from the comparisons of the two sides of this ledger will be accurate by leaving both of those items standing.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course that would be so if you were simply getting at receipts and disbursements during the year; but I say it is not correct to put that in any more than to put in the charge of $100,000 for the purchase of property at Georgetown from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. But that would not enable us to ascertain what the cost to the company was in the manufacture of gas, taking the receipts and the disbursements of the company, during that year.

Mr. THURSTON. The interest payment of that company last year was not $72,000; it was $72,000 less $19,000. That was its real interest payment, and there is no question about it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator, who seems to have charge of great corporations and understands these things thoroughly, when a great corporation, such as he has been connected with, sets aside a certain amount for a sinking fund, and that amount is bearing interest, whether the amount derived from that sinking fund is not reinvested the subsequent year so as to increase the aggregate of the interest-bearing fund and increase the surplus fund to meet the obligations of the company?

Mr. THURSTON. Unquestionably; but it ought to be taken into account as a part of the earnings of the company, and the real interest payment of the company is the total interest payment, less the amount of earned interest on the bonds in the sinking fund standing against the total outstanding bonded indebtedness.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand the Senator agrees with me that that is the way in which that is done; that the company reinvest that interest, which does not reduce the amount of $72,000 of the bonded indebtedness at all. It is paid out of the receipts of the company regardless of what they receive on the bonds which are in the sinking fund.

Mr. THURSTON. The sinking fund of this company is provided for, I presume, out of the surplus earnings, after paying whatever dividends the company may decide to pay, and therefore, if this company, instead of applying upon its $72,000 annual interest the $19,000 of interest it receives from the sinking fund, reinvests it, and adds it to its sinking fund, it is not thereby entitled to charge as against these earnings the $72,000 unless it also includes as a part of its earnings the $19,000 on the other side of the ledger.

Taking that report, Mr. President, we find the annual statement for 1895, as I think, the most remarkable corporate earnings statement which was ever presented for the examination of the American public. Fifty-eight thousand and some odd dollars was the cash on hand at the beginning of 1895; eighty-nine thousand and some odd dollars was the cash on hand at the end of the year. Therefore the cash on hand has increased thirty-one thousand and some odd dollars in the year. That company paid out $600,000 in dividends on a capital stock of $2,000,000. That is 30 per cent dividend on its entire capital stock for that year. That dividend was paid out of the earnings of 1895, with the exception of one item on the credit side of that ledger. The company received from the sale of bonds three hundred and sixty-eight thousand and some odd dollars, and the Senator says, and probably with justice, that that amount should be deducted from the $600,000 paid out as dividend in order to ascertain the real amount that was paid out as dividends on $2,000,000 of stock. I challenge the Senator to find in this entire side of the ledger another item which can fairly be offset to reduce the amount of that dividend payment for 1895, and deducting that from the $600,000 paid in dividends, there was paid as dividends out of the earnings of that year two hundred and thirty-one thousand and some odd dollars; and there was left a balance on hand at the end of the year, as I have shown, of $31,000 more than there was at the beginning of the year; and the surplus earnings, without changing any item on the debtor side of that ledger, were two hundred and sixty-two thousand and odd dollars for the year 1895, a profit at least of 13 and a fraction per cent out of the transactions of that year.

But that is not all, Mr. President. I know something about what can fairly be charged as against the earnings of the company in the way of operating expenses. The debtor side of this ledger not only charges all operating expenses, but out of the earnings of last year there has been invested in a permanent purchase—not an operating expense—$100,000 for the purchase of a wharf and other property here in the city. There has also gone to the extension of the plant in the way of street mains and new improvements almost another $100,000—about $90,000—and that real ledger account stands this way—and no man can challenge it in my judgment—that that company earned $362,000 profit, and in addition invested in permanent betterments and improvements $190,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the gas company spends $100,000 on the extension of mains, or $50,000, as the case may be, is it not the fact that the deterioration in existing improvements equals that amount?

Mr. THURSTON. Ah, Mr. President, all the expenses of keeping up that plant, the same as in a railroad company, are found in the items on the other side of the ledger year after year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but there must be a constant deterioration.

Mr. THURSTON. There undoubtedly is; but that constant deterioration is provided for in the operating expenses of every year. These items of investment I have pointed out are extensions; they are not in the way of repairs; they are enlargements of the plant; they are increasing it for future increase of business. Not only did that company earn, according to their own ledger, a clear profit of $452,000 in addition to paying their interest on $2,000,000 capital, but what else? Where did they get the $368,000 of bonds that they sold and that I have excluded from this comparative statement of mine? I do not know, but I can hazard a guess. Whatever bonds that company had to sell are the purchases from the profits of previous years over and above the annual allotment of dividends to their shareholders, and I venture to state that the representatives of this gas company will not contend that there has been any year for the past ten or fifteen or twenty years when they failed to pay a good, liberal, profitable investment upon their capital stock. Therefore, if in addition to the payment of liberal dividends upon their capital stock they had additional surpluses to invest in interest-bearing bonds, which they in the year 1895 sell and distribute to their stockholders, it follows as a matter of course that the annual average dividend that the stockholders of this company have received on their stock is actually increased by this distribution to them of $368,000 additional in the year 1895.

From an examination of that account it seems to me that it is capable of mathematical demonstration that no loss can come to this company by putting the price of gas in the District of Columbia at $1 per thousand feet. Not only that, but I insist that you never can fairly determine by the method that this company has used what will be the result upon earnings by a reduction of the amount that it is permitted to charge. Railroads in this country, ever since the question of legislation has been presented affecting their right to charge tolls, have always met every attempt at legislative reduction of their tariffs by elaborately prepared statements, showing that if you apply the percentage of reduction proposed to the tariffs of next year on the basis of the last, great net loss would follow; but I stand here to insist that never once has that character of demonstration been proven true when the lower tariffs have been fixed and the business of the next year has gone upon the balance sheet; and I insist here to-day that no Senator on this floor can tell—human foresight can not tell from a comparison of the receipts of last year and the application of the percentage reduction proposed to the business of the next year in advance of the statement of that business—what the actual result will be.

Mr. President, there is no way to test this question except by reducing the price of gas in the District of Columbia now and taking account of the balance sheet at the end of the next year. Demonstrated facts will satisfy the people; theories never can.

I insist that there is enough of a surplus remaining in the treasury of this company or in the pockets of its stockholders out of their extravagant and unreasonable profits for the last few years so that they can well afford, if such be the result, to receive a little lower dividends on the transactions of the coming year, and when this price of $1 per thousand feet has been applied and has been tested by a year's experience, will not the Congress of the United States then be better prepared to legislate upon this question and do justice to this interest if it has been wronged than it is now to foreclose the rights of the people of this District, to take this unjustifiable charge out of their pockets and put it where the remedial legislation of Congress can never restore it to the people?

Mr. President, as a straight business proposition based on that balance sheet, which, I say, is one of the most extraordinary balance sheets that has ever been made public in the United States, I insist that this company ought to accept at once and now the one-dollar rate for gas, and let it be demonstrated by the balance sheets at the end of the next year if they have not received a fair return upon their capital.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this question, which has already developed more illuminating power than any gas standard with which I am familiar. I merely want to state in two or three minutes how the question presented itself to the committee.

At the last session there were one or more applications for the charter of new gas companies, the promoters promising 75-cent gas. The committee did not believe in the chartering of these companies. They questioned somewhat the possibility of so cheap a production, and they considered that an old company, with a good plant and mains, could certainly furnish gas cheaper than a new company that had all this expense to make, and that the result would be that the gas consumers finally, instead of paying a fair interest on the plant that was already in existence, would have to support two plants, for the history of these competing companies all over the country has been that they do not compete for a long time, but that they combine, and the consumer has to pay an increased price in consequence.

At that session I favored a reduction in the price of gas by the old company and proposed a reduction to one and one-eighth. At the present session I earnestly favored dollar gas; but after very full hearings—and I wish to state that I think all parties had, as they always have, a fair hearing in that committee—and considering the rights of stockholders, that many of them had invested recently and at a high price, the committee unanimously agreed upon this sliding scale, which will bring the price of gas to the consumer to a dollar within five years. I believe it was a fair compromise of conflicting interests.

I am not inclined to question the figures of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. He is experienced in sinking funds, as he has dealt with railroads, as all stockholders know to their sorrow [laughter]; but there have been great changes in the stock of the Washington Gas Light Company, and there are many stockholders who invested recently at a high price. So the committee were finally unanimous in their opinion that this was a fair arrangement; and I certainly hope the Senate will ratify it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word before this discussion closes, which I trust may be very soon. I was occupied during a portion of the time that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] was addressing himself to me. I therefore did not hear all he said. I did catch the statement that I at some time during my service here had advocated dollar gas in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KYLE. Last year in the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not dispute that. I would simply say in reply that so far as I know there is only one animal in the world who never changes his mind, and I do not belong to that class. I have changed my mind on the subject of gas in the District of Columbia. I changed it, as I stated a moment ago, after listening to arguments from men who knew a great deal more about this matter than I do and after being persuaded that my position last year was not a correct one.

Mr. President, we have had eloquence that I have enjoyed, both from the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], on the gas question, but it is a remarkable fact that, according to Brown's Directory for the year 1892, the people of South Dakota are paying an average of $2.20 per thousand feet for gas in that State. In the State of Nebraska they are paying $1.90 per thousand feet. It may be that those Senators representing States in which a much higher price is charged for gas than is being charged to-day in the District of Columbia, not taking into account the reduction we propose, are better qualified to judge of this matter than the committee which gave those patient hearings and which have conscientiously tried to reach a wise conclusion.

The committee did not confine itself to unthinking people. I do not mean to say, and I trust I did not say (the RECORD will speak for itself), that all the people of the District who were clamoring for dollar gas are unthinking people. My judgment is that there is a great deal of misinformation on this subject in the District. If there is any place on the face of God's green earth which contains a population with so large a proportion of chronic grumblers and kickers as the District of Columbia I have never come across it. We were beset in the District of Columbia, I think, three years ago to appropriate for a contagious-diseases hospital in the District, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have been trying from that day to the present to locate that hospital, and they have been unable to do so because of the grumblers and kickers in the District of Columbia. That it is true of everything else we have undertaken to do for the people of the District of Columbia. It is impossible to satisfy them in regard to these matters, and so in the matter of gas I say there have been a great many unthinking men who have without accurate knowledge said that the gas company can furnish gas at $1 a thousand, and who have insisted that it was true without knowing the real facts in the case.

We called before our committee some of the wisest and most qualified experts this country affords. Among those experts was Mr. William Henry White, a gas engineer of New York City, a man who has a national and international reputation as a gas engineer, who has established gas plants, who has been educated in the business, and who has the most accurate possible information on this question. Mr. White had no interest in this matter. He has studied the Washington gas plant as he has studied every other gas plant in the United States, and here is what he says about it:

Now, gentlemen, I hold that it is impossible for the Washington Gas Light Company to make gas and sell it in the city of Washington and make a reasonable profit upon it at $1 per thousand.

Washington is a city which is peculiarly situated. It pays more than the usual prices for all its materials. It is paying very liberal wages. It is a peculiar city in many respects. Washington, after all, may be looked upon somewhat in the light of our large summer resort cities on the Eastern coast. This city does a large business while Congress is in session. A great many people are here, the hotels are filled, the boarding houses are running over, and the stores are doing more or less business incident to this crowd. They concentrate in that part of the year a great portion of their business.

But so far as the Washington Gas Light Company is concerned the rest of the city has to be cared for just the same during the remainder of the year. This 300 miles of pipe has to be laid and cared for, so that everybody around the outer edges of the city can be supplied with gas. The standard here must be kept equally good during the remainder of the year. There is no letting down in the quality of the gas during the slack period.

This expert goes on to say:

I have studied this plant of the Washington Gas Light Company for a number of years. I have seen it grow from very small proportions. I know that it has always been the ambition of the management of this company to be in the forefront, not only as regards the character of its apparatus, but also as regards the character of light furnished and the treatment of the general public.

Mr. George McIlhenny, who was for many years chief engineer, and afterwards the president and engineer of this company, was one of the most distinguished men in our profession, and a gentleman of rare ability. This company was the pride and ambition of that man's useful life. There was nothing known in our profession that was not had in this company. Nothing existed elsewhere that he did not have when we were making nothing but coal gas. When we began to make use of the oil process Mr. McIlhenny was one of the first gentlemen in the field to take up the subject and carefully study it. He met, step by step, all the advances in our profession, until when these new works were built he embodied in that last plant, as a monument to him, the very latest and best ideas of our profession. It is one of the finest plants in the United States; and when I say that I mean the world; for we are as much ahead of our foreign friends in gas plants as we are in railroads. Mr. McIlhenny left here, at the time of his death, a plant which I am frank to say is second to none.

This company can make, and does make, as fine gas as any company in the world. The fact that there is a trifling difference between the illuminating power of the gas in New York City and the gas in Washington is so trifling that it is simply not worth talking about. In other words, if you fix the illuminating power at 24, as suggested by Professor Love, this company would be making it equal to 25 or 25½, as a matter of safety.

We fix it at 26 in the bill now under consideration. Mr. White goes on to say:

Of course they can sell gas at a dollar, if this Congress says they must; but it means the immediate cutting down of the wages of employees, the cutting out of every man they can possibly do without; it means hardship all along the line. The wages of the clerks must be reduced. They must buy materials at a lower grade. When extensions are made they will be made in a more penurious way. It means the absolute crippling of this enterprise all along the line. Therefore, I, as a man skilled in this work, both in construction and in the operation of gas works, having been closely associated with their management all my life, feel that here in Washington the Washington Gas Light Company can not afford to sell gas at a dollar and maintain a high standard of everything in connection with its business, although I believe in dollar gas and in high illuminating power.

That is the kind of testimony that persuaded me. That is the kind of testimony that caused me to change my mind and to conclude that if we could not have dollar gas for the next two years we ought to have $1.15 gas in the city of Washington. I am not qualified, as is the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], to go into the debit and credit statement made by the company and to technically and scientifically point out the various items, but it does seem to me that some items to which the Senator has called attention are not in the nature of permanent improvements. I take it that a gas company must necessarily construct new buildings, as this company have constructed new buildings, but they are to take the place of old ones. I take it they must necessarily lay new pipes, but they take the place of old pipes. I am not quite sure that this wharf has not taken the place of an old wharf. I have no accurate information on that point. But even if it be not true I have no information that the wharf will bring a dollar of added revenue to the company during the next two years, and so it seems to me that the Senator has been very technical in his elucidation of this very interesting debit and credit statement of the Washington Gas Light Company. I believe, and all the testimony that was before the committee led the committee to believe, that under ordinary circumstances the best that could be done and the fairest thing that could be done was to agree upon the bill that the committee has reported to the Senate.

The Senator from Nebraska says, "Let us give one-dollar gas and then find out whether the company can afford to furnish it or not, and if they can not afford to furnish it at that price we will give them further legislation next year." I have had very little to do with legislation concerning corporations, but I think it would be a novel principle to incorporate into a law. I think it would be a novel principle to compel a corporation to furnish its product at a price less than it can afford to furnish it, and when that is demonstrated and dividends are taken from innocent stockholders say they may come to Congress and ask that we shall legislate further to protect them from our own folly. I do not think that is wise legislation. I think it is wisdom to give the people $1.15 gas, which everybody concedes will enable the company to pay dividends, buy good material, lay down first-class lines, as they have always done, and pay as high wages as are paid anywhere in the United States, as they are paying to-day. If in another year we find that their credit sheet is too large, we can further reduce the price by legislation of the National Congress. I think that is the wise kind of legislation, and I trust that that is what Congress will do in reference to this matter.

Mr. KYLE. I offer an amendment before the vote is taken upon the other proposition. At the end of line 24, page 5, I move to add what I send to the desk. I have submitted it to the Senator from West Virginia and I think he will accept it without debate.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is satisfactory to me. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. KYLE. It is merely requiring a report to Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 24, page 5, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Washington Gas Light Company, through its president, shall make a full report to Congress annually on the 1st day of January, stating in detail the gross receipts and expenditures, the cost of materials used in making gas, the amount used and consumed, the dividends declared, the extensions and improvements made in the plant, the surplus and cash on hand, and how the surplus funds of the company are invested.

Mr. HARRIS. Are those reports made by the calendar year or by the fiscal year?

Mr. FAULKNER. The reports are made by the railroad companies on the 1st of January.

Mr. HARRIS. I speak of the gas company.

Mr. FAULKNER. The last report was to the 1st of January, and I suppose that is their fiscal year. I will state that we have a law now which requires a report of the coal only to the Secretary of the Interior; and as we do that in reference to other corporations in this city I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. KYLE. I hope we may get a vote on the bill this evening.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to say one word before the vote is taken.

Mr. President, as a member of the District Committee I was very earnestly in favor of fixing the rate at $1 for gas, and I think I can say with propriety that I was the last member of the committee to yield on that question. I did so, not because my opinion had been changed, but because I thought it was to the interest of the consumers that there should be an agreement on the part of the committee, and that something practical should come out of the matter. As I am in part responsible for that report, I feel it my duty to contribute what I can to sustain it. In view of my opinion and contemplated vote I feel it my duty to make this statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that the votes by which the amendments on pages 1 and 2 of the bill were agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to have the amendments reported.

Mr. FAULKNER. The amendments are very long. I will state to the Senator that one of them strikes out one-dollar gas and makes a sliding scale from $1.15 down to $1 in five years, applying to the Washington Gas Light Company, and the other makes a gradual sliding scale as to the Georgetown Company running from $1.50 down to $1.25.

Mr. KYLE. I wish we might divide the question and have the vote taken first on the motion to reconsider the first amendment. I do not care particularly about the other one.

Mr. HARRIS. It is divisible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to understand the parliamentary question. Is the amendment which it is proposed to reconsider the one making the price of gas $1.15?

Mr. KYLE. The motion is to reconsider the committee amendment which has been adopted for a sliding scale, adopted a few days ago.

Mr. NELSON. What is the amendment?

Mr. FAULKNER. The amendment is to reduce the price first to $1.15, then to $1.10, then to $1.05, and finally to $1.

Mr. KYLE. It has been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. We who want dollar gas want the vote reconsidered?

Mr. KYLE. We want to vote to reconsider it.
Mr. NELSON. That is right.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.
The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE]. I do not see him present. If he were present, I should vote "yea."
Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. He and I agree upon these questions, however, and I will vote. I vote "nay."
Mr. KYLE (when his name was called). I was requested to pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were present, I understand he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea" upon this proposition.
Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."
Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].
Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. On this vote I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] and vote "nay."
Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."
Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote.
Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with a distinct understanding with him that the pair is not to apply in any case which can in no wise be considered political. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."
Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].
The roll call was concluded.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I am generally paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], but I am informed that my pair has been transferred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I therefore vote "nay."
Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who has not voted. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and allow my vote to stand.
Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].
Mr. GEAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and vote "nay."
Mr. HANSBROUGH (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] and allow my vote to stand.
The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Allen,	Carter,	Pugh,	Vest,
Bate,	Chilton,	Teller,	White.
Berry,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Butler,	Peffer,	Turpie,

NAYS—31.

Allison,	Cockrell,	Gray,	Pritchard,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Hale,	Roach,
Baker,	Davis,	Hansbrough,	Sewell,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Harris,	Shoup,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Jones, Ark.	Squire,
Caffery,	Gear,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Chandler,	Gibson,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Clark,	Gorman,	Platt,

NOT VOTING—44.

Aldrich,	George,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Mantle,	Quay,
Brice,	Hawley,	Martin,	Sherman,
Burrows,	Hill,	Mills,	Smith,
Call,	Hoar,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Tillman,
Cameron,	Irby,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Cannon,	Jones, Nev.	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Murphy,	Walthall,
Dubois,	Lindsay,	Palmer,	Warren,
Elkins,	Lodge,	Pasco,	Wilson,
Frye,	McBride,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the Senate refused to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 2 was agreed to.
Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw the motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.
Mr. KYLE. I think it is very evident that the Senate does not wish to give the city dollar gas, and I withdraw all opposition to the amendments.
Mr. GRAY. That is right.
Mr. GALLINGER. That is generous.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.
The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.
The bill was read the third time, and passed.
Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.
The motion was agreed to.
By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GALLINGER were appointed.

ELLEN KINGSLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley, which was, in line 4, after the word "roll," to insert "at $8 per month."
Mr. SHOUP. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.
The motion was agreed to.

ELIZA SANFORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sanford, which was, in line 11, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve."
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.
The motion was agreed to.
By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. ROACH were appointed.

ELIZABETH J. COOK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 125) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Cook, of Arkadelphia, Clark County, Ark., widow of Robert T. Cook, which was, in line 10, to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."
Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.
The motion was agreed to.

MARY NEWMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman, which was, in line 10, to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve."
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.
The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL GOLDWATER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater, which was, in line 5, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve."
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.
The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELEANOR CARROLL POE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe; which was, in line 5, to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.
The motion was agreed to.
By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and Mr. BAKER were appointed.

HELEN M. JACOB.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacobs, which was, in line 9, to strike out "sixteen" and insert "twelve."
Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.
The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 2405) granting a pension to Maria Gibbons;

A bill (H. R. 2947) increasing the pension of Daniel D. Jennings, late of Company C, Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 3578) granting a pension to Elmira E. Dustin; and

A bill (H. R. 5946) granting an increase of pension to Abraham H. Parker.

MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 15,000 additional copies of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, Richardson's compilation, of which there shall be 5,000 copies for the Senate and 10,000 copies for the House of Representatives, to be distributed and disposed of, including the fraction in each case, as provided in the House joint resolution numbered 170, approved on the 30th day of April, 1896.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the District appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave to call up a bill.

Mr. TELLER. Let the appropriation bill be first taken up.

Mr. GEAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the District appropriation bill, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill proposing to pension General Parrott.

Mr. TELLER. Let the appropriation bill be laid aside informally.

Mr. GEAR. Very well. I ask that the appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, without objection.

GEN. JAMES C. PARROTT.

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the table the bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott.

The bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to state that General Parrott is nearly 81 years of age. He is confined to his bed and, in my judgment, will not live ninety days. It is proposed to pension him at the rate the medical board estimated, $50 per month. The bill passed the other House unanimously, and I am certain that it will pass the Senate. Therefore, I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James C. Parrott, late colonel of the Seventh Iowa Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 19, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate May 18, 1896.

POSTMASTER.

R. A. Freeman, to be postmaster at Burlington, in the county of Alamance and State of North Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 18, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

Your committee, having had under consideration House concurrent resolution No. 47, to print 15,000 additional copies of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, recommend that it be agreed to.

This compilation is by Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee, and all the members of the House are familiar with the work so far as it has been published.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of these additional copies at 75 cents per volume.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this compilation, as members know, is exceedingly valuable, and I desire to congratulate the committee on having reported the resolution so promptly. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is entitled to high commendation for the ability manifested in the preparation of this publication.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

REPORT ON THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another privileged report.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble, of date October 31, 1895, upon the Nicaragua Canal, together with all the appendixes, maps, plans, and profiles accompanying the same, as submitted by them; 6,000 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

Your committee, having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 245, to print 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble, of date October 31, 1895, upon the Nicaragua Canal, together with all the appendixes, maps, plans, and profiles accompanying the same, as submitted by them, recommend that the same be agreed to. The Public Printer estimates the cost at $15,325.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the two concurrent resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF COLONIAL DAMES.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Library, for immediate consideration, the bill which I send to the desk—House bill 8673, to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. Before the reading proceeds I wish to say that the names of the incorporators occupy about a page and a half of print. I suggest that time may be saved by omitting the reading of the names.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the names will be omitted in the reading.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Justine Van Rensselaer Townsend (Mrs. Howard Townsend), of New York; Elizabeth Duane Gillespie (Mrs. E. D. Gillespie), of Pennsylvania; Eleanore Kinsey Gordon (Mrs. W. W. Gordon), of Georgia; Britannia Wellington Kennon (Mrs. Beverly Kennon), of Washington, D. C.; Elizabeth Banning (Mrs. Henry G. Banning), of Delaware; Emily K. Reed (Mrs. William Reed), of Baltimore, Md.; Esther Jackson (Mrs. J. J. Jackson), of Baltimore, Md.; Elizabeth Byrd Nicholas, of Washington, D. C.; Letitia Green Stevenson (Mrs. Adlai E. Stevenson), of Illinois; Ellen Sever Hale (Mrs. George S. Hale), of Boston, Mass.; Mary Adams Quincey (Mrs. H. P. Quincey), of Boston, Mass.; Sara Putnam Lowell Blake (Mrs. George Baty Blake), of Massachusetts; Grace Parkman Coffin (Mrs. C. P. Coffin), of Massachusetts; Elizabeth Rebecca Lowell Sprague (Mrs. F. P. Sprague), of Massachusetts; Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, of Connecticut; Mrs. Charles Dudley Warner, of Connecticut; Bettie Andrews Atkinson (Mrs. John Wilder Atkinson), of North Carolina; Lucy Wright Giles (Mrs. Clayton Giles), of North Carolina; Belle De Saussure, of South Carolina; Eleanore Van Rensselaer Fairfax (Mrs. Hamilton B. Fairfax), of New York; Catharine Parker Beekman (Mrs. William Bedlow Beekman), of New York; Katherine Euphemia Turnbull, of New York; Susan de Peyster Livingston (Mrs. Robert E. Livingston), of New York; Maria Duane Bleecker Miller, of New York; Alice Elizabeth Chapin Brewster (Mrs. Henry Colvin Brewster), of New York; Cornelia Jones Chadwick (Mrs. French Ensor Chadwick), of New York; Alice Claypole Vanderbilt (Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt), of New York; Anna Livingston Reade Street Morton (Mrs. Levi Parsons Morton), of New York; Florence Bayard, of Delaware; Elizabeth D. Knight, of Delaware; Mary Floyd Delafield Neely (Mrs. Henry Adams Neely), of Maine; Abigail Adams Johnson Seymour (Mrs. Horatio Seymour), of Michigan; Sara Cotton Smith Perry (Mrs. William Stevens Perry), of Iowa; Evelyn Byrd Cabell Robinson (Mrs. William Russell Robinson), of Virginia; Elizabeth Henry Lyons (Mrs. James Lyons), of Virginia; Lucy Carter Trent (Mrs. Peterfield Trent), of Virginia; Isabella Dixon Mays (Mrs. Peter H. Mays), of Virginia; Edith Bucklin Hartshorn Mason (Mrs. Livingston Mason), of Rhode Island; Florence Madeline Bridgham (Mrs. —— Bridgham), of Rhode Island; Jeannie Lippit Weeden, of Rhode Island; Mary Jesup Blair (Mrs. James P. Blair), of Washington, D. C.; Henrietta Greely (Mrs. Adolphus W. Greely), of Washington, D. C.; Maria Stockton Dayton (Mrs. William Clarke Dayton), of New Jersey; Mary Dickinson, of New Jersey; Florence Hill Kidder (Mrs. George Wilson Kidder), of North Carolina, and their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in the United States of America by the name of The National Society of Colonial Dames of America, for patriotic, historical, and educational purposes, to perpetuate the memory and spirit of the men and women who, in the colonial period, by their rectitude, courage, and self-denial, prepared the way for success in that struggle which gained for the country its liberty and Constitution, by acquisition and protection of historical spots, and the erection of monuments; by the encouragement of historical research into the colonial records, and the publication of the results; by the preservation of documents and relics, and of the records of the individual patriots, and to encourage in all who come under their influence true patriotism, built on a knowledge of the self-sacrifice and heroism of those men of the colonies who laid the foundation of this great nation.

SEC. 2. That said society is authorized to hold real and personal estate in the United States, so far only as may be necessary to its lawful ends, to an amount not exceeding $500,000, and may adopt a constitution and make bylaws not inconsistent with law, and may adopt a seal. Said society shall have its headquarters or principal office at Washington, in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That said society shall report annually to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution concerning its proceedings, and said Secretary shall communicate to Congress such portion thereof as he may deem of national interest and importance. The Regents of the Smithsonian Institution are authorized to permit said national society to deposit its collections, manuscripts, books, pamphlets, and other material for history in the Smithsonian Institution or in the National Museum, at their discretion, upon such conditions and under such rules as they shall prescribe.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on the Library was to strike out, in lines 13 and 14, page 3, the words "United States of America" and insert in lieu thereof the words "District of Columbia"; so as to read "a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I was not able to hear the whole of the bill as read. I wish to inquire whether it does not appropriate space in Government buildings to private uses.

Mr. QUIGG. Not at all.

Mr. McMILLIN. It struck me that it did so.

Mr. QUIGG. It permits the trustees of the Smithsonian Institution to accept such manuscripts and other collections of the society as may be offered to them.

Mr. McMILLIN. As donations?

Mr. QUIGG. As donations.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Library was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. QUIGG, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PRINCE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7171) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate four condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to James T. Shields Post, No. 45, Grand Army of the Republic, of Galesburg, Knox County, Ill., and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate four condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to James T. Shields Post, No. 45, Grand Army of the Republic, of Galesburg, Knox County, Ill., for the soldiers' monument to be erected in said city: Provided, That in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy such articles can be spared without detriment to the public interest: And provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense on account of such donation.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word, and only a word, about this bill; I will not delay the House. I should be glad if the House would give unanimous consent to devote so much of an hour as may be necessary to the disposition of these bills making donations of condemned cannon. I will frankly state that I have one such bill myself. [Laughter.] Let me say—and I want the Speaker's ear as well as that of the House—that it is probably an important matter personally to many members here that bills of this kind from their districts should pass; that their Grand Army posts asking for these condemned cannon should receive them. Measures of this kind are the one thing, thank God, that can be passed without costing the Government a cent. We have large quantities of condemned cannon—not more valuable to the Government than scrap iron—indeed, not so valuable. Under the operation of these bills these condemned cannon are shipped away from the custody of the Government at the expense of the respective posts. The passage of these bills gives us an opportunity to gratify a great many people and to meet a sentiment existing throughout the country. It seems to me a little thing that by unanimous consent we should devote an hour to business of this kind, especially when we can authorize upon a single bill, and without debate except during thirty minutes—I am not criticising the action of the House—an expenditure of $80,000,000. I am not saying that such an expenditure is not wise. But I wish to say, if the Speaker will recognize me, I will ask unanimous consent that for an hour, or so much thereof as may be necessary, bills of this character now on the Calendar may be called up and considered.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois why the Committee on Rules does not bring in a special rule setting apart an hour or two hours for the consideration of these bills?

Mr. CANNON. I can not speak for the Committee on Rules. I do not know that the matter has been brought to their attention. But it is not necessary that the proposition should come here in that way. If it is in the mind of the Speaker to submit a request for unanimous consent, and if it is in the mind of the House to do this thing, which involves no expense to the Government, I should be very glad.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. One other question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he knows of any instance of these bills being objected to; and whether by taking them up in this way, singly, under unanimous consent, we may not do a good thing by preventing the consideration of other bills which might be injurious to the public interest.

Mr. CANNON. I was not looking at the question from that standpoint. This is a little matter, as gentlemen will see, which looks to meeting a patriotic sentiment in the country, while at the same time imposing no pecuniary disadvantage on the Government.

And I avail myself of the recognition, under the rules, to submit this matter to the House, and if the Speaker will recognize me when this bill is passed I will ask the House to give unanimous consent for the passage of these bills on the Calendar.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. I wish to ask a question in regard to the cost of transportation of these guns.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I will object——

Mr. HULICK (continuing). In regard to the cost of transporting these cannon to different posts——

Mr. CANNON. That expense is paid by the different posts themselves.

Mr. HULICK. It has been stated that in some instances the cost of transportation is worth a great deal more than many of these posts can afford to pay. The evidence before the Naval Committee when this matter was under consideration, before reporting a general bill on the subject, showed that the expense of transporting the guns would cost some of these posts ten times, perhaps fifty times, more than any post would be able to pay. In one instance it was reported, I recollect, that the cost of the transportation, as given by the Secretary in response to an inquiry, would amount to some $500 for this one post.

Mr. CANNON. That is from the Mare Island Navy-Yard. But there are a great many guns outside of the Mare Island Navy-Yard, in more accessible positions.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that a bill has already been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs which authorizes the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, on request, to donate these very cannon to Grand Army posts and to municipal corporations for soldiers' monuments.

Mr. CANNON. Is that bill on the Calendar?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. It is; and I have a copy in my hand, with the report.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will ask the Speaker to recognize me at the proper time for consent to consider that bill.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. And I will state also that the Senate has already passed the bill, and it is before the House now as a Senate bill.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will ask that we take up the Senate bill for consideration.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. In addition to that, the Senate refuses, I am informed, to pass any more local bills.

Mr. CANNON. Well, when this bill is disposed of, if I can get recognition, I will ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill to which the gentleman from New York refers.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to this bill. I propose to add, after the last word in the bill, the words "Provided, That said cannon be well spiked before delivery." This morning I understand the Pension Committee has placed a veteran on the roll at $30 a month because of an explosion of one of these very guns, and I think it is well to provide in time for any other such contingencies. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that amendment made in the interest of the life of my colleague? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman not having sent the amendment to the Chair, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PRINCE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MORTGAGES IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8298) relating to mortgages in the Indian Territory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4742 of Mansfield's Digest of the Laws of Arkansas, heretofore put in force in the Indian Territory, is hereby amended by adding to said section the following:

"Provided, That if the mortgagor is a nonresident of the Indian Territory the mortgage shall be recorded in the judicial district in which the property is situated at the time the mortgage is executed. All mortgages of personal property in the Indian Territory heretofore executed and recorded in the judicial district thereof in which the property was situated at the time they were executed are hereby validated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to have some explanation of this bill before consent is given.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, when Congress first established a court for the Indian Territory, it put in force certain sections of Manfield's Digest of the Laws of the State of Arkansas. Among these was a provision for the recordation of mortgages, which provided that mortgages on real estate should be recorded in the county where the real estate was situated, and mortgages on personal property should be recorded in the county where the mortgagor resided. It being obviously impossible, under that provision, to record a mortgage on personal property where the mortgagor resided outside of the State, the State of Arkansas amended that section of its code; and provided in substance for the provision incorporated in this bill.

I will state to the House frankly that I have some question about attempting to validate mortgages which have heretofore been given.

I have no interest in the matter myself, but introduced the bill at the request of a judge of one of the courts, to whose attention I had called the defect in the law. I introduced the bill by request, and call it up by request, but I think the bill ought to pass.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the Senate bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, to take the bill from the Calendar, to put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1865) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective Departments.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are each hereby authorized, in their discretion, to loan or give to soldiers' monument associations, posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, and municipal corporations condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls which may not be needed in the service of either of said Departments. Such loan or gift shall be made subject to rules and regulations covering the same in each Department, and the Government shall be at no expense in connection with any such loan or gift.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like the gentleman from Illinois to explain the bill to us before it is passed. I did not hear it read.

Mr. CANNON. It is a Senate bill authorizing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to loan or donate condemned ordnance to Grand Army posts or municipalities without expense to the Government.

Mr. HENDERSON. That does away with the necessity for these private bills?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is what I wished to know.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it entirely in the discretion of these two officers?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, entirely.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no limit on their discretion?

Mr. HENDERSON. That gives them precisely the power that these private bills give, as I understand?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. PICKLER. I think it is going a little further than we have heretofore gone. The bill authorizes the donation of cannon to municipal corporations.

Mr. CANNON. Very well——

Mr. BLUE. That word "municipal" should be stricken out.

Mr. PICKLER. The donating of cannon to municipalities ought not to be allowed, unless it is for the use of soldiers' organizations.

Mr. CANNON. The provision that we put upon private bills, and which is upon this bill, that the transportation charges shall be paid by the corporation or organization receiving the cannon, is quite enough of a guard. I hope the gentlemen will allow the bill to pass. It is within the discretion of these officers to donate or loan the condemned ordnance.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, that word "municipal" ought to be stricken out, so as to leave simply the word "corporation." A cemetery corporation is not a municipal corporation, but most cemetery organizations are corporations. I think the word "municipal" is an unfortunate word.

Mr. CANNON. The Grand Army posts will take care of the cemeteries. There is no trouble about it.

Mr. PICKLER. What I fear about this is that this bill will let every little municipality in the country apply for these cannon, whether there is any Grand Army post or cemetery connected with the municipality or not. It seems to me there will be a scramble for these cannon, and there will be none left for the Grand Army posts and cemeteries.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is this discussion or debate in order after the bill is on its passage?

The SPEAKER. The debate is in order.

Mr. PICKLER. Are amendments in order now?

The SPEAKER. Amendments are not in order now, unless the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time is reconsidered.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask for a vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put in an amendment including State or Territorial departments of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The provisions of the bill are ample now.

Mr. CANNON. There is no trouble about it.

Mr. PICKLER. There will not be enough of these cannon to go around to nearly all of these posts, and some States will not get anything under this law.

Mr. CANNON. It costs from $300 to $500 to pay the freight on these cannon. There are plenty of them to supply the demand, and we get rid of all the private bills if we pass this one. I ask for a vote.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I object.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CANNON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, which has passed the Senate with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Illinois that his bill will come up in the regular order very soon.

PUEBLO, DURANGO, AND LEADVILLE, COLO., PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2508) to establish customs ports of delivery at Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, Colo., and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, all in the State of Colorado, be, and are hereby, made customs ports of delivery, and attached to the port of Denver, in said State, with all the rights and privileges now accorded by law to said port of Denver, the surveyor of customs of which port shall supervise the customs business at said Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville in the same manner and to the same extent as at Denver.

SEC. 2. That such other places in the State of Colorado as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate from time to time shall be ports of delivery, with all the privileges now accorded by law to the port of Denver, Colo., the surveyor of customs of which port shall supervise the customs business transacted at such places in the same manner and to the same extent as at Denver.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this bill been reported by a committee?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. It has been reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chairs hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BELL of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there was a House bill reported including the name of one of the places. I move that that bill (H. R. 7257) be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN M. DAVIS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 56) for the relief of John M. Davis.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed bill is not here.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER. But the engrossed bill is not here.

MRS. CLIFFORD NEFF FYFFE.

Mr. DRAPER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2600) granting a pension to Mrs. Clifford Neff Fyffe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Clifford Neff Fyffe, widow of Joseph Fyffe, late a rear-admiral, United States Navy, at the rate of $75 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman if that bill has been considered at a Friday night session?

Mr. DRAPER. It has not.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I reserve the right to object, pending the reading of the report.

Mr. DRAPER. I think the gentleman will not object when he hears the report. This agrees to the amount that the gentleman is willing to grant to the widow of a most distinguished officer.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2600) granting a pension to Mrs. Clifford Neff Fyffe, having carefully considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

Mrs. Fyffe, the applicant herein, is the daughter of the late Rev. Granville Moody, one of the most distinguished volunteer colonels of the late war. Her brother, William Moody, was a soldier in the late war, and died as the result of a disease contracted in the Army.

These facts are mentioned, not as material or constituting the basis for a pension, but merely as preliminary to the consideration of the more distinguished services of her husband, the late Rear-Admiral Fyffe.

This officer's services, both in the war with Mexico and also in the late war, were of the most distinguished character, covering a period of almost half a century, commencing on the 7th of September, 1847, when, at the age of 15, he was appointed a midshipman, and ending with his death, on the 25th of February, 1896. His death resulted from a disease contracted while in the service in tropical countries.

Mrs. Fyffe is very poor, with no income, the property left by her distinguished husband having been encumbered for more than its value. She is wholly dependent and without means of support.

The circumstances of the petitioner appear, by papers submitted herewith, to be as follows:

She is about 56 years of age, being quite deaf, and is disabled by a disease of the veins which has prevented her from working or even standing for five months during the past year. She is entirely dependent upon the pension she is now asking, having no income whatever. It appears that when the Admiral was retired from the active list of the Navy he felt that, being an exceptionally strong, vigorous man, he might reasonably count upon ten or twelve years in which to carry out a long-cherished plan for opening, improving, and stocking land he owned in Nebraska, 160 acres granted him for services in the Mexican war. He began this undertaking last spring, and had he lived doubtless would have been successful in his plans. It absorbed all his reasonable means and required the mortgaging of the land itself. Much was expended on which there could be no speedy return. All farm products were phenomenally low the last year of his life, but that did not discourage him, as he expected to reap a good income, as well as a business for his son and a provision for his family.

By his sudden death the undertaking became a disaster instead of a provision to his widow and those he has left. She states that she can not carry it on for a single month, and his pay ceasing with his death prevents her from being able to carry the mortgage on the land. All must be closed to stop expenses and satisfy the mortgage. It is estimated that there will not be sufficient even to free her from the obligations of her husband, and all should have been sold.

The bill passed the Senate at $75 per month, and the foregoing is the substance of Senate Report No. 656, which contains a lengthy statement as to the Admiral's services, and to which reference is hereby made.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, the only chance we have to discuss these bills is during a Friday night session. They will not allow even an amendment; and upon these grounds I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

J. C. RUDD.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1502) for the benefit of J. C. Rudd.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James C. Rudd the sum of $3,500, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount due said Rudd for the rent of a post-office building in the city of Owensboro, Ky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. PUGH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1502) for the relief of J. C. Rudd, submit the following report:

The proof in this case shows that J. C. Rudd, of Owensboro, Ky., was the owner of a building at said town which was used and occupied by the postmaster at Owensboro from 1861 to 1875 for the distribution of United States mail. At the time of the occupation of said property by the postmaster at Owensboro there was no definite agreement between him and said Moore, the postmaster, as to the amount of rent to be paid by the Government for the use of said property.

Your committee attach hereto letters from the Post-Office Department in relation to this claim and ask that they be printed as a part of this report.

Your committee is of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to $900 for three years' rental for his property, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

In line 4, after the word "Rudd," insert the words "of Owensboro, Ky.," and in lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "three thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "six hundred."

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1896.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 10th instant relative to a claim for rent of premises occupied by the post-office at Owensboro, Ky., from 1861 to 1875, which has been presented by Mr. J. C. Rudd, and to inform you, in reply thereto, that prior to April, 1865, the said post-office belonged to the fourth class; that from that date until July 1, 1872, it belonged to the third class, and that since the latter date it has belonged to the second class.

There has never been any provision made by Congress for payment of rent by the Government for premises occupied by post-offices of the fourth class, nor was there any authority in law under which the Department could allow for rent of premises occupied by post-offices of the third class until October 1, 1888, when the act of July 24, 1888, became operative.

Upon the advancement of this post-office to the second class (July 1, 1872) an allowance of $200 per annum was made by the Department for payment of rent for premises in which the said post-office was then located. This allowance was unchanged until April 1, 1879.

Very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON, Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. M. MAHON,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1896.

SIR: I send you herewith for your information a copy of a letter which I have this day addressed to the Hon. J. D. CLARDY.

Very respectfully,

F. H. JONES,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. M. MAHON,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

APRIL 3, 1896.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo, I beg to inform you that I find by an examination of the records of the Auditor's office that the late postmaster at Owensboro, Ky., was not charged with any expenditure from the allowance made by the Department for rent of premises occupied by the said post-office prior to July 1, 1875.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. D. CLARDY,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. As I understand, there was an allowance of $200 a year for rent after this became a second-class post-office?

Mr. CLARDY. Yes, sir; after it became a second-class post-office.

Mr. CANNON. When did it become a second-class post-office?

Mr. CLARDY. In 1872; and this covers up to 1875. Previous to that time he had furnished the office for years, but of course that is all shut out, because there was no allowance.

Mr. CANNON. This is after the office became a second-class office in 1872?

Mr. CLARDY. Yes; from 1872.

Mr. CANNON. How long did he pay the rent?

Mr. CLARDY. For three years, since 1875, the money has been paid, but from 1872 to 1875 the rent was allowed by the Post-Office Department, as I show by these letters here, but was not paid.

Mr. CANNON. Was it actually paid out?

Mr. CLARDY. After 1872 there was an allowance of $200 a year.

Mr. CANNON. Was the $200 per annum actually paid out from 1872 to 1875 for rent?

Mr. CLARDY. It was not paid, but it was allowed.

Mr. CANNON. Nothing was paid?

Mr. CLARDY. Nothing was paid the postmaster. At the end of that time the postmaster died and could not make any request for its payment. This bill passed last year.

Mr. CANNON. Then, this covers from 1872 to 1875, after the office was made a second-class post-office; and you say nothing has ever been received, and it is $200 a year for rent paid by the postmaster.

Mr. CLARDY. It was allowed, but has never been paid.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this claim should not be allowed. There is nothing here to show what the agreements were between this postmaster and the party who owned the building. He had occupied this building from 1861 to 1875. There is no evidence as to any contract or any agreement. Possibly there was a consideration—very probably there was a consideration—if you can get at the facts in this case, and the probability is that this rent should never have been paid.

Now, this gentleman comes to Congress not for $600, but finding that an allowance of $200 a year has been made, he comes and seeks to secure $200 a year from 1861 to 1875; and while the amount of money is not very great, permit me to say that from the evidence before the House this claim has not a particle of merit. There is no evidence here to show that this man should receive anything.

Mr. CLARDY. The committee investigated this matter, and the proofs show that this gentleman did furnish the building, that it was rented from him, and that the money never was paid.

Mr. LOUD. I do not doubt that, but there is evidently a consideration somewhere. That building was not occupied in that way from 1861 to 1875 unless there was some consideration that does not appear here.

Mr. CLARDY. But he never got anything.

Mr. LOUD. I understand that; but I repeat, there was some consideration that does not appear here—perhaps the benefit of having the post-office in his building.

Mr. CLARDY. But it does appear that the Department allowed $200 a year for those three years, and also that the money never has been paid; and the evidence before the committee distinctly showed that the gentleman furnishing the house never received any rent. It seems to me that if there ever was a just claim against the Government, this is one.

Mr. HULICK. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. I do not recall the amount of the original claim presented——

Mr. CLARDY. Of course he made a claim at first for all the time, not knowing but that the Department had made the allowance for the whole time; but when we came to investigate the matter we found that no allowance had been made previous to 1872, the time when the office was made a second-class office.

Mr. HULICK. I rose to ask why it was that when this gentleman presented so large a claim the committee allowed only about $600 instead of $2,000, as claimed?

Mr. CLARDY. I have just explained that. He was not aware that no allowance had been made for rent until 1872. That being the fact, of course the committee rejected all of the claim for the period preceding 1872, the time when the Department first made the allowance. In 1872 the office became a second-class office, and it was only then that the allowance was made. Now, we propose to pay only for the three years for which the letter of the Department shows that allowance was made, it appearing distinctly from the evidence that the money, although allowed, was never paid over.

Mr. HULICK. And I understand that but for the death of the postmaster the money would have been paid?

Mr. CLARDY. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. That is merely an assumption.

Mr. HULICK. And the committee recommend now that that amount be paid?

Mr. CLARDY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I have expressed my objection to this bill to the House and to the gentleman personally, and I see no reason to change my view.

Mr. CLARDY. I understood the gentleman to acquiesce.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; I never told the gentleman so.

Mr. CLARDY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he objects to the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

GEORGE JOHNSON.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4281) granting a pension to George Johnson, of Lenox, Iowa.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been considered at a Friday night session?

Mr. HEPBURN. It has not, because it has not yet been reached; but it is a case that ought to receive attention.

Mr. TALBERT. If it has not been considered at a Friday night session I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

WITNESSES IN LAND CASES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3268) to facilitate the procurement of evidence and to compel the attendance of witnesses in matters before the registers and receivers of the local land offices of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when, in any hearing ordered to be had before the register and receiver of any local land office of the United States, it shall be stated to the register in writing by either party to such hearing that the testimony of any person is material and necessary to the conduct of the case of said party, it shall be lawful for the register of said office, and it is hereby made his duty, to issue a notice in writing, directed to such witness or person, requiring him to appear at the time and place to be in said notice specified and stated, provided the same shall not be at a greater distance than 200 miles from the place of residence of said witness, and then and there to testify, by deposition or otherwise, as a witness in the matter of said hearing. Such notice may be served by the marshal of the United States for the district in which the witness resides, or by any deputy by him thereunto authorized, or by any person designated and appointed in writing by the register by whom said notice shall have been issued. Any person who, being served with notice to appear and testify as herein provided, refuses or neglects to appear at the time and place designated in said notice, or who, after appearing, refuses to testify, he not being privileged from giving testimony, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, in the district court of the United States, or the Territory, holden in the district in which such person so served with notice to appear and testify resides, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed the sum of $500, or be imprisoned not to exceed six months, or both, at the discretion of the court. The fees and mileage for witnesses notified to appear as herein provided shall be the same as those provided by law for witnesses in the courts of the United States; and no person notified to appear as a witness under this section shall be compelled to obey any such notice unless his fees for one day and mileage to and from the place where his evidence is to be taken shall have been tendered or shall have been waived by him at the time of service of such notice, nor shall the witness be required to remain in attendance at the taking of testimony longer than one day unless his per diem shall be tendered from day to day.

SEC. 2. That all officers authorized by the laws of their respective States or Territories to take deposition are hereby authorized to administer oaths to witnesses and take testimony, by way of deposition or otherwise, to be used at hearings in cases involving public lands, and any witness swearing falsely in any such case shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to punishment prescribed for that offense by the laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. LACEY. I think I can explain the bill in less time than it will take to read the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well.

Mr. LACEY. Repeatedly for a number of years the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office have requested the passage of a bill of this character. This bill provides for securing the attendance of witnesses in contests before registers and receivers of the local land offices. This bill was drafted in the Interior Department and was introduced by me, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands. At present there is no way by which the attendance of witnesses can be compelled in land contests, and frequently the result is the miscarriage of justice, and in some cases the bribery of witnesses, who are hired to stay away. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the passage of a bill on this subject, but I think the gentleman from Iowa will agree with me that this bill is pretty drastic. It provides for the imprisonment of a witness if he fails to attend. I think that provision ought to be stricken out. I think the fine is sufficient, especially as in many instances the amount involved is not likely to be so much as the fine. I hope the gentleman will have no objection to striking out the provision for imprisonment. We are a little "handy" with imprisonment by the Federal courts at any rate.

Mr. LACEY. The bill has simply been adapted to the method of compelling the attendance of witnesses before committees of Congress and other bodies which have no power to issue subpœnas.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the provision for imprisonment ought to be stricken out, and I will offer an amendment to that effect. I think the fine is enough, and that there ought not to be any imprisonment unless the party is in contempt of court, in which case he can be reached by a different process.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman indicate his amendment?

Mr. LACEY. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee would be to strike out, on page 2, commencing with the matter after the word "dollars," on line 28, down to and including the word "both," on line 29.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The only way of enforcing the attendance of witnesses in these cases is by giving the officials power to imprison recalcitrant witnesses. A fine, or the threat of a fine, will receive very little attention; and the power to attach a person's property for a fine will also amount to little, because a very large number of these persons have no property. The threat of a fine to be enforced by attachment would be in most cases a mere brutum fulmen. I think the provision for imprisonment is a good thing and ought to be retained. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to accept my amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Personally I have no objection whatever to the amendment. I appreciate, of course, the point made by my friend from California; and as the bill was originally drawn——

Mr. McMILLIN. If I had not thought the amendment acceptable the gentleman would have been obliged to get up his bill in a different way. I consented to the consideration of the bill on the condition that this amendment would be made.

Mr. LACEY. Then I hope my friend from California will not insist on his objection to the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not believe that the process of these local land officers should carry with it a five-hundred-dollar fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. At the suggestion of my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], I withdraw my objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Will this bill change the rule which now obtains, where, by the consent of parties, the testimony of witnesses is taken at the county seats?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. It provides only for the compulsory attendance of witnesses. At present there is no way by which a witness can be compelled to appear and testify.

Mr. PICKLER. I understood that the bill went only so far as to make it compulsory that the witnesses attend at the land offices.

Mr. LACEY. At the land offices or before officers authorized to take testimony. The receiver or register issues the subpœna, which, under this bill, the witness must obey or subject himself, as the bill is now amended, to fine.

Mr. PICKLER. The process may be made returnable at any point that the register or receiver designates?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. If that is so, it is all right.

Several MEMBERS. That is so.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHARITY HOSPITAL, BILOXI, MISS.

Mr. DENNY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7919) providing for the erection and maintenance of a charity hospital by the city of Biloxi, Miss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby given, granted, and conveyed to the city of Biloxi, in the county of Harrison and State of Mississippi, those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land lying and being in the county and State aforesaid, and described as follows, to wit: Fractional section 19, in township 7 south, range 9 west; northwest quarter of section 30, in township 7 south, range 9 west, and south half of section 24, in township 5 south, range 10 west, St. Stephens meridian; with full and complete right and authority to occupy, improve, own, and control said lands for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon by said city a hospital for the use and benefit of the poor and indigent sick and those with contagious and infectious diseases: Provided, That said city of Biloxi is hereby authorized and empowered to lease, rent, or sell any and all parts or portions of said lands not required for the buildings and grounds of said hospital, which fact shall be determined by the mayor and board of aldermen of said city of Biloxi; and the proceeds of such rents, leases, or sales shall be applied exclusively to the maintenance of said hospital.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands were read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Mississippi," insert the words "a tract not exceeding 160 acres in extent, to be selected by said city from."

In line 16, after the word "Provided," insert the word "however."

Strike out all of line 16 after the word "Biloxi," and all of lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following words:

"Shall, within five years from and after the passage of this act, accept this grant, and that whenever said lands shall cease to be used by said city for the purposes herein mentioned, the same shall revert to the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CANNON. I listened to the reading of the bill and amendments; but on one point I wish to ask a question. Does this measure propose merely to grant a site now owned by the Government upon which to build a hospital?

Mr. DENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. What is the extent of the site?

Mr. DENNY. One hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. CANNON. Where is it?

Mr. DENNY. On the Back Bay of Biloxi, about 2 miles from the city of Biloxi.

Mr. CANNON. What is its value?

Mr. DENNY. Its value, as I am informed, is merely nominal. It is valueless for agricultural and other purposes. It is suitable for this hospital, but I believe valueless for any other purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Does the bill as amended give authority to sell any portion of the site?

Mr. DENNY. No, sir. The grant is made for the express purpose named; and when the ground ceases to be used for that purpose the whole tract will revert to the Government.

Mr. CANNON. The Government has no use for this site?

Mr. DENNY. No, sir. It is a part of what was known as the "naval reservation," the whole of which I believe was by the last Congress transferred to the Interior Department for homestead purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I have any objection to granting a bare site.

Mr. DENNY. That is all that this bill grants.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred and sixty acres make a pretty large grant. A bill looking to a grant of lands to endow a hospital I should object to, unless we went into that business generally. I have a hospital in my own town which I should be glad to have the Government endow.

Mr. DENNY. This would be a rather large tract, if it were all to be occupied; but a great deal of the land is covered with marsh and water. It is, as I have stated, on the borders of the Back Bay of Biloxi. The land is really valueless for any other purpose; and I am informed that very little of it is high land.

Mr. CANNON. Is this a House bill or a Senate bill?

Mr. DENNY. A House bill.

Mr. CANNON. If this bill, after going to the Senate, should return here in the closing hours of the session upon a conference report, I indulge the hope that full attention will be called to any provision which may look toward a grant of land in aid of the establishment of a hospital.

Mr. LACEY. I will state that the original proposition was to grant 600 acres, more or less.

Mr. DENNY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. But the committee cut down the amount to what they thought the actual necessities for hospital purposes.

Mr. DENNY. That is correct.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON. The bill having been amended, it seems to me the title should also be amended so as to read "A bill granting a site for the erection of a charity hospital," etc., instead of "A bill providing for the erection and maintenance of a charity hospital," etc.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as proposed.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. DENNY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SOPHIA AND JULIA C. SPARKS.

Mr. COFFIN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 956) for the relief of Sophia Sparks and Julia C. Sparks, of Annapolis, Md.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay jointly to Sophia Sparks and Julia C. Sparks, of Annapolis, Md., the sole heirs and surviving children of Edward Sparks, deceased, late of the same place, the sum of $670.58, in full payment for sundry supplies furnished by said Edward Sparks at various dates between January, 1863, and July, 1866, to the United States Naval Academy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to hear the report.

The report (by Mr. SNOVER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 956) for the relief of Sophia and Julia C. Sparks, have duly considered the same and submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill arises are in substance as follows:

Sophia Sparks and Julia C. Sparks, the claimants named in this bill, are the sole heirs and surviving children of Edward Sparks, who died at Annapolis, Md., in 1868, and who during his lifetime was a storekeeper at the United States Naval Academy, in said city and State.

At sundry dates between January 15, 1863, and July 10, 1866, said Edward Sparks furnished to said Naval Academy sundry supplies, consisting of scientific, text, blank, and other books; histories, grammars, Bowditch tables, atlases, geographies, surveying and other instruments, scales, rulers, drawing paper, pens, towels, soap, brooms, pails, shades and fixtures for gas burners, and other miscellaneous articles for the public use of said Academy, aggregating a total value of $670.58, all duly certified in triplicate vouchers issued therefor, reciting the name and value of each article and the date when same was so furnished, said certificate reciting that said "supplies so furnished were suited to the ends in view, and charged for at reasonable rates," and on July 10, 1866, the same were duly signed by the secretary of said Academy, and on the same date were all duly approved by the superintendent in charge of said Naval Academy, and in triplicate.

Thereafter, two copies of each of said vouchers, so certified and approved, being in the possession of the Navy Department, said Sparks made frequent demands upon the United States for the payment of the sums of money so due him therefor; but he was never paid the same because of a want of appropriation of money with which to pay the same.

After the death of said Edward Sparks, his children duly brought these claims to the attention of Congress, through their then Representative, and who, on February 18, 1874, filed the petition of said children in the House, praying payment, but from then till now said petition has ever remained of record in the files of the House unacted upon.

A copy of a similar bill (H. R. 5472) was, on January 20, 1894, duly referred to the Navy Department for its examination and report, and by it was, in February, 1894, also duly referred to the superintendent of said Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., for similar purposes.

The correspondence had in these premises is now in the record of this case, and shows that said articles were so duly furnished at the dates as recited in said vouchers; that the same were never paid for, and under date of February 16, 1894, the Secretary of the Navy reported favorably as to said claim.

The United States having received in due manner the articles furnished by said Edward Sparks and no payment having heretofore been made therefor, payment should now be made to his said surviving children in the sum of $670.58.

And we recommend that said bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Permit me say, Mr. Speaker, that I remember this case before the Committee on Claims, when I had the honor to be a member of that committee, and recollect opposing it very strenuously at that time. What the reasons were have now escaped my memory. But the facts in the case do not appear of record here. I know I must have had good reasons for the opposition I made.

And I wish to say now that I do object to the committee making reports favoring claims of this character, and referring to something said or written by a Department, without publishing the letter or the communication. They are as a rule short, and we ought to have the information before taking action on these matters. I would like to have the letter of the Secretary of the Navy (the report says he reported favorably February 16, 1894, in this matter)—I would like to have that letter presented to the House.

Mr. COFFIN. It is in the file room, and was in my possession. I have seen it. In addition to that, I wrote to the Secretary of the Navy myself, asking him in regard to the matter, and he replied on May 14, in which he says:

The same were considered by the Department to be just claims against the Government.

Mr. LOUD. What else does he say?

It is not desirable, Mr. Speaker, for me to object to all of these cases. I dislike to do so, because gentlemen are very apt to regard it as a personal matter. But when you investigate the majority of them, permit me to say, when you have the evidence before you, you find but little to recommend them.

Now, in this case, I know this party has furnished supplies to the Naval Academy at Annapolis; but I recollect very well that it was a disputed claim. There was some question about it which raised doubt in my mind as to its validity, and for that reason I opposed it when I was a member of that committee. Certainly there ought to be good reason shown for passing the claim at this day, so long after these supplies were furnished. My recollection is that on an investigation the supplies were either not ordered by the Department or were not accepted by the Department. There was some good reason, I am sure.

Mr. COFFIN. I have the letter here from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he says it is a just claim against the Department.

Mr. LOUD. Why was it not paid, then?

Mr. COFFIN. That I do not understand. I do not know why many just claims are not paid. In fact, a just claim against the Department is by no means a sure thing.

But I send the letter up to the desk and ask to have it read.

The letter was read, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 14, 1896.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 11th instant, receipt of which was acknowledged on the 12th, relative to the Department's answer of the 16th of February last, to a request from the House Committee on Claims for information and an expression of opinion concerning the matters mentioned in the bill (H. R. 5472) "for the relief of Sophia and Julia C. Sparks, of Annapolis, Md.," in which you state that "the Speaker will not let it (said bill with report thereon of Committee on Claims) come before the House unless the Navy Department acknowledges that it owes the bill and that it ought to be paid," I have the honor to state that the second paragraph of the letter of the 16th of February last, above mentioned, was intended to mean that inasmuch as the claims of the heirs of Edward Sparks, late storekeeper at the United States Naval Academy, as set forth in the bills therein referred to, for books and other supplies furnished to the Naval Academy by Mr. Sparks, appeared to be certified to by the secretary of the said Academy, the same were considered by the Department to be just claims against the Government.

With regard to the claim in the sum of $272 for hair pillows and mattresses alleged to have been furnished the United States Hospital at Annapolis in 1861 for the use of certain regiments of New York and Massachusetts militia then quartered in that city, the Department had no information, and consequently made no recommendation, a fact which emphasizes the meaning of the second paragraph of its letter above referred to.

HILARY A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. CHARLES E. COFFIN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. Well, that is a very politic letter, Mr. Speaker; it does not say anything.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman if the second item referred to in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy is included in this bill?

Mr. COFFIN. No; it is not. It was included in the first bill, but the committee left it off of the bill, and it was not included in the bill of the last session. This bill does not include it.

Mr. LOUD. The Speaker knows, and the House knows, that it is regarded as a personal matter when objection is made to these things.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it ought not to be so considered. The question is submitted with entire freedom for every individual man to object or not. If a member has reason to object, he should exercise his right without question.

Mr. LOUD. I opposed this matter in the committee. That was three or four years ago, and I do not now recollect the reason; but there must have been some lack of merit in it, for it did not commend itself to me at that time. But, as I have said, I dislike very much to interpose an objection for the reasons stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, or any other gentleman, is at perfect liberty to object without it being a matter of reproach to him; and it ought to be so understood in the House.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, since consent has been given, I wish to make a single statement. Here were certain supplies furnished to the Naval Academy at Annapolis between 1861 and 1865, and, as it appears by the report of the committee, there were vouchers filed, but no satisfactory reason is given as to why payment was not made. Now, the Secretary of the Navy sends a communication here saying that this claim is just and proper, but without any explanation whatever as to why it was not paid at the appropriate time.

The only reason for nonpayment is that the appropriation for that purpose was exhausted. What was the duty of the Department then under the circumstances? Simply to send to Congress, when in session, an estimate of the necessary deficiency to meet the claim; not to oblige the claimant to come here and press a claim, but a legitimate, appropriate thing to be paid by the Department in the proper way, and if there was no money, to ask Congress for a deficiency. Not a single excuse is given for deferring the payment for a series of years.

Now, it seems to me that the Secretary of the Navy ought to have said something more than he did say in this communication. He ought not to simply turn it off on Congress and say that Congress has not made any appropriations. He ought to have added that the Department would at once send an estimate to Congress for a deficiency. That is what should have been done by the Secretary of the Navy. If the case is as he has stated, and there are no other facts, I see no reason why the claim should not be paid, and no reason why it should not have been paid years ago, by the action of the Navy Department in sending to Congress an estimate for a deficiency appropriation.

It seems to me that any Department which allows claims, if they are just claims, as stated in this letter, to run along from year to year and does not communicate to Congress the fact that there are certain deficiencies unpaid, and which does not ask an appropriation for their payment, is derelict in its duty, and it puts Congress in a bad position to send communications in this way, and put the responsibility upon Congress, as though Congress had been derelict, and not the Navy Department.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the distinguished gentleman from Maine arraign the present Secretary of the Navy or all his predecessors?

Mr. DINGLEY. I arraign no one. I simply say that if this was a claim that ought to have been paid, as stated in that communication, and if it was not paid simply through lack of appropriations, that the Navy Department—no matter who was at the head of it, for it makes no difference in that respect—ought to have sent an estimate to Congress for a deficiency appropriation, and then it would have been appropriated for and paid long ago.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask the gentleman if the person to blame was not the one who filled the office of Secretary of the Navy in 1864 or 1865?

Mr. DINGLEY. I should think so, from the information which we have. I think the fault was away back in 1865, if this information is correct.

Mr. CANNON. If the claim is as the gentleman says, the claimant himself might have presented this account to the accounting officers of the Treasury, and they, finding it correct, might have certified it to Congress for consideration and appropriation, it being an audited account for a public service authorized by law, where there was no appropriation.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is true. It occurs to me that there are probably some facts connected with this matter which have not yet been made public.

Mr. LOUD. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DINGLEY. Facts that do not appear in this communication.

Mr. LOUD. And they are easy to be had, too.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COFFIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, MARYLAND.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7255) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland, between the Fenwick Island and the Ocean City life-saving stations, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this simply an authorization?

Mr. MILES. That is all. It has been favorably reported. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. LOUD. Has it been recommended by the Department?

Mr. MILES. It has been recommended by the Department, and the recommendation is a very strong one.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, this bill only authorizes it.

Mr. MILES. That is all.

Mr. DINGLEY. It only authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion.

Mr. MILES. That is all.

The report (by Mr. WANGER) is as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7255) entitled "A bill for the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to establish a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland, between the Fenwick Island and the Ocean City life-saving stations, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The bill was referred to the Treasury Department for examination and consideration, and from the letters of the Acting Secretary and of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service it clearly appears that a life-saving station is necessary near the place designated in the bill. These letters are appended hereto as part of this report:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by your reference of bill H. R. 7255, "providing for the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland," for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I would state that the matter was referred to the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service for report, which has been received and is herewith transmitted with my concurrence.

Respectfully, yours,

S. WIKE, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT LIFE-SAVING SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference for report of the letter of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, transmitting bill H. R. 7255, "providing for the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland," for "suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage."

The stretch of coast between the Fenwick Island and the Ocean City life-saving stations, referred to in the bill, is one of the most dangerous on the entire line of the Atlantic coast. It consists of a sandy beach, outside of which, at a distance varying from 200 to 400 or 500 yards, a sand bar extends the whole length, upon which vessels frequently strand.

The two stations are 10½ miles apart, and upon the establishment of the latter of the two a patrol was established to cover the distance, a surfman from each station being required to travel to a point midway and return in four hours. The entire journey had to be made through soft, yielding sand, in which the foot sank several inches at every step. The effect upon the surfmen was soon found to be so exhausting as to tell severely upon their strength and health and the beats had to be shortened. They were so far reduced as to leave a gap of 1½ miles uncovered by the patrol. This patrol was maintained for some time, when the district officers recommended a still further reduction as indispensable. The following is an extract from a joint letter of the district superintendent and the inspector relating to the matter:

"The distance suggested will aggregate 6 miles in a watch in four hours to go and return a beat, and as it often occurs that the beach is patrolled night and day, it is, in our opinion, as great as should be exacted, from the fact that the surfmen are breaking down on account of the present length of the patrol, and will, if the distance is not shortened, materially increase the pension (disability) rolls of the service. The beaches over which the surfmen patrol are generally soft sand, and walking is very laborious, bringing undue strain upon the muscles of the lower limbs and rendering the present task practically impossible and unfitting the men, in case of wreck, for performing duty."

Accordingly the beats were shortened to 3 miles from each station, leaving a strip of coast midway between the stations (and therefore most remote from them) unguarded, whereby vessels stranding in this dangerous locality in the night or in thick weather are deprived of the advantage, often vital, of early discovery.

In view of these considerations, the establishment of the station proposed by the bill is, in my judgment, very desirable.

Respectfully, yours,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the establishment of a life-saving station on the coast of Maryland."

On motion of Mr. MILES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN REGISTRY FOR BARK VILA.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6776) to provide American registry for the bark Vila.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built vessel owned by James McAllister, a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States under the name Vila.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MCCORMICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred House bill 6776, to provide an American register for the bark Vila, has considered the same and makes the following report:

The evidence filed with the committee shows that the Vila was presumably wrecked and found within American waters; that she was taken in tow by an American steamer—the Breidablik—and towed to the port of New York, where she was sold, by due course of law, for the sum of $450. A contract for repairs and alterations, at a cost of $3,305, was entered into, and said repairs and alterations have been made and paid for. The committee, believing that the requirements of the law have been complied with in this case, recommends the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. On the face of the facts stated, this vessel might have been registered by the Treasury Department. Why was it not done?

Mr. BENNETT. She could not receive registry in that way because they could not tell whether she was wrecked in American waters or not. She was found, after having drifted into American waters, by this vessel, the Breidablik. If she had been wrecked in American waters the Treasury Department, as I understand it, would have been privileged to register her.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are these facts sustained by affidavit?

Mr. BENNETT. By affidavits in the hands of the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you know the tonnage of this vessel?

Mr. BENNETT. The tonnage is very small.

Mr. DINGLEY. The circumstances must be very peculiar where a vessel which sells for $400 requires but $3,000 to put it in condition.

Mr. BENNETT. The evidence was all in the hands of the committee, and the report is unanimous.

Mr. MCCORMICK. It is a unanimous report from our committee. I made the report.

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence must be misleading. It ought to be easy to ascertain where the vessel was wrecked. As a rule, it is easy to ascertain.

Mr. BENNETT. The vessel had drifted into American waters, and was found by an American vessel and brought to the port of New York. For that reason she had drifted to the place where she was found, and they were unable to say that she was wrecked in American waters.

Mr. LOUD. The assumption is that she was wrecked out of American waters, but that is made a part of the report to mislead, because if she was wrecked in American waters the parties owning her could go to the Secretary of the Treasury and get a register.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BENJAMIN MARCH.

Mr. APSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6198, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate bond to Benjamin March, guardian of Ruth March.

The bill was read.

The report (by Mr. GRAFF) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 5740) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate bond to Benjamin March, as guardian of Ruth March, an insane person, find the following facts from the sworn proofs in the case:

That Ruth March lives in Ashley, a small town in Massachusetts, and has resided there for many years; that she is 84 years of age and has become insane. She owned a United States registered bond, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, for the sum of $1,000, and collected the interest on the said bond from time to time down to and including the interest due July 1, 1895.

Benjamin H. March, of Ashley, Mass., her nephew, was duly appointed guardian of said Ruth March on July 17, 1895. A thorough search through all her papers and effects has been made for said bond and it has not been found. It was shown that she shortly before burned some of her papers. It is not known whether or not said bond was then burned.

The affidavits by her neighbors and those with whom she came in contact rebut the presumption that the bond has been assigned, but tend to prove and proves, in the opinion of the committee, that said bond is lost or destroyed, although the evidence is circumstantial on that point. The woman is in such a condition mentally as not to be able to furnish any information on the subject.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "equal to," in the thirteenth line of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in double," and as thus amended the bill do pass.

The Comptroller of the Treasury, upon a hearing before that Department, recommended that no duplicate issue, for the reason that no one except Ruth March is known to have knowledge as to whether she assigned the bond when she was mentally competent to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been favorably reported by a committee?

Mr. APSLEY. It has been reported favorably by a committee.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. What committee?

Mr. APSLEY. The Committee on Claims.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. APSLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Some time subsequently,

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts called up the bill H. R. 6198, but the report which was read was the report on the bill H. R. 5740. The bill 5740 as proposed to be amended by the committee is identical in terms with the bill H. R. 6198. If there be no objection, the Chair will cause to be substituted the bill H. R. 5740, which is precisely the same, so as to have a uniformity in the records. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill H. R. 5740 as amended is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5740) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate bond to Benjamin March, guardian of Ruth March.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to issue a duplicate in the name of Benjamin March, guardian of Ruth March, an insane person, in lieu of a United States 4 per cent registered bond issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, No. 68830, for $1,000, inscribed in name of Ruth March, and alleged to have been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said Benjamin H. March shall first file in the Treasury a bond in a penal sum in double the amount of the said missing bond and the interest which would accrue thereon until the principal thereof becomes due and payable, with two good and sufficient sureties, residents of the United States, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the lost or destroyed bond.

ROBERT M'GEE.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 229) for the relief of Robert McGee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claim of Robert McGee, to be paid out of interest money due to the Sioux Nation of Indians from the Government of the United States, the sum of $10,000 in compensation for damages sustained by him by reason of having been scalped and otherwise injured by the Brule Sioux Indians while serving as a teamster with a train conveying Government supplies to Fort Union, N. Mex., July 18, 1864; and if said Secretary, after giving a hearing or an opportunity to be heard to said Sioux Nation of Indians, shall find said claim to be equitable and just, he shall pay or cause to be paid said sum of $10,000 or such part thereof as he shall decide to be justly and equitably due to the aforesaid Robert McGee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the report read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the report be read, Mr. Speaker.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 229, have carefully considered the same, and report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Senate report is made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 572, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Indian Depredations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 229) for the relief of Robert McGee, report the same favorably to the Senate, with recommendation for its passage, and adopt as their report the statements and report made by the committee during the Fifty-second Congress.

Considering the large number of affidavits presented, there seems to be no question as to the helpless condition of the claimant, Mr. McGee, or as to the statements made that he received his injuries at the hands of roaming bands of the Sioux tribe of Indians. In the judgment of your committee the Secretary of the Interior, after hearing the arguments pro and con, can safely be trusted under the provisions of the bill to pay this man from such funds of the moneys of the Sioux Nation as may be available.

[Senate Report No. 1230, Fifty-Second Congress, second session.]

Your committee, to whom was referred Senate bill 3582, respectfully report the same favorably with amendments.

It appears that in July, 1864, a supply train started from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., for Fort Union, N. Mex., in charge of one J. L. Riggs. When they had arrived at the Great Bend of the Arkansas River, Walnut Creek Station, Kans., the party was attacked by a band of the Brule Sioux Indians under the leadership of the chief, Little Turtle. The massacre which followed was one of the most bloody, nearly all being killed or wounded. Of those wounded was one Robert McGee, now of Excelsior Springs, Mo., a boy, being then about 15 years of age, who was pierced by ten arrows, scalped, and tomahawked in a most brutal manner. He was taken to Fort Larned, where, by the skill of physicians and careful nursing, he was partially restored to health, though suffering greatly from contusions of the skull, which have made his life a struggle against suffering to the present time.

The statements here made as to his identity and present condition are supported by the affidavits of many reliable citizens who knew him then and who know him now. Among these are Hulbert H. Clark, M. D., of Santa Cruz, Cal., attending surgeon of hospital at Fort Larned, Kans., in 1864, and who cared for Mr. McGee. He says:

"In the matter of Robert McGee, I, Hulbert H. Clark, M. D., a resident of Santa Cruz, Cal., hereby certify that while in the United States service as acting assistant surgeon, being stationed at Fort Larned, Kans., as post surgeon, did, on or about the 16th day of July, 1864, receive into the United States post hospital Robert McGee, a boy about 16 years old, who had been wounded in numerous places, including the almost complete (entire) removal of the scalp, his wounds and injuries being inflicted by the Brule Sioux Indians, led by Chief Little Turtle, in their attack upon a Government supply train then en route westward, being on the day of the attack, which, I believe, was July 14, 1864, at or near the Great Bend of the Arkansas River, from which point the wounded reached Fort Larned two days later. The said Robert McGee remained in my charge about three months, during which time he was visited by General Curtis, who instructed me to give him special care; also gave McGee an order on the quartermaster for such clothing as was necessary for his comfort.

"When he left the hospital he was very weak and fully two-thirds of the surface of the skull was not healed, being covered by a very delicate coat of granulation and which bled upon the slightest friction; also a wound of the left elbow and in left groin was still open. How he survived is unaccountable. When he reached the hospital he was unconscious from shock, loss of blood, and want of food. It was several days before he could whisper so as to be understood. He was handled by raising him in the sheet; his many wounds—some 14 in number—about chest, arms, and abdomen prevented us grasping in the ordinary manner. I have not seen him since he left Fort Larned.

"I made a report of all the cases that came to my charge at that time, making McGee's special because of his youth and its severity. I have no interest in any claim he may make upon any Department of the United States Government.

"H. H. CLARK, M. D.,
"Ex-Acting Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of November, 1892.
"ED. MARTIN, Clerk.
"By D. J. MILLER, Deputy."

Other affidavits of a like character are furnished by Nathan Swan, of Klova, Colo.; James L. Riggs and Martin Brown, of Pike County, Mo.; D. B. Gresham, of Meriden, Kans.; Miss Martha Sapp, of Wyandotte, Kans.; Jasper A. Hanna, of Brunswick, Mo., who was a private soldier at Fort Larned and acted as nurse to Mr. McGee during his sickness; J. R. Tunks, of Caldwell, Mo., who also acted as nurse for a short period. A letter from Mr. Belt, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of November 7, 1892, states that, under treaties of April 8, 1868, and agreements of February 28, 1877, and March 2, 1889, the Brule Sioux Indians, of Rosebud Agency, S. Dak., were made sharers of the beneficiary appropriations made to the Sioux Nation.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended, so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the claim of Mr. McGee for $10,000 compensation for his injuries, and to pay the same, if just and equitable, from the interest money due the Sioux Nation.

Mr. LOUD (during the reading of the report). Mr. Speaker, I do not care to hear any more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear some explanation of this bill. I have no doubt as to the truth of the historical facts recited, but my inquiry is as to the principle, the legal principle, involved of the right to take money that belongs to the Sioux Indians and pay for injuries that were inflicted in war really by a former generation of Indians; and I would like to know further whether the beneficiary of this fund proposes to afford them an opportunity to see whether their rights have been defended.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will simply state, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be no doubt of the fact that the beneficiary was scalped by this band of Sioux Indians.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. When did it take place?

Mr. DOCKERY. In 1864. The claim has been pending before Congress for some years. I will further say that the bill makes no appropriation, but simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the claim and to award to this man, after such investigation, $10,000 or so much thereof as he in his judgment thinks the claimant justly and equitably entitled to. The claimant has resided in my district for about five years, and prior to that time was a resident, I believe, of the State of Kansas. I know him personally. His condition is absolutely pitiable.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I have no doubt as to the accuracy of the historical facts; but this seems to me a new principle—at least it is new to me in this House—that of taking the money of a trust fund of the Indians and paying it to an individual for injuries he received in war. It is simply on that point of the law principle that I would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. DOCKERY. I quote from the report:

A letter from Mr. Belt, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of November 7, 1892, states that under treaties of April 8, 1868, and agreements of February 28, 1877, and March 2, 1889, the Brule Sioux Indians of Rosebud Agency, S. Dak., were made sharers of the beneficiary appropriations made to the Sioux Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the precedents. I know the matter has been thoroughly investigated at the other end of the Capitol, and that it was fully considered there. It passed the Senate unanimously after some consideration, formal and informal.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I would suggest to the gentleman that nothing is to be paid until after an investigation shall have been had.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true; nothing is to be paid until after an investigation. This bill, as heretofore stated, does not make any appropriation. The amount to be paid, if any, is to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GAMBLE. As I understand, this bill simply authorizes payment to be made if it be found the party is legally entitled to it.

Mr. DOCKERY. If he is legally entitled to it he is to be paid $10,000, or so much thereof as may be found just and equitable.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I did not happen to be present when that bill was considered, and I do not care to object to the consideration of a bill which has been reported by the committee——

Mr. DOCKERY. It has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GAMBLE. At the same time, the question occurs to me, as stated by the gentleman from North Dakota. Here is an occurrence thirty years ago. Trust funds have come to the Sioux Indians since that time; and to pay for a private injury, taking that amount out of the general funds of the tribe, is a matter which impresses me that the criticisms made by the gentleman from North Dakota are just; but if the question is to be determined upon a proper hearing, and upon evidence, I do not care to object.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is. One of the Senators from South Dakota, as I am informed, objected to this bill, basing his objection somewhat upon the grounds suggested by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]; but I think the bill as prepared meets the objection he made, because it refers the whole matter to the Secretary of the Interior for investigation and allowance.

Mr. CONNOLLY. These Indians were not entitled to any part of this fund at the time the injury was inflicted, as I understand?

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not say whether or not that is true.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The report states that they were made participants in the fund of the Sioux Indians in 1887.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not like to object to the gentleman's bill, but I will ask him to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DOCKERY. I trust the gentleman will not object to the bill. It is reported from his committee, and while it is true that the Indians live in the gentleman's State, the people of the United States have a general interest in the question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PICKLER and Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota objected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, under what order are we now acting? Are we proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. KEM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The regular order is the pension bills upon which the previous question has been ordered to their passage.

PENSION BILLS.

A bill (H. R. 4481) granting an increase of pension to Patsey E. Broaddus, of Marion, Kans.;

A bill (H. R. 2189) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Freeman; and

A bill (H. R. 2969) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy A. Allen.

The following bills, on which the previous question had not been ordered to their passage, were taken up and the previous question by unanimous consent ordered; and under the operation thereof the bills were severally read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4904) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Martin; and

A bill (H. R. 4724) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary L. Aleshire.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3105) to provide for the erection of a public building at McKeesport, Pa.;

A bill (S. 2540) to provide compensation for a bridge and for buildings and other improvements constructed by certain persons upon public lands afterwards set apart and reserved as the Yellowstone National Park;

A bill (S. 3381) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Patrick Larkin; and

A bill (S. 1135) for the relief of John Veeley.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8590) granting to the Denver, Cripple Creek and Southwestern Railroad Company a right of way for a railroad through the South Platte and Plum Creek forest reserves, in the State of Colorado.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1420) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. VILAS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 270) changing the time of holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of California.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1934) granting a pension to Carrie L. Yeaton; and

A bill (S. 739) granting an increase of pension to C. E. Philbrook, widow of Alvah Philbrook, major of Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. W. H. CRAIN, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the sympathies of the members of the Senate be tendered to the family of Mr. CRAIN in this bereavement, and that the Secretary of the Senate transmit to them a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2420) to regulate the pay of noncommissioned officers of the Army; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

MERCHANT MARINE ENGINEER SERVICE.

Mr. PAYNE submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 3013, "An act to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In the second and third lines of section 2, strike out the word "three" where it occurs in each of said lines and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

After the word "renewal," at the end of the first paragraph in section 2, insert the following:

"And in all cases where the issue is the suspension or revocation of such licenses, whether before the local boards of inspectors as provided for in section 4450 of the Revised Statutes, or before the supervising inspector as provided for in section 4452 of the Revised Statutes, the accused shall be allowed to appear by counsel and to testify in his own behalf."

S. E. PAYNE,
A. J. HOPKINS,
C. M. COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. P. FRYE,
WATSON C. SQUIRE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement of the House conferees was read:

The managers of the conference on the part of the House on the amendment of the Senate to the bill amending section 4131 of the Revised Statutes, to improve the merchant-marine engineer service, etc., H. R. 3013, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon, and recommended it in the accompanying conference report, viz., to agree to the Senate amendment with certain amendments thereto.

Although the Senate amendment is a substitute for the entire House bill, it makes but one important change. The House bill requires that all engineers and assistant engineers on American vessels shall be American citizens. The Senate substitute requires only that chief engineers and each assistant engineer in charge of a watch shall be American citizens.

The principal reason for applying this rule to all assistant engineers was because of the four ships of the American Line, which are auxiliary to the Navy. It was thought that all the assistant engineers on these vessels should, from motives of public and national policy, be citizens of the United States. But it appearing that 75 per cent of the assistant engineers are already citizens and that the balance will soon become so, the conferees on the part of the House concluded to concur in the Senate amendment.

The other amendments to the Senate amendment consist in extending the length of an engineer's license from three to five years, and to allow him the privilege of counsel and of testifying in his own behalf in cases when the issue is the suspension or revocation of licenses.

S. E. PAYNE,
A. J. HOPKINS,
C. M. COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5379) making it unlawful to shoot at or into any railway locomotive or car or at any person thereon or to throw any rock or other missile at or into any locomotive or car, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read at length, and concurred in.

SECTION 416, REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4452) to amend section 416 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is a mere formal amendment changing the wording. It does not change the character of the bill, and I ask that the reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KEM. I object.

The bill was read.

The Senate amendment was read, and concurred in.

BILLIARD AND POOL TABLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The bill was read.

The section amended by the Senate originally read as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall not be lawful for the proprietors of billiard tables, pool tables, bagatelle tables, jenny lind tables, or other tables of the kind mentioned in the first section of this act, shuffleboards, and bowling alleys, kept for public hire and gain in the District of Columbia, to sell or to allow to be sold in the same room or a room connected with and opening out of or adjacent to such room spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors; and all such places shall be closed during the entire twenty-four hours of each and every Sunday, and also during the hours that barrooms are required to be closed.

The amendment of the Senate struck out the following:

To sell or to allow to be sold in the same room or a room connected with and opening out of or adjacent to such room, spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors.

And inserted in lieu thereof the following:

To allow any person under the age of 21 years to play at any game of billiards, pool, shuffleboard, or any game that may be played on such tables or boards, or play at bowls on said alleys, or permit such person to come into or remain in their pool or billiard rooms, saloons, or bowling alleys, where spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors are sold.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important amendment to the last section of this bill, entirely changing the character of it. The House, after a thorough discussion, passed a bill containing a section forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors in any billiard or pool room that might be licensed in this city. The Senate has stricken that provision out entirely and inserted an amendment simply forbidding persons under 21 years of age from entering a billiard or pool room where intoxicating liquors are sold. That is an entire change of the character of the bill. I think, after the House took the position which it did take, that intoxicating liquors ought not to be sold in a billiard room or a room opening out of it, that it ought to insist upon its action and not concur in the action of the Senate, striking that out entirely and leaving billiard rooms to sell intoxicating liquors. I think it is a correct principle that where there is an amusement room like a billiard room there ought not to be a rum shop connected with it. If that is to be tolerated by law let it be a separate establishment.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know but it may be desirable to have a conference upon this matter. The House has expressed itself very thoroughly, and I am unwilling to have the House recede from its action. I think it is not in the interest of good morals that it should do it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask that the Senate amendment be again read. I think it is very full and clear.

The Senate amendment was again read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the House should nonconcur and insist upon its action, or, if the gentleman desires a conference, I have no objection to that.

Mr. BABCOCK. This amendment of the Senate provides that no minor shall be allowed in any room where there is a billiard table and where liquors of any kind are sold.

Mr. MILNES. The House bill provided that no liquor should be sold in any billiard or pool room.

Mr. DINGLEY. The House voted that a billiard room should not also be a rum shop, and I think, having taken that position, it should insist upon it. A billiard room should be simply a place of amusement, and a rum shop should not be joined with it. Let each stand on its own footing.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote on the motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you desire to concur?

Mr. BABCOCK. To concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Which, of course, would allow a billiard room to be also a rum shop.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, it would allow the sale of liquors in a billiard room; but it would not allow the presence of minors.

Mr. DINGLEY. The House expressed itself fully on that, and I hope it will insist on its former action.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that the House will not concur in the Senate amendment. We recently had an exhaustive hearing before the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and many citizens of this District were heard upon that occasion. They made loud, long, and bitter complaints against the combination of a billiard saloon and a liquor saloon, and they said that great numbers of young men were inveigled and enticed into these places by the attraction of the billiard room. These people were very earnest in demanding that the House bill as agreed upon here should be insisted upon. In the interest of good morals and in the interest of the young men of this city, I certainly hope that the Senate amendment will not be concurred in, but that the House will insist upon the bill as it left the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BABCOCK) there were—ayes 9, noes 72.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House nonconcur and insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The vote of the House not to concur is equivalent to a vote of nonconcurrence.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a conference.

A conference was ordered.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following resolution of instructions to the committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House conferees on House bill 5490 are hereby instructed to insist on so much of the House bill as forbids the sale of intoxicating liquors in billiard or pool rooms, or in rooms opening out of any such billiard or pool rooms.

The resolution of instructions was agreed to.

SECTION 3719 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4179) to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes, with Senate amendments to bill and title.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

DELIVERY OF IMPORTED PARCELS AND PACKAGES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DALZELL. I rise to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill.

The SPEAKER. By direction of a committee?

Mr. DALZELL. By direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6259) to expedite the delivery of imported parcels and packages not exceeding $500 in value.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any articles other than precious stones, jewelry, explosives, and articles whose importation is prohibited by law, not exceeding $500 in value, imported in packages not exceeding 100 pounds in weight, in vessels of the United States, may be appraised on the wharf under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and after such appraisement and assessment of duties by the collector may be delivered immediately under the bond provided for in this act to express companies or other duly incorporated inland carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise between the several ports in the United States: Provided, That not more than one such consignment to one ultimate consignee from the same consignor shall be imported in any one vessel: And provided, That the original appraisement and liquidation of such importations shall be final against the owner, importer, agent, or consignee, except in the case of manifest clerical errors, as provided for in section 34 of the act of June 10, 1890, and no protest or appeal therefrom to the general appraisers shall be allowed.

SEC. 2. That such express companies or other inland carriers shall be responsible to the United States under bond for the safe delivery of such articles to the ultimate consignee and for the collection and payment to the collector of customs at the port of arrival of the duties assessed thereon: Provided, That if any package shall not be delivered to the consignee by the express company or other inland carrier, but shall be returned to the collector within ninety days from the date of importation, with the seals provided for in section 3 of this act intact, the collector shall take charge of such package and dispose of it as unclaimed merchandise, and the express company or other inland carrier shall be relieved of any liability therefor under its bond; and before any express company or other inland carrier shall be permitted to receive and transport any such articles they shall become bound to the United States in such bonds of such form and amount and with such conditions not inconsistent with law and such security as the Secretary of the Treasury may require.

SEC. 3. That articles transported under the provisions of this act shall be corded and sealed in such manner as shall from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the collector of the port of first arrival shall retain in his office a permanent record of such merchandise so forwarded.

SEC. 4. That such packages may be consigned to and entered by the agents of the express company or other inland carrier or steamship company, who shall at the time of entry state the ultimate consignee, and in all cases where a certified or other invoice is now required by law such invoice may be attached to the package under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the delivery of such articles to the express company or other inland carrier shall not be delayed because of the nonarrival of the triplicate invoice, but the ultimate consignee shall be liable for any increased duty found due on receipt of such triplicate invoice, and the provisions of section 2857, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to importations under this act.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Is a second demanded?

A second was not demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that in the opinion of the Chair (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

BOTTLING DISTILLED SPIRITS IN BOND.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to move to suspend the rules and pass the following bill with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6562) to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any distilled spirits deposited in the warehouse of a distillery having a surveyed daily capacity of not less than 20 bushels of grain, which capacity, or not less than 20 bushels thereof, is commonly used by the distiller, have been duly entered for withdrawal upon payment of tax, or for export in bond, and have been gauged and the required marks, brands, and tax-paid stamps, or export stamps, as the case may be, have been affixed to the package or packages containing the same, the distiller of said distilled spirits, if he has declared his purpose so to do in the entry for withdrawal, may remove such spirits to a separate portion of said warehouse, which shall be set apart and used exclusively for that purpose, and there, under the supervision of a United States storekeeper or storekeeper and gauger, in charge of such warehouse, may immediately draw off such spirits, bottle, pack, and case the same: Provided, That for convenience in such process any number of packages of spirits of the same kind, differing only in proof, may be mingled together in a cistern provided for that purpose; but nothing herein shall authorize or permit any mingling of different products, or of the same products of different distilling seasons, or the addition or the subtraction of any matter or material or the application of any method or process to alter or change in any way the original condition or character of the product except as herein authorized; nor shall there be at the same time in the bottling room of any bonded warehouse any spirits entered for withdrawal upon payment of the tax and any spirits entered for export: Provided also, That under such regulations and limitations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, the provisions of this act may be made to apply to the bottling and casing of fruit brandy in special bonded warehouses.

Every bottle when filled shall have affixed thereto and passing over the mouth of the same such suitable adhesive engraved strip stamp as may be prescribed, as hereinafter provided, and shall be packed into cases to contain 6 bottles or multiples thereof, and in the aggregate not less than 2 nor more than 5 gallons in each case, which shall be immediately removed from the distillery premises. Each of such cases shall have affixed thereto a stamp denoting the number of gallons therein contained, such stamp to be affixed to the case before its removal from the warehouse; and such stamps shall have a cash value of 10 cents each, and shall be charged at that rate to the collectors to whom issued, and shall be paid for at that rate by the distiller using the same.

And there shall be plainly burned on the side of each case, to be known as the Government side, the proof of the spirits, the registered distillery number, the State and district in which the distillery is located, the real name of the actual bona fide distiller, the year and distilling season (whether spring or fall) of original inspection or entry into bond, and the date of bottling; and the same wording shall be pinced upon the adhesive engraved strip stamp over the mouth of the bottle.

And no trade-marks shall be put upon any bottle unless the real name of the actual bona fide distiller shall also be placed conspicuously on said bottle.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, by regulations, prescribe the mode of separating and securing the additional warehouse or portion of the warehouse hereinbefore required to be set apart, the manner in which the business of bottling spirits in bond shall be carried on, the notices, bonds, and returns to be given and accounts and records to be kept by the persons conducting such business, the mode and time of inspection of such spirits, the accounts and records to be kept and returns made by the Government officers, and all such other matters and things as in his discretion he may deem requisite for a secure and orderly supervision of said business; and he may also, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe and issue the stamps required.

The distiller may, in the presence of the United States gauger, remove by straining through cloth, felt, or other like material any charcoal, sediment, or other like substance found therein, and reduce, by the addition of pure water only, such spirits as are withdrawn for bottling purposes, below the original proof, but to not less than 80 per cent proof, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and no spirits shall be withdrawn for bottling under this act until after the period shall have expired within which a distiller may request a regauge of distilled spirits as provided in section 50 of the act of August 28, 1894.

SEC. 3. That all distilled spirits intended for export under the provisions of this act shall be inspected, bottled, cased, weighed, marked, labeled, stamped, or sealed in such manner and at such time as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe; and the said Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may provide such regulations for the transportation, entry, reinspection, and lading of such spirits for export as may from time to time be deemed necessary; and all provisions of existing law relating to the exportation of distilled spirits in bond, so far as applicable, and all penalties therein imposed, are hereby extended and made applicable to distilled spirits bottled for export under the provisions of this act, but no drawbacks shall be allowed or paid upon any spirits bottled under this act.

SEC. 4. That where, upon inspection at the bonded warehouse in which the spirits are bottled as aforesaid, the quantity so bottled and cased for export is less than the quantity actually contained in the distiller's original casks or packages at the time of withdrawal for that purpose the tax on the loss or deficiency so ascertained shall be paid before the removal of the spirits from such warehouse, and the tax so paid shall be receipted and accounted for by the collector in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

SEC. 5. That where, upon reinspection at the port of entry, any case containing or purporting to contain distilled spirits for export is found to have been opened or tampered with, or where any mark, brand, stamp, label, or seal placed thereon or upon any bottle contained therein has been removed, changed, or willfully defaced, or where upon such reinspection any loss or discrepancy is found to exist as to the contents of any case so entered for export, the tax on the spirits contained in each such case at the time of its removal from warehouse shall be collected and paid.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall reuse any stamp provided under this act after the same shall have been once affixed to a bottle as provided herein, or who shall reuse a bottle for the purpose of containing distilled spirits which has once been filled and stamped under the provisions of this act without removing and destroying the stamp so previously affixed to such bottle, or who shall, contrary to the provisions of this act or of the regulations issued thereunder, remove or cause to be removed from any bonded warehouse any distilled spirits inspected or bottled under the provisions of this act, or who shall bottle or case any such spirits in violation of this act or of any regulation issued thereunder, or who shall, during the transportation and before the exportation of any such spirits, open or cause to be opened any case or bottle containing such spirits, or who shall willfully remove, change, or deface any stamp, brand, label, or seal affixed to any such case or to any bottle contained therein, shall for each such offense be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not more than two years, in the discretion of the court, and such spirits shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 7. That every person who, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, alters, or counterfeits any stamp made or used under any provision of this act, or who uses, sells, or has in his possession any such forged, altered, or counterfeited stamp, or any plate or die used or which may be used in the manufacture thereof, or who shall make, use, sell, or have in his possession any paper in imitation of the paper used in the manufacture of any stamp required by this act, shall on conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding five years.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt spirits bottled under the provisions of this act from the operations of chapter 728 of the public laws of the Fifty-first Congress, approved August 8, 1890.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that bill.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] to act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 10.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. There are forty minutes for debate, twenty minutes on either side, one-half under the control of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS], and the other half under the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to debate the bill. I want an explanation from the other side.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that when the House hears even a slight explanation of this bill there will be anybody who will oppose it any more than there was in the Committee on Ways and Means. The bill has been very carefully considered, not only from the standpoint of those who desired its passage, but it was also very carefully considered from the standpoint of the Government. Its provisions meet the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with whom, under the directions of the committee, the subcommittee on internal revenue consulted upon every point in the measure. The purpose of the bill is to permit the bottling of spirits when they have reached the age of four years in such a manner as that anybody who is so unfortunate, or fortunate, as the case may be, to want a bottle of whisky or other spirits can knowto a certainty that he is getting a pure article. That is all.

The existing law requires that spirits when distilled shall be put into a bonded warehouse, and the proposed bill requires that after they shall have been in bond four years, after they have matured, after the tax has been fully paid to the Government, they may be bottled under such circumstances and under such supervision as will insure that there is no foreign substance whatever put into those spirits, so that if there are any pure spirits they can be found in bottles filled as required by this bill.

Understand, Mr. Speaker, that this does not interfere, nor is it intended to interfere, with anybody bottling spirits as he pleases outside of the distillery premises or outside of the distillery warehouse. Anybody may bottle there if he chooses. Anybody can bottle elsewhere, and put his goods on the market as he chooses; but there is a certain trade that desires some assurance, some guaranty of official supervision, that the sort of spirits they buy are pure spirits; that, in fact, there is no admixture with them of poisonous or other foreign substance.

The purpose of this bill is to permit those who make whisky to put it in bottles under Government supervision, instead of waiting until it goes out from under Government supervision, where parties can put whatever stuff they please into it. Not only is this so, but upon another ground there is a necessity for this bill, which arises largely from the fact that nearly all so-called pure spirits come from Canada. The only spirits bottled under Government supervision that are in the market are marked as "Canada Club" whisky. It comes in from Canada and is sold in large quantities. Gentlemen who travel on the cars, as perhaps all of you know, and who buy that whisky, buy it because it is supposed to be pure on account of being under a government bottling stamp. Now, by virtue of that fact, Canada has sent into this country large quantities of very inferior spirits, and they are selling them to our people and keeping the American producer out of his home market, although American producers are allowed no such privileges in Canada, they not being permitted to carry our spirits over there in quantities less than 120 of our gallons.

If you will take the trouble to read the report, you will find that one of the chief reasons given by the committee for the passage of this bill is that it tends to give to the home producer the home market instead of allowing it to the Canadians with an extremely inferior variety of spirits. These are the objects of this bill. I do not desire to take up all of my time in discussing it now, but if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] or anybody who is associated with him in objecting to the bill has anything to say, I shall be glad to hear it, reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I remember that a year or two ago, when an argument was being made in favor of extending the bonded period for whisky, we were told that it ought to be eight years, in order that the ripening process might go on—what was claimed to be a process of manufacture—namely, the elimination of fusel oil by evaporation while the liquor was in wood. Now I understand the gentleman to propose by this bill to arrest this ripening process, this elimination of fusel oil, by putting the liquor into bottles, where it will be impossible for the oil to escape. Will he please explain that? [Laughter].

Mr. EVANS. My genial friend from Iowa need not have any apprehension on that point. I am not a maker of whisky and I know but little about the practical operation of making it. From slight casual connection with the business, however, I do know that three years is the period required for ripening. The Wilson bill, among other incongruities, extended the bonded period to eight years, but in three or four years whisky is about as pure as it ever gets to be.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know, of course, how insolent it must appear for me to undertake to give instruction with regard to whisky to a gentleman from Kentucky [laughter], but I do remember very distinctly that when gentlemen were insisting on extending the bonded period, not only in the last Congress, but earlier, when the attempt was made to make the period five years, we were told first that five years and later that eight years was absolutely essential to the ripening of whisky, and that it would continue to undergo the ripening process—a process of manufacture, as they said—until the end of that period. Now, this bill seems to be intended to undo the work of that bill.

Mr. EVANS. No; the gentleman is mistaken. I think I know what I am talking about. At the time to which he refers they were very anxious to get some indulgence on account of the extremely depressed condition of the trade, and inasmuch as the tax was to be increased to $1.10 per gallon, they wanted some concession in the way of a lengthened bonded period, but that period was not necessary for the maturing of the whisky. Everybody knows that. Four years would do for that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Everybody but the gentleman from Iowa. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. Everybody but the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DINGLEY. It was intended to "mature" the pockets of the distillers. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. Yes. Inasmuch as you were going to increase the tax they wanted an increase of the bonded period.

Mr. COLSON. I will ask my colleague if it is not a fact that the greatest improvement in whisky occurs in the first four years?

Mr. EVANS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TATE. Why do you put the limit at 20 bushels of grain?

Mr. EVANS. Because it was supposed that where a less amount than that was used they would not be likely to have such warehouse facilities as to enable them to bottle the spirits under such supervision and safeguards against frauds as was necessary and as contemplated by the bill.

Mr. TATE. Is not this the same old story of giving the large manufacturers the monopoly of the business?

Mr. EVANS. That limitation was fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue upon the idea that the public interest could not be preserved if you gave this privilege to the very small distilleries.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask for a second for this bill for the purpose of debating it, but for the purpose of getting an explanation from the committee reporting the bill. I submit to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that he ought not to be too hard upon the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] in asking an explanation from him as to the effect of whisky, because everybody knows that people drink Kentucky whisky in summer to keep them cool and drink it in the winter to keep them warm. [Laughter.] There is no explanation of this stuff in bottles or barrels. It is the devil's own drink. It is the fruitful source of taxation, pauperism, crime, insanity, disease, and death. In this country 60,000 men annually go down to a drunkard's grave; 100,000 men crowd our almshouses and swell our taxes in consequence of strong drink; 500 murders and 500 ghastly suicides look up to heaven as the result of this blasting, withering traffic. Of all the engines the devil ever invented to destroy the bodies and souls of men and the peace of families, strong drink beats them all. It is the enemy of heaven and the ally of hell. I do not think it makes much difference whether you bottle whisky or whether you barrel it, the bill is unimportant. To my mind it makes very little difference which way you ship or sell the poison. I do submit again that the gentleman from Kentucky ought not to be questioned too closely in regard to its composition or its effects. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman has undertaken to tell us how many people die annually from the effects of Kentucky whisky; will he now tell us how many die annually from other causes?

Mr. MORSE. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, I want to say that the indirect effects of Kentucky whisky are probably far in excess of any statistics I have given. The indirect effects of Kentucky whisky God alone knows. It would take a large vessel to contain the tears of the orphans and widows, the men and the women that have been reduced to poverty and misery by Kentucky whisky. If I could have my say about it, I would see the whole accursed stuff in the Atlantic Ocean and never have another drop of it made, barreled, or bottled. [Laughter and applause.] I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to my colleague, Mr. COLSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would not attempt to shift the responsibility, Colonel EVANS. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that there is no export trade of any sort of whisky from Kentucky to the devil; so that if he gets it he gets it from Canada. [Laughter.] Furthermore, I am not here asking any favor for Kentucky whisky. I am here speaking seriously in behalf of a large industry in many States that certainly furnish a large amount of revenue to help pay our pensions. I am asking nothing for or against whisky. All I want is to give the distillers the privilege of bottling their whisky under the protection of the law. The existing law gives the right to produce. This bill neither enlarges nor takes away that right. It only allows their bottling after being produced. That is all.

I now yield three minutes to my colleague [Mr. COLSON].

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Speaker, the criticisms of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] on this bill do not go to its merits. The question of temperance is not directly involved in this measure. This bill simply seeks to give such protection to the public that they may know, when they do drink, whether they are drinking pure whisky or something else which may be a compound from the use of which the injurious effects follow of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] complains.

Mr. MILES. Does the gentleman speak from experience? [Laughter.]

Mr. COLSON. Only in part, but not from any experience that has occurred within the last few years.

Mr. Speaker, men will drink whisky; and I submit it is better for them when they do so to know that they are drinking straight Kentucky whisky. [Laughter.] If this bill should become a law, a man when he takes a drink can know whether he is drinking pure Kentucky whisky. You can not now go into a saloon in this or any city or town in this country and purchase a bottle of whisky and drink it feeling assured that it is straight whisky. It may be a very injurious compound. The rectifying houses all over the country are putting upon the market goods labeled as straight whisky, but not such in fact, but an article far more injurious than straight Kentucky whisky, and a person intoxicated by it is ready to kill anybody, not excepting even his mother-in-law. [Laughter.]

I need say nothing as to the merit of Kentucky whisky; that stands without any comment. I am opposed to the use of whisky; but if we have it, make it possible for the consumer to know he is getting the pure article. And, sir, those who are opposed to the use of whisky ought to favor such legislation as will insure the consumption of the pure article, which is the least injurious of all the whiskies consumed. That is all there is of this question.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. MORSE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE].

Mr. TATE. I offer the amendment indicated in the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. An amendment is not in order.

Mr. TATE. I ask that it may be read for information.

The SPEAKER. It will be read as part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "distillery," in line 4, strike out the words "having a surveyed daily capacity of not less than 20 bushels of grain, which capacity, or not less than 20 bushels thereof, is commonly used by the distiller."

Mr. TATE. I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept this amendment.

Mr. EVANS. Personally I should have no objection to it; but the bill as offered is in the shape which the officers of the Treasury Department insist is necessary as a safeguard for the interests of the Government.

Mr. TATE. Would it be in order to strike out "20 bushels of grain" and insert "5"?

Mr. EVANS. I make the point that the amendment is not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Speaker, I hope that if this bill be not amended in such a way as indicated in the proposition just read it will be voted down. I see no reason why this House should continue to legislate for the interest of the large distilleries, as has been done in the past.

No man unless he distills 20 bushels of grain daily is allowed the benefit of this measure. I see no reason for any such discrimination between the different distillers of the country. If a man who is legitimately engaged in distilling uses only 5 bushels of grain daily, why should he not be allowed to bottle his product in the same way as a man in Kentucky who uses 20 bushels? That is my objection to this bill, and it is one which my friend from Kentucky should readily appreciate. I do not see why he should not assent to the amendment I have proposed. It is perfectly fair. It gives the small distiller the same rights that this bill gives the large distiller. This bill is so palpably unfair that it should not pass unless the amendment suggested by me is agreed to.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] has urged as an argument in favor of drinking that large revenue is raised by the Government from this source and that this helps to pay the taxes. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I believe there would be as much statesmanship, and sense, and philosophy in inoculating men with smallpox and then laying a tax on coffins to raise revenue as in raising revenue by licensing men to carry on this business of making paupers, and beggars, and suicides, and murderers. [Applause.] Why, Mr. Speaker, did you read the confession of that poor, miserable wretch—Irving Ford—whose trial was entered upon to-day? Did you read his confession that on the morning of the day on which he committed the terrible deed and murdered Elsie Kreglo he says he bought a bottle of whisky and drank it? Perhaps it was Kentucky whisky. It certainly was bottled, as proposed by the pending bill.

Mr. COLSON. The trouble is that he got hold of the wrong kind. If he had got pure Kentucky——

Mr. MORSE. Now, I do not know anything about that. I do not know what State it came from. I only know the fact that before he did that awful deed he drank a bottle of this vile, damning, blasting poison that has destroyed and is destroying the bodies and souls of men. I verily believe he would not have committed the crime had his brain not been fired with this poison; and so I charge, Mr. Speaker, that that poor, miserable colored man, who is now awaiting his execution in the prison here for that crime, committed the crime in consequence of drink; and I charge that the man who sold him that bottle of whisky—I charge here and now, in the presence of God, men, and angels, that that saloon keeper was a party to that crime, and is in part responsible for that awful murder of an innocent girl and the grief and sorrow to that family.

Do you know that when John Wilkes Booth, when he was dying, kept looking at his hands and crying there was blood upon his hands. The attendant said to him, "No; Mr. Booth. We have washed your hand carefully; there is no blood on your hands." But he insisted there was blood on his hands. The blood of the martyred Lincoln was crying to heaven and the dying murderer thought he saw blood on his hands. And I charge the man who sold that bottle of whisky to this colored man that the blood of this poor girl is on his hands, and that he is in part responsible for that crime.

I notice down here on Pennsylvania avenue, in walking back and forth to the Capitol—I notice a large sign which bears in letters of fire the words "Hunter's Pure Rye." I do not know whether that means pure Kentucky whisky, or what kind of whisky it is; but, Mr. Speaker, it is a fitting emblem—those letters of fire. They stand for the fire that is never quenched, for the second death, for "eternal burnings," for the loss and the ruin and the destruction of souls caused by this blasting, withering, damning poison. The sign over every rum shop ought to be in fire, and there ought to be a skull and crossbones over the door for a trademark. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Kentucky says that strong drink is a large source of revenue to the Government. I hope the argument will never be advanced in this Congress that it is good policy and sound, wise statesmanship to raise revenues for the support of the Government by licensing men to make beggars, suicides, paupers, and murderers of their fellow-men. [Applause.] God pity the community, town, city, State, or nation that raises revenue that way. [Renewed applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary to pursue the argument further——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. EVANS. I see no necessity for further debate, and will ask a vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman yields the floor I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

I only want to add this, Mr. Speaker. I have not said anything about Kentucky whisky. I speak for all the States, and all the manufacturers in the States, who are interested as well as the people of the country generally in this legislation, some from the standpoint of trade, others from the standpoint of the revenue.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman where, or in what section of the bill, is to be found that provision to which he has alluded that secures to the purchaser a knowledge that the article he purchases from the distiller under the circumstances mentioned in this bill is pure? I do not find anything in the bill of that character.

There is no provision so far as I have been able to find either as to what the particular adhesive stamp is to be, or what its functions are, or how it is going to guarantee to a purchaser all that the gentleman from Kentucky claims for the bill.

Mr. EVANS. I wish to say that it is not my idea that the Government has anything to do with guaranteeing anything to the purchaser in any contract sense. But, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, the bill provides that all spirits in the distillery or bonded warehouse when the tax is paid may be bottled under the supervision of a United States officer. The adhesive stamp is affixed to the bottle over the mouth of it, which shows that the distiller has complied with the law, that it is his product, the proof strength of it, its age, and the act expressly provides that the bottle can not be opened without destroying the stamp, so that it can not be used over again for a fraudulent article. A provision is also made for punishing any person who attempts to alter or counterfeit such stamp.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman's answer does not meet the inquiry. I understood him to say that this would secure some kind of a guaranty for the purchaser that the article he purchases is a genuine article. Now, on the contrary, there is a provision in this bill which authorizes the mixture of different grades of whisky.

Mr. EVANS. Oh, no; I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. HEPBURN. The provision is that they shall be of the same vintage or of the same year. But you may mix them of different proofs and there is no guaranty, there is no surety, no requirement that the stamp shall indicate anything except what the gentleman suggested, that it was the product of a certain establishment; but there is no assurance of purity, no assurance of inspection, no assurance of any kind. This only authorizes the mixing and bottling of whiskies which have been in bond for four years.

Mr. EVANS. Why, it is absolutely certain, to anybody who understands anything of the business, that what I said at the outset is perfectly correct. The object of the bill is to have the bottling done under Government supervision. It is to be in the distillery warehouse; it is to be done before the spirits are taken from the distiller's premises; it is to be done under Government supervision, and the most stringent provisions for the protection of the purchaser are inserted in the bill.

But it is true it does say that the distiller may mix the same goods. That is to say, where there are two barrels of the same product produced in the fall, say of 1892, he may mix them. You can not expect that the bottling will just exactly exhaust the barrel, and in order to complete the filling of bottles it may be necessary to begin on a new barrel of precisely the same product. It does allow the mingling of two barrels of exactly the same sort of spirits, made by the same maker, of the same age, and all to be done under Government supervision.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does it allow the mixture of two barrels of different proofs?

Mr. EVANS. Of course; there are no two barrels of the same proof, except by accident. But it all may be reduced, by the admixture of pure water only, to a proof of 80 per cent. There is not a particle of difficulty on that subject. When that is done under the supervision of the officers, and that stamp is put over the mouth of the bottle, stating all the facts that this bill requires to be stated, it is as good a guaranty as any human mind can conceive of, unless the Government makes a contract——

Mr. HEPBURN. Your bill does not even require the proof to be stated, does it?

Mr. EVANS. Undoubtedly it does. You have got to state all that on the stamp.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will you turn to it?

Mr. EVANS. It is easy enough to do that—

> And there shall be plainly burned on the side of each case, to be known as the Government side——

Mr. HEPBURN. That is on the box, not on the barrel.

Mr. EVANS (reading)—

> The proof of the spirits, the registered distillery number, the State and district in which the distillery is located, the real name of the actual bona fide distiller, of the year and distilling season thereof, whether spring or fall, of original inspection or entry into bond, and the date of bottling, and the same wording shall be placed upon the adhesive engraved strip stamp over the mouth of the bottle.

It is always intended that the evidence of proof strength shall be there. It is positively, plainly, unquestionably so. Now, the Ways and Means Committee, let me say, had no thought about this as a Kentucky bill, a Pennsylvania bill, a Maryland bill, or a Missouri bill. It is only something that it seemed to us the distillers were fairly entitled to, to enable them to bottle their goods in a pure state, under Government inspection, to give them a market as against the Canadian article. That is the whole of it. I believe that there is not a member here who, when he understands it, will disapprove of this. The temperance question has nothing to do with it. I am as good a temperance man, I suppose, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE]. I have been as seldom drunk as any man in this House. I have nothing to say upon that; but this is only a question of business, that is all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TATE) there were—ayes 113, noes 20.

Mr. TATE. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present.

Mr. CROWTHER. What gentleman makes the point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point.

Mr. TATE. I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER (after counting the House). One hundred and ninety-nine gentlemen are present; a quorum. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, my motion was to pass the bill with the amendments suggested by the Committee on Ways and Means, which were largely formal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his clerks, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On May 6, 1896:

An act (H. R. 7200) for the relief of A. T. Hensley.

On May 8, 1896:

An act (H. R. 3544) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish not more than four pieces of condemned cannon to the village of New Rochelle, N. Y.

On May 9, 1896:

An act (H. R. 5853) granting a pension to Arminda Stucker, of Gallatin, Mo.

On May 11, 1896:

An act (H. R. 145) for the relief of J. J. Lints;

An act (H. R. 1191) to provide for the disposal of public reservations in vacated town sites or additions to town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma;

An act (H. R. 4456) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the cemetery association in the city of St. Paul, Minn., to be used at or near the foot of the soldiers' monument in said cemetery;

An act (H. R. 572) for the relief of James Duke; and

An act (H. R. 1889) granting an honorable discharge to F. L. Taylor from December 2, 1864.

NOTE.—The following bill was presented to the President April 29, 1896, and, not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval:

An act (H. R. 3852) to amend the record of William H. De Freest.

On May 13, 1896:

An act (H. R. 8820) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana and their delivery to the Canadian authorities;

An act (H. R. 6605) to revive and reenact an act to authorize the construction of a free bridge across Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta; and

An act (H. R. 2735) for the relief of Enoch Davis.

On May 14, 1896:

An act (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes; and

An act (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy.

On May 15, 1896:

An act (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives;

An act (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers;

An act (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.;

An act (H. R. 6104) for the relief of Anton Gloetzner;

An act (H. R. 3046) for the relief of Frederick Van Guilder;

An act (H. R. 1743) for the relief of Thomas L. Young;

An act (H. R. 175) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain uses of national military parks; and

An act (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to move to suspend the rules and ask for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7477) to provide for the registration of trade-marks on bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, and other receptacles and vessels used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and to prevent the fraudulent use of the same in such commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That any and all persons, firms, and corporations engaged in manufacturing, bottling, packing, or selling soda water, mineral or aerated waters, porter, ale, beer, cider, ginger ale, milk, cream, small beer, lager beer, weiss beer, white beer, or other beverages, or medicines, medical preparations, perfumery, compounds, mixtures, or other articles of merchandise in bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, with his, her, its, or their name or names or other marks or devices branded, stamped, engraved, etched, blown, impressed, or otherwise produced upon such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels used by him, her, it, or them in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, may obtain registration of such name or names or other marks or devices so used, as follows: Any such person, firm, or corporation may file in the Patent Office of the United States, to be recorded, a written statement specifying the name, domicile, citizenship, place or places of business and post-office address of such person, firm, or corporation, and giving a description and a facsimile of the name or names, or other marks or devices so used by him, her, it, or them, respectively, and the usual name of the article or articles manufactured, bottled, packed, or sold by such owner in such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, boxes, kegs, tins, other receptacles, or vessels, said statement declaring that such person, firm, or corporation is, at the time of such filing, the owner of such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, and that the same are used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, and that such person, firm, or corporation has at the time a right to the use of such name or names, or other marks or devices, sought to be registered, and that no other person, firm, or corporation has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive; and said statement shall be sworn to by such person, or by a member of such firm, or an officer of such corporation before a notary public or other officer competent to administer oaths, who shall attach his official seal to the same: Provided, however, That for each such statement so filed, and at the time the same is filed, the person, firm, or corporation filing the same shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25 as a fee for such registration, and shall comply with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Patents: Provided further, That no registration shall be allowed under this act except by persons, firms, or corporations domiciled in the United States or located in any foreign country, or tribes which, by treaty, convention, or law, afford similar privileges to citizens of the United States.

SEC. 2. That when any registration has been made as provided in section 1 of this act the Commissioner of Patents may issue a certificate in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Department of the Interior, and signed by said Commissioner, stating and specifying the name, place or places of business, and post-office address of the person, firm, or corporation obtaining such registration as owner, and giving a description of the registered name or names, or other marks or devices, so used on such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels fully as set forth in said statement filed under section 1 of this act, and such certificate shall state that such name or names, or other marks or devices, have been registered by such owner in accordance with this act, giving the title and date hereof. Such certificate of the Commissioner of Patents shall, in any prosecution under this act, be prima facie evidence of registration in accordance with this act, and also prima facie evidence that the person, firm, or corporation so registered as owner is the true owner of the bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, the name or names, or other marks or devices, on which have been so registered.

SEC. 3. That after the name or names, or other marks or devices, which appear on any bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels have been registered as provided in section 1 of this act, any person, firm, or corporation who shall use in traffic any such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels, or make the same the subject of commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes, or among or in the Territories of the United States, or with or in the District of Columbia, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $300, or be imprisoned not more than four months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall prevent, lessen, impeach, or avoid any remedy at law or in equity which any party aggrieved by any wrongful use or sale of such bottles, siphons, butts, hogsheads, barrels, half barrels, casks, half casks, quarter casks, kegs, boxes, tins, or other receptacles or vessels might have had if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 5. That the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to make rules and regulations and prescribe forms for the transfer of the said certificates of registration, and for recording the said transfers in his office.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

Two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House Resolution No. 220, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report the following substitute therefor:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this rule, and until 4 o'clock, Tuesday, May 19, the time of the House shall be given to the consideration of such bills on the House Calendar as have been reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and that at 4 o'clock, May 19, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the pending bill and pending amendments to the passage: Provided, however, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as interfering with general appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Before the previous question is ordered I should like to suggest that at the time this resolution was agreed upon by the Committee on Rules it was intended to give us to-day and to-morrow for the consideration of immigration bills. The day having been consumed by other business, I suggest that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be given another day (to-morrow and the day after) for the purpose of considering these bills. There are so many gentlemen who have signified to me their desire to occupy the floor that it will be impossible to get through by to-morrow at 4 o'clock. I would offer as amendment, Mr. Speaker, that to-morrow and Wednesday be devoted to the consideration of immigration bills.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no authority to accept that amendment. The request of the gentleman was for one day, and we give one day plus what is used this day. If to-morrow the House feels like an extension should be given, that could be done by unanimous consent, if it is the uniform judgment of the House; but we have other matters pressing from the Committee on Labor and the Committees on Elections; and inasmuch as this gives the day asked for and what is left of to-day, I think we ought to go ahead with the order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT and others. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 36.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on Wednesday at 4 o'clock instead of Tuesday.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to say a word right here. We may as well be square with each other. The gentleman from Missouri is opposed to the consideration of the bill at all, and does not represent the views of his committee. He asked for one day before he went away. We have given him one day, and he can have an hour during this day, and he has been spending to-day trying to prevent us from bringing up this bill at all.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say to the House, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, that he is entirely mistaken in his statement. I stand here fathering, favoring, and advocating the passage of the educational test bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the gentleman deny that he has been laboring with me not to bring up this rule?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I deny that.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all I claim.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I deny it. I only stated that there were quite a number of members of this House who had come to me and told me that it might not be policy to bring up this matter, and I simply reported to the gentleman from Iowa what those gentlemen told me, reserving my own individual view upon that question.

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly understood the gentleman to be opposed this morning to bringing up the rule to-day, and several other members told me he had spoken to them. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to treat this question at all, let us treat it, and have the manhood and the courage to do so. The gentleman knows we are planning to give two days to the Committee on Labor, and then there are several election cases to be considered, and no one knows at what hour the gavel of adjournment may fall.

Mr. PICKLER. I have had a resolution before the Committee on Rules for some time for the Committee on Invalid Pensions. [Laughter.] Last Friday night we were cut out of the time.

Mr. CORLISS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is not true that this is one of the most important questions now pending in this country, and one in which a great mass of persons are interested? And as the representative of the committee I think he ought to yield the time, and yield it gracefully.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I am simply attempting to represent the action taken by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, is there any way in which we can get a vote extending the time of this debate? Is it in order to move an amendment?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, I do not see that that can be done. But I want to say this: The question is on the request for unanimous consent and I have not objected to it. I only wanted the House to understand the position of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, because he seems to be fighting for more time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that debate be extended until Wednesday at 4 o'clock.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I object. [Cries of "Oh, don't!"] I want a day for pensions.

Mr. MILNES. That is not the way to get it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is a motion in order?

The SPEAKER. A motion will not be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Would it be in order to move to recommit this resolution to the Committee on Rules with instructions to strike out "19th" and insert "20th"?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I move to recommit the resolution.

The SPEAKER. But not at this time.

Mr. HENDERSON. There are twenty minutes for debate on each side. I reserve my time.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota withdraws his objection. Is there further objection?

Mr. KEM and Mr. BROWN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that some agreement may be reached by which we can have more time to debate this important bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I wish the House to understand that there is not merely one bill to be discussed, but there are four or five different bills, three of which have been reported by the Committee on Immigration to the House. I understand that the authors of those several bills desire to be heard. It is also customary that each member of a committee having a measure before the House for consideration shall have time in which to discuss it, and if that custom is to be complied with it will, of course, be impossible to properly debate this important measure to-morrow between the expiration of the morning hour and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. This is a very important question, the only one, by the way, upon which a caucus has been called during this session of Congress.

Now, if we are going to have this question up for discussion, my friend from Iowa, let us have it out, and let us have time enough in which to make the discussion thorough. For these reasons I hope the motion to recommit to the Committee on Rules with instructions to insert "Wednesday" instead of "Tuesday" will be adopted by the House. I yield now to my colleague [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, having just come into the Hall, I learn that a rule has been reported from the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of the immigration bill and allowing only four hours for debate. This is a very important question, and, aside from the members of the Committee on Immigration, I suppose that the members of the House generally will be disposed to discuss it thoroughly. Therefore, inasmuch as we have a good deal of time on hand, it seems to me that the gentleman from Iowa in charge of this report should consent to allow another day for this debate, and I hope he will do so.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, without expressing any opinion at all as to whether or not the time proposed in the rule should be extended, it seems to me that the chairman of the Committee on Immigration is putting the Committee on Rules in a false position. For the last three or four weeks I have been approached by a number of gentlemen, both inside and outside of the House, with respect to getting "a day for immigration," but until the gentleman from Missouri rose a while ago I never heard an intimation that he or anybody wanted more than one day. When the chairman of that committee was with the Committee on Rules this morning he did not intimate that he wanted more than one day.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will permit a brief interruption at that point, I want to suggest to him that he, as an old member of the House, knows very well that when a question is likely to come up for discussion is the time when members seek for an opportunity of debating it, and I myself had no idea that there were so many gentlemen desirous of discussing this matter until now, when there is an immediate prospect of its coming before the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been discussed in this House, pro and con, day in and day out, for the last two weeks, and, as I have already said, I have been approached by a great many gentlemen with reference to the subject, but until a moment ago I never heard an intimation that more time than one day was desired.

Mr. HENDERSON. If my colleague on the committee will allow me, I hold in my hand the original resolution introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD], for which we have brought in a substitute. That original resolution reads:

Resolved, That Monday, the 18th day of May, 1896, be set apart by the Committee on Rules for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Immigration of this House.

There is the official record. Now, by this rule we give them one day, and, in addition to that, all that can be saved out of this day.

Mr. DALZELL. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, a petition in relation to this matter has been in circulation in this House for two weeks, and no suggestion has been made by anybody that more than one day was desired. The chairman of the committee says there are four bills to be considered, but all those four bills can be considered at the same time. One of them may be presented by the chairman of the committee and each of the others may be offered as an amendment; and even if we consider that the whole four of them are to be before the House for discussion at one time, they contain propositions which require no lengthy discussion. Each bill embodies a single, solitary principle. For instance, the bill known as the McCall bill provides for an educational test. It embodies that single principle. The bill presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD], known as the Stone bill, provides for consular certification. The other bills, the one introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] and the one proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY], provide for the keeping out of alien labor, of aliens who come here to work and then go back to their own country, carrying their money with them.

Now, those three simple principles cover the whole ground, and there is no necessity for any very lengthy discussion unless, possibly, to get into the RECORD and send out matter for the benefit of our constituents, all of which can be done by obtaining leave to print, which I have no doubt will be given. Now, I end as I began. I am not expressing any opinion as to whether the time ought to be extended, and if the House is disposed to give more time I am not saying that I will not yield; but I want it to be understood that the Committee on Rules have reported in favor of giving the gentleman from Missouri all the time that he or anybody speaking on behalf of his committee has asked.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am certainly under obligations to the Committee on Rules because of their courtesy in not calling this matter up during my absence. I desire to go on record as saying that much. The chairman of each committee of the House, as I understand, is entitled to one hour. I have been informed by about six members of our committee that each of them desires from thirty to forty minutes. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], the author of one of these bills, desires from thirty to forty minutes, and a number of other gentlemen desire to be heard; and I submit that it would be impossible for all of these gentlemen to be accommodated between the expiration of the morning hour and 4 o'clock to-morrow. One hour will be consumed by the morning hour, so that it will probably be 1 o'clock before we reach this important matter, leaving for it only three hours, one of which I shall certainly have to occupy, no matter how the rest of the House may fare. I shall insist upon it. [Laughter.]

I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I look on this as one of the most important matters that can come before Congress. I do not think we are very much rushed for time. Why, sir, it is only a week since we adjourned over Saturday so as to allow members to go to a planked shad dinner down the Potomac somewhere, and nobody objected. Only last Friday we adjourned over because there was not any business to attend to. Yet the gentleman on the other side says we are so rushed with business that we must curtail this discussion. Here are two Saturdays that we have wasted in play. Now, why not devote one or two days to the discussion of a matter of this importance? Why, sir, I remember that we devoted four or five or six days to discussing the pension question. I remember, too, that liberal time was given to the consideration of other matters, such for instance, as the bankruptcy bill, on which, as is suggested to me, five days were occupied.

It is suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that members can print their speeches on this subject and in that way send them to their constituents. That may be; yet, sir, members naturally want to discuss this question before the House, for it is an important question, and its discussion ought not to be limited to three hours.

Are you afraid to discuss it? Is there anything in this question that scares anybody on this floor? Is the Republican party afraid to discuss it? Is the Democratic party afraid to discuss it? Is the Populist party afraid to discuss it? Is there any individual member here afraid to discuss it? If not, why not give plenty of time for its discussion? I repeat, it is an important question. The conventions of nearly all the States in the Union have passed resolutions in regard to it. It is a question we have got to meet. We can not suppress it; we can not put it under our feet. When a caucus was called upon this matter some of you gentlemen succeeded in suppressing it by staying away, so that there was not a quorum. Now, why not meet this matter boldly? Why not discuss it?

Three hours to discuss the immigration measure, which affects the whole United States, when we had five days to discuss the bankruptcy bill and when we have been able to adjourn over two successive Saturdays in order to have a good time! I do not object to such adjournments; I am simply urging that we have plenty of time. We are not going to adjourn within a week, or two weeks, or three weeks. Gentlemen need not worry about adjournment. We are bound to stay here for at least two weeks more, and they might as well understand it first as last. In my judgment, speaking from what I have heard to-day, we are bound to be here at least four weeks longer. We will be here three weeks at any rate; and we can not put in three or four days any better than in discussing this immigration question. [Applause.] It is a question that affects every city, every county, every State in the Union; it affects the whole country. The evils of immigration are striking a blow at the heart of the nation; they are affecting us most deeply when we attempt to deal with the different problems of citizenship and statesmanship in this land. We ought to discuss this question, and we ought to discuss it among ourselves—not merely print our speeches in the RECORD to send them to our constituents.

I am informed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TRACEWELL] that more petitions have been filed in this House in favor of action on the immigration question than upon all other matters put together. That shows that the American people are waking up in reference to this subject, that they are beginning to understand that this immigration question is the question of the day. Therefore we ought to take hold of it and act upon it. If in order, therefore, I will move, unless the motion shall be made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]—and I desire to give notice of the motion now—that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Rules with instruction to strike out "19th" and insert "20th."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I am getting a little scared at finding myself in the same boat with a gentleman who is entirely opposed to immigration. Therefore I submit as a compromise proposition the request that the House permit these various immigration bills to be discussed to-morrow until 5 o'clock, and that the vote be taken on Wednesday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HENDERSON. That will be agreeable to me, and I am satisfied that my colleagues on the committee will agree to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]?

Mr. JOHNSON of California and others objected.

Mr. PARKER rose.

Mr. HENDERSON. We will give the gentleman a chance to be heard after a while.

Mr. PARKER. I do not want to talk after a while; I want to talk now. I want to talk on this question of time.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all right.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, when there are three propositions, three several bills before the House——

A MEMBER. Four.

Mr. PARKER. Four different bills, involving as many different plans of settling one of the most important subjects that can come before this House for disposition, I submit that we should trust the House to discuss each measure successively and to come to a conclusion on deliberation. [Applause.] If we are to go into this question at all, I deprecate going into it in any such way as we have disposed of other measures. If we are going into the question at all, let us understand it and probe it to the bottom, and let us see and know what we are dealing with. The great throngs of honest, straightforward, earnest men and women, families striving to better their condition, whom we may keep out by any plan that is not exactly right, is a matter of serious moment. Let us take time and consider it in all of its details. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri will yield to me for a moment, I would like to say a word.

The Committee on Rules, with reference to the measures that come from one committee, have provided for ten days of debate. Neither one of the propositions was of that importance to receive the attention of any of the national conventions; yet this question that now presents itself, that has received the attention of every national convention assembled in 1892, and was declared by them to be one of the burning questions that ought to be considered, this question is to be disposed of with but three or four hours' debate. I do not believe that such a question ought to be disposed of in that time. [Applause.] It is one of the utmost consequence; and, as has been said here, there are four radically different propositions. They are reported here by four different gentleman; and if each one is given an hour to discuss his proposition, that consumes all the time the Committee on Rules propose to give for the consideration of this entire matter.

I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw his compromise proposition, and that the House will insist on the matter being recommitted, with instructions to the Committee on Rules to give proper time for the consideration of a measure of such vital importance as this. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask how much time is remaining, Mr. Speaker, on each side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has nine minutes and the gentleman from Iowa fourteen.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a few minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I have been, perhaps, as much engaged in endeavoring to get the consideration of immigration bills as any other member of the House, and while I am perfectly willing, and would, in fact, desire more time than the rule gives, yet I feel it to be my duty to the House to say that the Committee on Rules has treated the petitioners on this subject with absolute fairness and has not intended to report any insufficient time. It has taken the requests submitted to it and accorded the time in pursuance of them.

Now, I am not opposed to extending the time, but I do not think there is the slightest room for criticism of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We do not mean to make any such criticism.

Mr. HENDERSON. I yield to my colleague from Iowa a few moments.

Mr. LACEY. I only wish to make a suggestion. The House has already practically agreed to extend the debate until 5 o'clock. There seems to be no objection to that. I would suggest, therefore, that unanimous consent be had that at 5 o'clock to-morrow evening a recess be taken until 8 o'clock, and the evening session be devoted to debate only. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

A MEMBER. The weather is entirely too hot for that.

Mr. LACEY. That would give about three hours' additional time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] that the time be extended under the resolution until 5 o'clock, and that a vote be taken on Wednesday immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. BLUE and others objected.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, if we can get unanimous consent to that, I would be willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to have an evening session. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, now let us understand each other if we can. I have read the resolution sent to the Committee on Rules asking for one day. We had before us the chairmain of the committee this morning before acting, and Colonel STONE, the author of the Stone bill, and anybody else that we could find that was interested in the matter who was near, and concluded to give them to-morrow and what we could save of to-day. We gave all that was asked and more. A good hour could have been saved to-day if we had gone promptly to work on this bill.

I can not agree with my friend from California [Mr. JOHNSON] as to the length of the session, although I do not pretend to be anything of a prophet in that direction or any other But, from the best evidence we have, we ought to be away from the 7th to the 10th of June beyond question. In the meantime we have four election cases ready for consideration. We feel that the Committee on Labor should have two days, and we have other matters pressing upon the committee. We are trying to divide the time. Now, when we have given this committee all that it asked and more, I simply want the House to understand that your Committee on Rules, with whom it is very easy to find fault, are doing the best that we can to keep matters moving in the House, in the most prudent way that we can, after taking counsel from the membership of the House; and when we have done all that, we do not want to be put in a false light by the committee for which we have been acting, especially in this instance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one or two requests have been made for unanimous consent——

Mr. CROWTHER. I should like to suggest to my friend——

Mr. HENDERSON. Just let me finish my remarks and see if we can not get to work. I will take the responsibility, after consultation with two other members of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]—I have not had the time to consult with the Speaker—of making the proposition that the committee have to-morrow and until 3 o'clock on the following day and take a vote at that time, under the operation of this rule.

Several MEMBERS. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. KEM. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is perfectly evident that objection will be made to any proposition of this sort. If the Speaker will recognize me, I will amend the resolution and endeavor to get it passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and to pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this rule, and until 4 o'clock, Wednesday, May 20, the time of the House shall be given to the consideration of such bills on the House Calendar as have been reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I want to know what that means. Does it mean that debate will cease to-morrow at 4 o'clock——

A MEMBER. The day after to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And then that the debate shall begin again the next day and run until 3 o'clock? As I understand, it was to be all day to-morrow.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman will see that the proposition is not to limit to-morrow's session.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. What becomes of the resolution from the Committee on Rules on which the previous question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. The action of the House upon this, if there were no objection, would suspend it.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not want to object to the Committee on Immigration having the time, but I am very much in earnest in behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that they may have some time for the consideration of pension bills, and I ask this in behalf of 300 gentlemen here on this floor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to this proceeding?

Mr. PICKLER. No; I do not object to this.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask that the rule be read.

Mr. PITNEY. I should like to have the rule again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this rule, and until 4 o'clock, Wednesday, May 20, the time of the House shall be given to the consideration of such bills on the House Calendar as have been reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; and that at 4 o'clock, May 20, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the pending bill and pending amendments to the passage: Provided, however, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as interfering with general appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is all right.

Mr. PICKLER. That gives them two days.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unless a second is demanded, the Chair will put the question to a vote. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution.

Two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed.

REPRINT OF IMMIGRATION BILLS.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask a reprint of all the reports on the immigration bills reported by the committee and now upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. KEM. I object.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill H. R. 58, and the report, which are exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] asks unanimous consent for the reprint of House bill 58, and the report thereon. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. I object.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 3105) to provide for the erection of a public building at McKeesport, Pa.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 19, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

ELLEN C. EWING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 6, after the word "Ellen," to insert the letter "C."; in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Ellen C. Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Aten and sundry other citizens of Hillsdale, Iowa, praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CALIFORNIA STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. WHITE. I present a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the payment of certain claims of the State of California, and transmitting the report of the Auditor for the War Department on the subject. I move that the communication be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE M'FARLAND.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7285) for the relief of George McFarland, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a House bill of but a few lines and a clear case. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to issue duplicates to George McFarland, of McArthur, Ohio, in lieu of United States 4 per cent coupon bonds issued under acts of Congress approved July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, No. 54972, for $50, and No. 105451, for $100, with interest coupons attached, dated January 1, 1893, and subsequently, the bonds and interest coupons having been destroyed by fire.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KENNEBEC RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. FRYE. A recent freshet in the Kennebec River has so injured the channel of the river that the Boston boats can not go up to the city of Augusta, the capital of the State. The local officer in charge rules that he has no right to use the money which has been hitherto appropriated because it was appropriated to carry out certain projects. The Committee on Commerce authorize me to report a joint resolution and to ask that it may receive consideration now.

The joint resolution (S. R. 147) concerning the improvement of the Kennebec River, Maine, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use so much of the money heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Kennebec River, in the State of Maine, as may be necessary for the repair of the works and the restoration of the channel damaged by the recent freshet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes. I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD and printed as a document as well, and I give notice that to-morrow morning or as early thereafter as possible I shall ask for the consideration of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2573) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon to the Lake Madison Veteran Association, Grand Army of the Republic, of the State of South Dakota.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2384.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that we get through with the morning business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3168) to pension Frances A. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 3169) to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to lifeboats, etc., on ocean, lake, and sound steamers, and the penalty for refusing to provide such; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1702) to provide for doing away with certain grade crossings on the lines of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in the city of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED SUNDAY-REST LAW.

On motion of Mr. KYLE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the consideration of sundry petitions praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law in the District of Columbia, and that they be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Ordered, That the petitions on the files of the Senate praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law in the District of Columbia be taken therefrom and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

SOUTHERN STATES EXPOSITION AT CHICAGO.

Mr. BACON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Select Committee on International Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas an exposition of the economic and industrial resources of the Southern States is to be held in the city of Chicago during the months of August, September, October, and November of the current year, whose purpose is to assist the development of the South by displaying the variety, extent, and distribution of its useful raw materials and their possible utility; and

Whereas various departments of the United States Government have heretofore collected and are now in possession of material adapted for the purpose named, namely, specimens of agricultural, forest, and mining products of the South, and other materials adapted to illustrate their use, value, and the conditions affecting them: And now, therefore

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretaries of the various Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institute, and the Fish Commission be authorized to permit the use of suitable material, within their control, for the purpose of the Southern States Exposition at Chicago under the following conditions:

1. That permission shall not be granted for the removal of any specimens, collections, or materials whose temporary absence would impair the public service.

2. That all expenses of every sort and nature, connected with the removal and replacement of the property loaned by the Government, shall be paid by the agent of the Southern States Exposition at Chicago; and that due guaranty shall be given for the safe-keeping and return in its original condition of said property.

UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Committee to Establish the University of the United States, 5,000 copies of Senate Report 429, first session Fifty-fourth Congress, including the report of the minority.

ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS, ETC.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk. It is connected with the business of the Committee on Appropriations in the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those embraced in House Document No. 322, of the present session, up to and including the 21st instant; also a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and by United States courts not heretofore reported to Congress at its present session.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I submit from the Committee on Appropriations the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7543) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and also as a document. After the disposition of the conference reports on the legislative bill and the sundry civil bill I shall ask the Senate to consider this report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed as indicated by the Senator from Maine.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7542) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 23, 30, and 55.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 50, and 54, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "And the Secretary of the Navy shall detail a clerk of class 1 to perform clerical services in the Navy Department necessary to carry on the work incident to this appropriation;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma (,) after the word "laboratory," in line 3, page 22 of the bill, and restore the matter stricken out by said Senate amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in lines 4 and 5 of said amendment, the words "made for the same" and insert in lieu thereof the word "completed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the words inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "At $2,500 each; one of English studies, history, and law (after thirty years' service), $2,500"; and strike out, in lines 22 and 23, page 36 of the bill, the words "at $2,500 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 15) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Mountain View Cemetery Association, at Oakland, Cal., certain cannon, etc.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has closed.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill called up by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he will allow me to have passed the bill which I asked to have considered a little while ago? It will take but a moment.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

DAVID O. BURLEIGH.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2384) for the relief of David O. Burleigh. There will be no discussion upon it, I will say to the Senator from Colorado.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that David O. Burleigh shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a captain of Company I, Fourth New Hampshire Infantry Volunteers, on the 4th day of June, 1864, and directs the Secretary of War to revoke the order cashiering Burleigh, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge as of that date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEONARD L. BROWNSON.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2583) for the relief of Leonard I. Brownson, late first lieutenant Company K, Fifth Vermont Volunteers. It is a bill of only a few lines.

Mr. TELLER. I will yield to the Senator from Vermont if there is no discussion upon it. If there is, I must object.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask for its consideration with that understanding. A similar bill passed the Senate in the Fifty-second Congress, and it was favorably reported in the other House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States to revoke and set aside so much of General Orders, No. 21, Headquarters Middle Military Division, dated September 18, 1864, as dismissed First Lieut. Leonard I. Brownson, Company K, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, for absence without leave and for conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline, and to grant and cause to be issued to him a certificate of honorable muster out of the service as of the date of September 18, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may be read for the purpose of acting upon the amendments of the committee, and that the amendments be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 13, before the words "assistant inspectors," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; in line 19, after the word "thousand," to insert "two hundred"; on page 3, line 1, before the word "assistant," to strike out "four" and insert "five"; in line 4, before the word "and," to strike out "forty-nine thousand eight hundred" and insert "fifty-two thousand"; and in line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to credit the accounts of the ex-Boards of Commissioners of the District of Columbia with all disbursements and expenditures which have heretofore been suspended or disallowed in the settlement of their accounts wherein it shall satisfactorily appear that the money was paid in good faith for goods sold and delivered, work and labor done, materials furnished, or services actually rendered for the benefit of the District: Provided further, That in crediting and allowing said disbursements and expenditures no money on account thereof shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 3, before the word "inspector," to strike out "office of the" and insert "offices of the inspector of gas and meters and the"; in line 9, after the word office," to insert "sealer of weights and mensures' office"; in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-two thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty-four thousand"; and in line 14, after the word "purposes," to strike out:

And provided further, That the whole cost of maintaining and keeping in good order the laboratory and apparatus in the office of the inspector of gas and meters shall hereafter be paid by the Washington Gas Light Company.

And insert:

And provided further, That the recorder of deeds shall make no charge for reporting to the assessor of the District of Columbia for entry upon the tax books transfers of real estate as required by law.

So as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, namely: For printing, checks, books, stationery; detection of frauds on the revenue; repairs of market houses, painting; surveying instruments and implements, drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; maintaining and keeping in good order the laboratory and apparatus in the offices of the inspector of gas and meters and the inspector of asphalt and cement; damages; care of horses not otherwise provided for, horseshoeing; fuel, ice, gas, repairs, insurance, repairs to pound and vehicles, and other general necessary expenses of District offices, including the sinking-fund office, office of the superintendent of charities, harbor master, health department, surveyor's office, sealer of weights and measures' office, and police court, $24,000; and the Commissioners shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein: Provided, That horses and vehicles appropriated for in this act shall be used only for official purposes: And provided further, That the recorder of deeds shall make no charge for reporting to the assessor of the District of Columbia for entry upon the tax books transfers of real estate as required by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the last provision. It is very proper indeed, but it ought to go a little further and make it the duty of the recorder of deeds to report the transfer of property to the proper officer of the District of Columbia. This provision does not seem to make it the duty of the recorder of deeds to make such a report, and I know a good deal of difficulty has occurred by the failure to give notice of transfers.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear upon this side one word the Senator from Ohio is saying.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am referring to the amendment on page 10, beginning in line 18, which provides "that the recorder of deeds shall make no charge for reporting to the assessor of the District of Columbia for entry upon the tax books transfers of real estate as required by law." I wish to inquire whether there is any law which requires the recorder of deeds to give notice of the transfer of real estate, because I know a good deal of difficulty has occurred by a failure to give proper notice. I therefore suggest to add: "And it shall be the duty of said recorder to make such report."

Mr. TELLER. I can not state whether there is any such law. The Commissioners suggested this amendment, and I supposed there was a law which required the recorder to make the report. But there can be no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. The recorder of deeds is mentioned. Let it read:

And it shall be his duty to report to the Commissioners of the District all transfers of real estate when made.

Mr. TELLER. If it is not exactly right it can be fixed in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 21 add:

And it shall be the duty of the recorder of deeds to report to the Commissioners of the District all transfers of real estate when made.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 6, to increase the appropriation for rent of District offices from $7,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 20, to insert:

For purchase of site and erection of morgue, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 25, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one thousand nine" and insert "two thousand five"; so as to make the clause read:

For general advertising, authorized and required by law, and for tax and school notices and notices of changes in regulations, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "eight"; so as to make the clause read:

For advertising notice of taxes in arrear July 1, 1896, as required to be given by act of March 19, 1890, $8,000, to be reimbursed by a charge of $1.20 for each lot or piece of property advertised.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "four"; and in line 12, after the word "available," to insert:

Provided, That the employees in the office of the assessor may be assigned to duty in the preparation of said numerical books in addition to their regular duties, and may be allowed a reasonable compensation for said additional services from said appropriation.

So as to make the clause read:

To enable the assessor to transcribe the general assessment and prepare the numerical book, $4,000, the same to be immediately available: Provided, That the employees in the office of the assessor may be assigned to duty in the preparation of said numerical books in addition to their regular duties, and may be allowed a reasonable compensation for said additional services from said appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available"; so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioners to have plats of subdivisions of the squares in that portion of Washington formerly known as Georgetown photolithographed, $346, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, to increase the appropriation for plats of subdivisions outside of Washington and Georgetown from $1,500 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 7, to insert:

Extension of highways: To pay the expenses of completing a plan for the extension of a permanent system of highways in conformity with the "Act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," approved March 2, 1893, $12,500, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That of this sum so much as may be necessary may be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the preparation of plans, in part, and for reports by Frederick Law Olmstead, or other eminent landscape architect, on the said extension of a permanent system of highways. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized, in preparing such plan, to lay out parkways leading toward or connecting grand parks, and to so modify the recorded plan of the first section that the Piney Branch and Spring Road parkway may be of width not exceeding 250 feet.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the words of the amendment after the word "highways," in line 20, may be reserved.

Mr. TELLER. Then let the amendment be passed over.

Mr. CHANDLER. The first part may be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will ask to have the first part adopted down to the word "highways," in line 20, and the rest will be left open.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to the word "highways," in line 20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The last clause of the amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized, in preparing such plan, to lay out parkways leading toward or connecting grand parks, and to so modify the recorded plan of the first section that the Piney Branch and Spring Road parkway may be of width not exceeding 250 feet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The next amendment was to insert at the top of page 14:

For advertising and court expenses necessary for the execution of the act entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," approved March 2, 1893, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 5, to insert:

Payment for lots, Potomac River Flats: For payment of the owners of the lots and parts of lots referred to in the decrees passed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the case of the United States vs. Morris and others, and located in squares 63, 89, 129, and 148, in the city of Washington, in said District, which lots and parts of lots have been included within the limits of the improvement of the Potomac River and its flats, in charge of the Secretary of War, $26,684.09; which payment shall be made to and received by the respective owners of such lots and parts of lots in full discharge, acquittance, and release by such owners to the United States of all their right, title, interest, and claims of every description, as well in the soil of such lots and parts of lots, as of all claim of such owners on account of impairment or injury to any rights whatsoever therein claimed or suffered by such owners from the filling in of such lots and parts of lots and their inclusion within the limits of said improvement; and which payment shall be made upon orders of the said court to the persons who have already been determined by the said court to be the owners of some of the said lots and parts of lots, and also to the persons who shall hereafter be determined by said court to be the owners of the residue of said lots and parts of lots; such orders to be passed from time to time upon application to the court therefor, by the several persons so determined, or who may be hereafter determined to be such owners; the appropriation herein made to be immediately available for the purposes specified.

Mr. TELLER. By direction of the committee I offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in directly after the word "specified" in line 10.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "specified," in line 10, page 15, it is proposed to insert:

That the entire area formerly known as the Potomac Flats and now being reclaimed, together with the tidal reservoirs, be, and the same are hereby, made and declared a public park, under the name of the Riverside Park, and to be forever held and used as a park for the recreation and pleasure of the people.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, line 13, to increase the appropriation for assessment and permit work from $125,000 to $165,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, under the head of "Improvements and repairs," in line 17, to increase the appropriation for work on streets and avenues named in Appendix X, Book of Estimates, 1897, from $100,000 to $284,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 22, to increase the appropriation for the Georgetown schedule from $9,000 to $22,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, to increase the appropriation for the northwest section schedule from $80,000 to $107,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 4, to increase the appropriation for the southwest section schedule from $15,000 to $36,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 6, to increase the appropriation for the southeast section schedule from $23,000 to $53,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 8, to increase the appropriation for the northeast section schedule from $23,000 to $62,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 11, to insert:

For paving Florida avenue, south side, from Connecticut avenue to Eighteenth street, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 18, to insert:

For paving P street northeast, from North Capitol street to Florida avenue, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 19, before the word "cents," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "ninety," and on page 17, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "and fifteen cents"; so as to make the clause read:

That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $1.90 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1895, and with same depth of base: Provided, That these conditions as to price and depth of base shall not apply to those streets on which, in the judgment of the Commissioners, by reason of heavy traffic, poor foundation, or other causes, a pavement of more than ordinary strength is required, in which case the limit of price may be increased to $2.15 per square yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, in line 16, to increase the appropriation for cleaning and repairing sewers and basins from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 22, to increase the appropriation for suburban sewers from $18,520 to $121,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 22, to insert:

For constructing the Fifteenth street and F street portion of the F street and Easby's Point intercepting sewer, $87,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to insert:

For sewer in Fifteenth street extended, between Columbia road and Kenesaw avenue, $1,000; and authority is hereby given the Commissioners of the District to lay a water main in said street between the points named if found necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 9, to increase the appropriation for the continuation of the Rock Creek and B street intercepting sewer from $40,000 to $190,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available"; so as to make the clause read:

For completion of the Eckington Valley sewer, $17,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 14, to increase the appropriation for the completion of the Kenesaw avenue sewer from $4,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 17, to increase the appropriation for condemnation of rights of way for construction, maintenance, and repairs of public sewers from $1,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 5, after the word "collected," to insert:

Provided, That no street railroad company in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to run cars over any part of the route of any underground electric or cable road by a route or routes not specified in its charter or specifically described in amendments thereto, except by authority of Congress hereafter to be granted.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Colorado to allow this amendment to be passed over for the present. The District Committee may wish to express a desire to put the amendment into somewhat different form.

Mr. TELLER. We will let the amendment be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 19, line 15, to increase the appropriation for repairs to county roads from $40,000 to $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 24, under the head of "Construction of county roads," to increase the appropriation for grading and regulating Sherman avenue and Roanoke and Irving streets from $10,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 8, on page 20.

Mr. TELLER. After the word "that," in line 5, page 20, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, page 20, after the word "that," it is proposed to insert:

No part of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended on Sherman avenue until.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended on Sherman avenue until the owners thereof dedicate to the District of Columbia the ground for widening Sherman avenue in conformity with the adopted and recorded plans of highway extensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. There ought to be some provision, if this clause is adopted, requiring the United States—because it owns a large portion of the land along Sherman avenue—to surrender a portion of its land in order to widen the street.

Mr. TELLER. The attention of the committee was not called to the necessity of anything of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a necessity——

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Ohio can move an amendment to cover it. I have no knowledge on the subject myself.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Ohio allude to the particular tract which is set aside for the hospital?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That belongs to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. It belongs to the District of Columbia or the United States of America.

Mr. ALLISON. It belongs to the District of Columbia.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment I have just offered was suggested by the Commissioners. They suggested no further amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the amendment. I merely mention this difficulty. There ought to be authority in some one, the District Commissioners or the President——

Mr. TELLER. If the District owns the land, it is all right. If the United States owns it, there ought to be some such provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that it is owned by the Garfield institution, which is a corporation.

Mr. TELLER. If it is the property of the Garfield Hospital, it will come under the provision we put in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the adopted and recorded plans of highway extensions described in the last line of the clause do not take in the District land which he thinks should be included? I have an impression that the adopted and recorded plats of highway extensions cover the land which the Senator from Ohio desires to see made a part of the avenue, but that this clause is necessary to compel the landowners within the recorded limits to convey their title in order that the avenue may be opened to the full width. If the recorded plats cover the District land, they take it. If they cover United States land, they take it. It is only the private owners who are required to convey.

Mr. TELLER. It appears from an examination of the last act that the hospital own this land, and it was provided that they should dedicate it. They did so, and we have gone through a building, and there is an item of $7,500 in the bill for the damage done to the building.

Mr. SHERMAN. That has been done under existing law?

Mr. TELLER. Under the law of last year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Probably that covers it.

Mr. TELLER. There does not seem to be any necessity for further action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, after line 8, to insert:

For taking down brick building on the northeast corner of Garfield Memorial Hospital grounds, the removal of which has been made necessary by reason of the widening and grading of Sherman avenue at that point, and constructing another building on said premises to take its place, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 14, to insert:

For grading and regulating Columbia road, Sixteenth street northwest extended, Prospect street, Crescent street, Superior street, Erie street, Central street, Meridian and Ontario avenues, Meridian Hill: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 19, to insert:

For paving Connecticut avenue and Columbia road between Florida avenue and Wyoming street, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 22, to insert:

For grading Massachusetts avenue extended, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 24, to insert:

For grading and graveling Albemarle street and opening same by purchase or condemnation to Grant road: Continuing improvement, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 2, to insert:

For grading Illinois avenue, $2,500.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the committee to move to amend the amendment by striking out "$2,500" and inserting "$5,000"; so as to read:

For grading Illinois avenue, $5,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 4, to insert:

For grading Michigan avenue, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 5, to insert:

For paving Harewood avenue from Maple to Spruce street, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 7, to insert:

For grading Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth streets, Langdon, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 9, to insert:

For grading and regulating Twelfth street extended from Florida avenue to Mount Olivet road, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 12, to insert:

For grading and graveling Pierce and High streets, Anacostia, from Jefferson to Maple, provided the land necessary to unite these streets be first dedicated, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 15, to insert:

For grading and graveling Pennsylvania avenue extended and Branch avenue, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 17, to insert:

For grading and regulating Emporia and Frankfort streets, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. After line 19, page 21, I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THURSTON in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

For grading and graveling Kenesaw avenue and Park road, $5,000: Provided, That Park road, or Park highway, between Kenesaw avenue and Klingle road be dedicated to the District of Columbia for conformity with the adopted and recorded plans of highway extensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 19, to insert:

For paying court expenses and fees of commissioners and paying for ground taken and damages to property to open and extend Thirty-seventh street, between Back street and Tennallytown road, at or near Schneider lane, as per plat and proceedings already had in the supreme court of the District of Columbia and award of court commissioners made therein, $9,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 6, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-five thousand" and insert "one hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

For grading and regulating Yale, Bismark, Princeton, Harvard, and Columbia streets, between Seventh and Fourteenth streets, $15,000; in all, $115,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 10, to increase the appropriation for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, etc., from $146,000 to $165,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 18, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the parking commission from $17,000 to $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "seventy-five"; in line 3, before the words "per annum," to strike out "$16" and insert "$30.50"; in line 5, after the word "act," to strike out:

Provided, That all of said lamps shall burn every night, on the average, from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise.

And insert "and said lamps shall burn not less than 3,000 hours per annum"; in line 9, after the word "Provided," to strike out "further"; and in line 15, after the word "hour," to strike out:

Provided further, That the entire service of gas lighting authorized under this appropriation shall be let, after due advertisement, to the lowest responsible bidder therefor: Provided further, That no contract shall be made for gas lighting at a price exceeding the rates hereinbefore specified.

So as to make the clause read:

Lighting: For illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning public lamps on avenues, streets, roads, and alleys; purchasing and expense of erecting new lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures; moving lamp-posts, painting lamp-posts and lanterns; replacing and repairing lamp-posts and lanterns damaged or unfit for service; for storage and cartage of material, $175,000: Provided, That no more than $30.50 per annum for each street lamp shall be paid for gas or oil, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, painting, and cleaning, under any expenditure provided for in this act, and said lamps shall burn not less than three thousand hours per annum: Provided, That before any expenditures are made from the appropriations herein provided for the contracting gas companies shall equip each street lamp with a self-regulating burner and tip, so combined and adjusted as to secure, under all ordinary variations of pressure and density, a consumption of 6 cubic feet of gas per hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 20, to strike out:

That the Washington Gas Light Company and all other gaslight companies doing business in the District of Columbia are authorized to charge and collect, after the passage of this act, for illuminating gas furnished to and paid for by the Government of the United States and other consumers in the District of Columbia at the rate of not exceeding 75 cents per thousand cubic feet, except that gas consumed in public lamps for lighting streets, highways, and public grounds in the District of Columbia shall be paid for at such rates as Congress may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That if consumers other than the Government shall not pay monthly any gas bill within ten days after the same shall have been presented, said company may charge and collect from said consumer so failing to pay said bill as aforesaid $1 per thousand cubic feet for the gas furnished to said consumer during said month.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] if an amendment is to be offered at this point by the committee. I understood that the result of yesterday's vote was to be incorporated in the pending bill.

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not suppose that, being a House bill, anything is to be done as to this bill by the committee. I do not know what individual Senators may choose to do.

Mr. KYLE. I understood the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to say so. That is all.

Mr. FAULKNER. I stated that it was necessary, before the consideration of this bill was begun, to pass upon the question as embodied in the House bill, which was then before the Senate. That bill is now in conference, and we hope to have it become a law in a very short time. But that bill does not affect the question of street lighting. That is always controlled annually by the appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that. I refer to the latter part of the amendment on page 23.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course we expect that the subject will be controlled by the bill which has passed both Houses as to private consumers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 24, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-three thousand six hundred" and insert "fifty-nine thousand one hundred and seventy"; in line 18, before the word "cents," to strike out "28" and insert "38"; in line 19, after the word "burning," insert "on an average"; and on page 25, line 2, after the word "Washington," to strike out:

Provided further, That the entire service of electric lighting authorized under this appropriation shall be let, after due advertisement, to the lowest responsible bidder therefor: Provided further, That no contract shall be made for electric arc lighting at a price exceeding the rate hereinbefore specified.

So as to make the clause read:
